WE KNOW IN PART.

BY R. F. LARRABEE.

We know in part, if God is true
Which only looks and smiles on us,
Then vanishes within the blue
Of vaulted depths mysterious,

Whether [illegible] or [illegible]
So plagues us here, at every turn
We have it, see, and then we fall
To doubting and to deep concern.

My soul and I grow coldly strange
When most we feel the lonely stress
Of life upon us as we range
This thorny, hilly wilderness.

I hear my soul's voice faint up far
Among the stars that fleck the sky
While groping blind, from star to star,
We know in part, my soul and I.

We find science and are pleased
With names that mock the heavy heart;
But under truth cannot be seized
By knowledge we know in part.

The germs and cells wherein they say
That life was cradled into soul,
Are cryptic from which love crept away,
The truth that made our knowledge whole.

We cannot grasp a single law,
And hold it till we feel the close—
The thread we seek in its coils we draw
The pulsed pulse from which it grew.

All matter gravitates by rote,
The learned say, but stars cry out:
There is no music in a note
We sing, but when our God's about.

We know in part, the other part
Is hid to God and only shines,
In points of glory, on the heart
That carries toward Him in love's straight lines.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

BOSTON, June 21.—A meeting was held in Tremont Temple to-night to express sympathy with the colored exodus from the South-Speeches were made by Wendell Phillips and others, and a committee appointed to solicit funds in aid of the cause.

John L. Taylor, Professor of Theology, and Rev. Austin Phelps, Professor of Sacred Rhetoric, in the Andover Theological Seminary, resigned to-day on account of ill health. Both have been more than thirty years connected with that institution. Prof. Taylor made a parting gift of $20,000 each to the seminary.

CHICAGO, June 21.—Rev. Henry Channcey, D.D., was consecrated with impressive ceremonies in Trinity Church, this city, to-day, as the first Episcopal Bishop of Mexico. Fifty clergymen, including seven bishops, marched in procession down the aisle to the altar to take part in the consecration.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 25.—The Confederate Survivors' Association will have a grand celebration on the 4th of July. Rev. Father Ryan will deliver the opening address. Jeff. Davis is expected to be present. Many Northern soldiers have been invited. Gen. Hancock being among the number. Extra trains will be run into the city on all railroads.

NEW YORK, June 25.—The new Guion steamer Arizona left here at 5:35 P. M. on Tuesday, June 17, and arrived at Queenstown at 7:20 this morning, in 7 days 9 hours and 21 minutes, which is the fastest time ever made.

WASHINGTON, June 27.—The postoffice department proposes at an early date to extend the fast mail service in the South over two routes. One route will be from Jacksonville, Fla., by the way of Charleston and Savannah, and the other from here to New Orleans by the way of Richmond, Atlanta, Montgomery and Mobile. It was expected that these routes would be put in operation by the 1st of July next, but the postal cars necessary for the service which are in course of construction, will not be finished by that date. The work will not, however, be delayed much after that. Schedules, number and trips weekly, etc., have not yet been determined.

CHARLESTON, June 27.—Ex-Lieutenant Governor R. H. Anderson, of the confederate army, died in Beaufort, S. C., yesterday of apoplexy, aged 62.

SALT LAKE CITY, June 27.—The Anti-Polygamy Society have prepared a letter to President Hayes, exposing some misstatements in Delegate Cannon's letter to the latter, and asking that Reynolds, convicted of bigamy, and now serving a term in the penitentiary at Lincoln, Nebraska, be transferred to the Utah penitentiary.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—The president today sent to the senate the following nominations as members of the Mississippi river commission: Benj. Harrison, of Indiana, James B. Eads, civil engineer, Missouri, B. Morgan Harrod, civil engineer, Louisiana, Lieut. Col. H. A. Gilmore, Major C. B. Comstock and Major C. R. Suter, from the engineer corps of the army, and Henry Mitchell, from the coast and geodetic survey.

NEW YORK, June 29.—A systematic attempt was made by the police to enforce the excise laws with regard the sale of liquor on Sunday. Forty or fifty arrests were made and less liquor sold than on any Sunday in years past.

WASHINGTON, June 29.—A circular has been issued by the state department, announcing that Dr. C. C. Cox, of Washington, has been appointed secretary of the United States commission to the coming Australian exposition at Sydney and Melbourne, and that persons desiring to exhibit can obtain from him all necessary information and instructions. He will leave for Sydney about July 20.

WASHINGTON, June 30.—The president has approved the bill making appropriations for judicial expenses, but vetoed the bill making appropriations for the pay and fees of United States marshals and their general deputies.

The president says the bill contains restrictions similar to those in that heretofore vetoed, and concludes his message as follows:

In order to secure its enactment, the same measure is again presented for my approval, coupled in the bill before me, with appropriations for the support of marshals and their deputies during the next fiscal year.

The object manifestly is to place before the executive this alternate—either to allow the necessary functions of the public service to be crippled, or suspended for want of appropriations required to keep them in operation, or to approve legislation which, in official communications to congress, has declared would be a violation of his constitutional duty.

Thus in this bill the principle is clearly embodied that virtue of the provisions of the constitution, which requires that "all bills for raising a venue shall originate in the house of representatives," that a bare majority of the house has a right to withhold appropriations for support of the government unless the executive consents to approve any legislation which may be attached to the appropriation bills.

I respectfully refer to the communications on this subject which I have sent to congress during the present session, for a statement of the grounds of my conclusions and desire merely to repeat that in my judgment to establish the principle of this bill is to make a radical, dangerous and unconstitutional change in the character of our institutions.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, June 24.—The Press Association says: President Grevy has officially sent a message of condolence to ex-Empress Eugenie, on behalf of the French Republic.

LONDON, June 25.—The Times Vienna correspondent reports there is fear in Constantinople that if the Sultan consents to the abdication of the Khedive he will no longer have any control over Egypt.

A dispatch from Cape Town, Africa, states that the body of the late Prince Imperial will arrive in London about the 28th of July.

LONDON, June 27.—The will of the late prince imperial was opened yesterday. It contained no political allusions this whole property is left to his mother.

A dispatch to the Post from Berlin, says: Russia is actively trying to effect an understanding with the Sultan for the expatriation of obnoxious clauses in the treaty of Berlin. According to the National Zeitung Russia is endeavoring to form a coalition with Turkey and France against England, Austria and Germany.

The Standard's dispatch from Cairo states that Tewfik Pashar was proclaimed viceroy of Egypt with a salute of 101 guns. The Russian consul general has been ordered to support the other consuls in the position they have taken. It is reported that the late khedive will receive a pension of £50,000 per annum.

A Protestant schoolhouse in the parish of Mayons, Connaught, county of Galway, Ireland, has been sacked by a gang of thirty persons, who came from a distance. Bibles were thrown into the sea. This is a revival of a series of disturbances which it was thought had been quieted after creating some alarm in that district some weeks ago.

In connection with the sacking of a schoolhouse at Mayons, Ireland, the Rt. Hon. Joseph Lowther, chief secretary for Ireland, announced in the house of commons to-day that the government was fully resolved to preserve order irrespective of religion of persons engaged in the outrage in the district referred to.

LONDON, June 28.—The Times Liverpool correspondent states that the actual business in cotton during the last week proves to be very much less than the aggregate of the daily estimates, thus showing that the depression of trade at Manchester and in the spinning districts is real and is influencing consumers to an unexpected degree.

LONDON, June 30.—It seems certain that the last peace overtures of Cetewayo are bonafide. The Times' special from Gen. Woods' camp says: Messengers of Cetewayo have been recognized as important persons by the native spies. While lahavering with Lord Chelmsford a report arrived that the Zulu army were advancing on Woods' camp. The messengers readily agreed to be shot if the report was true. When it was ascertained that the report was unfounded, they were released.

Chelmsford, after stating the terms of peace declared before treating further, that the two cantons captured at Isandhlwana, and some hostages must be given up. The messengers asked Chelmsford to halt pending the answer, but he refused.

A dispatch to the Daily News from Utrecht, under date June 5th says: Yesterday a body of Zulus raided a farm within a mile of Luneburg. A small detachment sallied out from Luneburg, and finding the Zulus in a strong hill position, retired.

FIELD NOTES.

MISSISSIPPI.

PELAHATCHIE, Miss., June 18. The eighth wonder of the world occurred in the bounds of my mission (Prairie) on the first Monday in April. An old blind Methodist preacher, supposed to be sixty or seventy years old, went to an old blind Baptist preacher, I suppose seventy-five or eighty years old, and he (the Methodist) demanded baptism by immersion at his (Baptist) hands, and they went to the creek and he baptized him without joining the Baptist Church. I am satisfied he had never read Bollins' Bible view of baptism. Yours respectfully,

A. B. MILLER.

WAYNESBORO, Miss., June 23.—We have just closed a pleasant meeting at State Line. Nine were added to the church and five professed conversion, and the church much refreshed. Rev. J. W. Adkisson assisted several days, and Rev. J. T. Heard two days. Our Sabbath-school at Waynesboro has good grounds of rejoicing, in the fact that they have been presented with an excellent library, purchased at the Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn., at a net cost of over $30, by our liberal brethren, Messrs. Turner & Taylor, merchants of Waynesboro. Preparations for the camp-meeting at Smith's Mills are going forward. We expect a good camp-meeting, and invite tenters to come and select places for permanent tents at these fine mineral springs. We invite ministers to come from everywhere, in reach.

Yours, WM. B. HINES.

ENTERPRISE, Miss., June 23.—We have been greatly blessed with times of refreshing from the Lord. Some of the best prayer-meetings I have ever attended. These meetings were held at eight o'clock A. M., and preaching at eight P. M. The meeting lasted through two weeks. We were greatly favored with the ministrations of Bro. Foust, of the Alabama Conference. The meeting began without previous appointment, and continued from day to day as the items indicated. Accessions during the two weeks, fifteen. J. T. HEARD.

CANTON, Miss., June 23.—Our congregations are improving. Class-meetings being revived, prayer-meetings good, and signs of spiritual growth to be seen in the church. Our Sunday-school numbers about one hundred pupils and teachers. Missionary Society organized recently, and doing well. Crops in the surrounding county good—wanting some rain. Health good. Rev. C. G. Andrews will send you an obituary of Rev. H. H. Montgomery. R. B. NONSWORTHY.

DEKALB CIRCUIT, Miss., June 23.—Just closed a meeting of eight days in this town; received four into the church; a few conversions; backsliders reclaimed; Sunday-schools prospering; about four hundred members on the circuit; new parsonage being built; country densely populated; ten appointments; congregation large; Presbyterian and Episcopal Churches vacant; Baptist not prosperous; Methodist not much better, yet prospects now are good; crops up to date, are very promising; good land, health and water, yet the people are poor in debt; money scarce.

A. H. NICHOLSON.

ALABAMA.

LITTLESVILLE, Ala., June 14.—This place is on Sand Mountain, a good agricultural and horticultural section. Present crops good and promising. All fruit killed by frost. The churches are doing little. Our church is weak—so are others. Too much division. We have two Methodist and about half a dozen Baptist Churches. If we could have these forces properly united we would succeed better; but you say, facts, not opinions. J. M. COLEMAN.

LAURINA CIRCUIT, Ala., June 24.—The Laurina circuit is enjoying a spiritual revival here in town. To-day the Lord poured out His Spirit upon the membership and sinners were made to tremble. We are having some glorious times up here. Several conversions and accessions to the church. The members on the entire circuit are alive to God.

R. D. EVANS, P. C.

STEWARTSVILLE, Ala., June 25.—We have eight appointments on the Hatchet Creek mission. Our third Quarterly Conference convened June 14-15; well attended. Bro. J. B. Severson, our beloved presiding elder, preached with power, as he always does. We have finished one church this year, and contemplate building more. We propose building a parsonage on the work this year. The outlook for a revival on the work this year is good. We have but two local preachers on the work, and one of them is worn-out. Pray the Lord to send more laborers into the vineyard.

J. H. MCCAIN, P. C.

CARROLLTON, Ala., June 26.—Our third quarterly Conference for Carrollton circuit was an occasion of much interest. The presiding elder was with us, and did good work. The interest of the work is advancing. We built a neat, comfortable parsonage since Conference; a small balance is due on it. Finances good; will meet all the collections ordered by Conference, and the preacher's family will be cared for handsomely. Crops are promising; had a fine rain. God be praised. We are working and praying for a revival. Yours in Christ.

W. M. P. KIPPEY.

LOUISIANA.

SUGAR TOWN CIRCUIT, La., June 18.—We are now in the midst of the most powerful revival it has ever been my privilege to attend. In the last four weeks we have taken forty-nine into the church, twenty-four of whom were Sunday-school scholars. Some of the oldest and hardest of sinners have at last yielded to the power of the gospel, and still the good work goes on. Conversions have been many, and many have been "made perfect in love." There are more family altars, and more self-denying, holy living people now on this circuit than was ever known before. The Holy Ghost is present in something power at all the appointments. From present indications the stewards will be able to meet every demand upon them. J. W. HEARD.

PINEVILLE, La., June 23.—Peace and harmony prevails on this work. Material interest of the church is looking up. Our new parsonage at Pineville is completed, except painting and papering. Received a handsome donation from Capt. John Kouns, of this city, in the way of window sash. We are going on here without any money, comparatively speaking, and yet we are only due on our new parsonage, about $80, which we hope to settle soon.

Yours truly, J. L. P. SHEPPARD.

GREENSBURG, La., June 24.—The Sunday-school work has advanced wonderfully on the St. Helena circuit. When we moved to the work, two and a half years ago, we found no Sunday-schools. Now there are six, with one hundred and ninety scholars. Use our own publications. Take seventy quarterlies. "New Life" is splendid. Have class-meetings at two churches. Looking and praying for a glorious revival. Spent last week at the examination of Norwood Collegiate Institute. No failures in classes. Prof. S. S. Norwood has done his work well. Crops good, but need rain. We wish all of the preachers and laymen of the district to come to the District Conference.

J. S. PARKER, P. C.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SAN JOSE, Cal., June 10.—Rev. W. B. Richardson, of Stockton, a late minister to the Pacific Annual Conference, from the South Carolina Conference, was with us and preached five sermons in our church, greatly to the edification of our members and others. Bro. Richardson is a graduate of the Vanderbilt University. He took at the closing exercises last year the founder's medal, which was awarded for oratory, style and profound thought. It is the opinion of our people that Bro. Richardson possesses all this in a remarkable degree for a young man, and the best of all is that with all these qualities he is humble and unassuming.

W. SMITH.

STEPHENVILLE, Texas, June 24.—The citizens of this town and county had a rousing railroad meeting to-day. Resolutions were adopted to offer inducements to extend the Waco Tap to this place, and also to build a narrow gauge from Fort Worth or Dallas to this town. Some think this is destined to be a railroad center at no very distant day.

The cotton crop of this section promises a large yield, but the old corn will be on short account of the recent dry weather. The town is rapidly improving.

Yours, S. FRANK.

The Children's Mexican Book and Tract Society of the M. E. Church, South.

The object of this society is to publish religious papers, tracts, books, etc., for the Mexican mission, without expense to the general Board of Missions. These publications are very important to our work, and increase greatly our success; but we have heretofore been almost destitute of them. So great has the demand become that we have already commenced to publish a religious paper, and have just issued our manual and first catechism for the Sunday-schools, which will be of great use to us as a forerunner of the church in new fields, as well as auxiliary in the old. We believe the children of the church if given the opportunity, [illegible] hereafter, with confidence we appeal to them to [illegible] and to furnish us help as individuals, or families or Sunday-schools, by becoming members of the [illegible] Society. [illegible] They can do without hearing with other departments of our work.

The giving of any sum of money annually to the society makes the giver a member.

Each person, or several persons together, giving the sum of [illegible] will receive a beautiful oil picture, made in natural colors by the Mexican Indians.

Those giving the sum of [illegible] will receive a set of lithographic pictures, eleven inches by fifteen inches in size, representing some place of interest in Mexico.

The person or persons together, the family or Sunday-school giving the most money to this society by August 1, 1879, will receive a large, handsome picture in colors, twenty-four by thirty-six inches, presenting a beautiful view of the famous valley of Mexico, with its cities, towns, lakes and rivers, its farms and forests, and other smaller views, all surrounded by lofty plains and peaks of mountains, among these peaks being the snow-capped Popocatepetl and Ixtaccihuatl. This picture will be very attractive hung on the walls of any home or Sunday-school room. The treasurer of this society is Mrs. Linus Parker, New Orleans, La., to whom the money must be sent, and who will forward the premiums to any part of the country.

Doctrines and Polity of the Methodist Church.

AN IMPORTANT SUGGESTION.

Rev. W. H. Watkins, D. D., pastor of the Methodist Church, South, at Jackson, Miss., is delivering, on his weekly prayer-meeting occasions, a series of lectures on the doctrines and polity of the Methodist Church. These lectures are listened to with marked attention and manifest interest, thus evincing the popularity of their style and the importance of the subject. We have long felt the necessity of such a course of instruction. Our people, as a church, need it, and we hazard nothing in saying all of they should demand it of those capable and qualified to impart such instruction. The members of the Methodist Church are very often proselyted, especially the children, and forever lost to it, simply and almost solely because they are not taught—because they do not understand what are the doctrines of their own church. They are ignorant of what they profess to believe. When the doctrines of the Methodist Church are assailed (as they so often are) by other denominations her members (a great many of them) are so completely at a loss to make proper defense, owing to a want of knowledge of what they are, that they surrender at once, and fall an easy prey to the false reasoning of others. Were the members of the Methodist Church properly instructed and trained, especially the younger ones, there would be but little danger of their being led off into other churches, and forever lost to our own.

But the necessity of such instruction is too apparent to need further argument in this hastily-written communication. I would therefore, suggest (and I believe that it will meet with a hearty response in the bosom of every true lover of Methodism) that these lectures be embodied in permanent form and added to our standard church literature. If gotten up in proper style, and introduced into our Sabbath-schools, and distributed among our members, their value to the church would be boundless, and their influence and power for good incalculable.

Dr. Watkins is one of the oldest members of the Mississippi Conference; is a ripe scholar and a man of mark and reputation, whose rank is with those who stand in the topmost round of the ladder, and whose qualifications eminently fit him for the performance of this work. He is just the man to do it, and should be urged to commence at once, and thus give to the Methodist Church a power the extent of which can only be fully realized and estimated by eternity alone.

Closing Exercises of Whitworth College.

MR. EDITOR: We have had the pleasure of attending the closing exercises of this splendid institute. The examinations, both written and oral, were well calculated to test the scholarship of the pupils.

Thursday evening, June 19, there was an evil edition by the pupils of the preparatory department, which much entertained the large audience. The Calliopian Society held their anniversary Friday evening. Many creditable essays were read, much music dispensed. The address was delivered by Rev. B. Caradine. His subject: Woman. He took the position that as a factor she is the most uncertain, and yet the most certain of all creatures; her uncertainty amounting to a mystery, her certainty to a revelation. The address was spicy, and gave general satisfaction. Saturday evening, essays by seniors. Some serious, sober, some sparkling with wit; sweet music interspersed. Sunday, June 22, at eleven A. M., the commencement sermon was preached in the chapel by Rev. W. H. Leith. It was an interesting effort of the very best order to avoid being. In the evening Bro. Caradine preached a good sermon in the church. Monday, at eleven A. M., alumni reunion. Miss Edwina Barry presided with grace and dignity. Miss Maggie W. Atkins read a beautiful piece. Miss Clara E. Barber read a very neat essay. Miss Lula Radford rendered one of the best essays we ever heard on such an occasion. Her pen ought not to remain idle. Dr. Watkins delivered the address to the graduating class. Monday evening we had the grand concert, opening with sixty-two hands filling in rapid succession on the keys of pianos. Now twenty soft and sweet female voices mingling accordant melody, followed by [illegible] and often pianos chiming in with the strains from three violins. Prof. Eckart and the misses Hanks, Miss Sallie Johnson and Miss Clara E. Barber, standing at the head of the group of pianists, rendering a musical wand, lifted the audience all with a delightful harmonies. The closing piece of the evening was a musical charade in costume. Tuesday was commencement day. Salutatory by Miss Mattie B. Hawkins. Valedictory by Miss Florence L. Norris. Address by the Hon. Stephen M. White, of the South (Hon. L. Q. C. Lamar). It was fine. The degree of M. E. L. was conferred on the thirteen graduates of this year, and the degree of A. M. on Miss Florence L. Norris, who has finished a course in the classics. Also the degree of M. E. L. on Miss Mary A. Clack, a former graduate of Whitworth.

We call the attention of the public to the high grade of this school, and also to the normal department. For particulars see catalogue.

We now call special attention to the very appropriately donation of Pipe Organ to this our church, and the action of the Board of Trustees in reference thereto.

It became necessary for the best interests of the college that additional and permanent buildings should be erected. This Dr. Johnson made known to the Board of Trustees at their annual meeting last year. He received some encouragement from liberal friends of the college, but hardly enough to justify him in beginning operations. He, to strengthen his credit, began the work upon an eligible site on his own private grounds. He soon erected a spacious brick building, at a cost considerably above $20,000. At the annual meeting of the Board of Trustees, this year, he conveyed to them this property, unencumbered and without reserve, to be held in trust by them for the use of our church for educational purposes. He also gave added to the trustees of the lot on which his beautiful brown residence stands, reserving the use of it as long as he or his wife lives, and until his youngest child is twenty-one years old. He demands back to them the twenty years' lease given in 1870, so that the Board of Trustees of church will have the college more completely under their control, and not that he has any intention of leaving the college, for he has not. He is going forward in repairing and arranging just as he did before. Two piticoes are to be built immediately to the new dormitory. Also the walk from it to the old building rooted over. The property donated is nearly $20,000 in value. Dr. Johnson's soul seems enthused about this institution. His labors have an eye to its good. His gains sink in its material interests. What the church appointed him to do, he is doing with all his might.

The Board of Trustees accepts his liberal offer, and, though the donation is made absolute and without reserve, yet considering the large outlay by President Johnson, the board recommends and earnestly requests that at least $7,000 be reimbursed to him, by the church and friends of letters, that he may be entitled to carry forward the interests of the college as he has hitherto done. W. M. Phelps pledged $2,000 of this amount. What a blessing to communities are the well-endowed schools! We understand that about $5,000 more has been subscribed. It is hoped that the friends of education will promptly respond and make up the remainder.

The college is now [illegible] in front rank and on high ground, commends itself to all. A strong effort will be elected for another year. Let there be a grand rally to its support by the friends of liberal learning in these regions.

Vice President Board of Visitors.

Given to Hospitality.

BY REV. DR. DEEMS.

Among the qualifications of a pastor, which St. Paul sets forth in his first Epistle to Timothy, is that he must be "given to hospitality."

Hospitality, then, is a virtue; one of the marked virtues. Every christian should be hospitable; that is, to the extent of his means, as far as possible without breaking in his own home. We should take from strangers that sense of loneliness which comes with homelessness. The Christian man must make his own to be a temporary home for as many others as practicable. That which is a commendable virtue in one of the flock must not be omitted from the catalogue of the pastor's excellencies. The difference between him and his flock is this, that if he should be stingy, if he should turn his back upon strangers, if he should not freely share shelter and food with the strangers about him, it would be noticed, criticised, and used to the disparagement of the religion which he both professes and preaches.

Because this is known there are not a few people who suppose their pastors, who come in and settle on him, bag and baggage. This he must endure. This is what the Jews for his position. For this often is the symptom of intelligent pride.

To look at it in a broad and Christian light, the pastor's house ought to be distinguished for its hospitality, and he ought not to submit to that feeling of delicacy that ought to accept it gratefully, as one of his great opportunities, AMID [illegible] of the public he may have access for Christ to the hearts of men whom otherwise he could never reach. As a personal friend he stands in relation to one who has never broken bread. And then, behold that fact, the care the dispositions and the manners precognize for hospitality, which disposition and manners are perfected by the pastor applying more and more to his work.

We should not have expected of the [illegible] this feeling, if it is now to be [illegible] that there is not a fee to which attention must be paid. If the pastor be given to hospitality he soon finds that his study must be arranged and refurnished, and made more cheerful, and the visitor has notice. Some more bread [illegible] must be had in the dining-room, and there will be an increase in the butcher's bill. [illegible] because he can't draw himself to a [illegible] before the guest two simple dishes with which he himself would be content. And therefore must come an additional servant, unless the pastor is willing to see his wife worked to death, but he cannot endure that, for [illegible] the ministry of angels the manly pastor cannot heartlessly be given to hospitality.

And so it comes to be the duty of every [illegible] of the pastor is not to [illegible] the church's [illegible] from the pulpit, [illegible] to be given to hospitality. How can he obey that admonition if his income does not more than meet his own absolute necessities? Let every church see that the [illegible] becomes a burden to the pastor. As soon as it is known that guests are at the rectory, the parsonage or the manse, or whatever you call the pastoral residence, let all sorts of good things be poured in—meats and sweetmeats, breads and butters, and whatsoever will give to the good wife of the good pastor a wholesome and honorable pride of her table and of her husband's church. In the allowance of the year calculate for an extra servant for hospitality. Every now and then, without prying into the private matters of the pastor's family, strive to ascertain definitely what the guest chamber needs to increase its capability of giving comfort.

You will be paid back from the pulpit. Your pastor will be so cheery and happy and proud that his sermons will be more unctious, his entire feel comfortable. He cannot preach with which elasticity if he knows that his wife is nearly broken-hearted, wondering what she can get for the day's dinner of the four or five people who are going up with them from church. Do you relieve your pastor of that. Make him glad to have people come just as children sometimes are glad to have guests in the house, because that makes more good things to eat. Do not be afraid that you shall not get your reward. The Lord will keep an account of every cake, every duck, every goose, every chicken, every turkey, every ham. There will be a general adjustment hereafter, and every man shall be remembered for what he did, and every woman shall have her suitable reward.

Whenever you hear that passage read from the Epistle to Timothy, that a Bishop must be given to hospitality, ask yourself, before the Lord, whether, as much as in you lies, you contribute to enable your minister cheerfully and gladly to obey this command.

HEAVEN.

I stood within the great cathedral door,
And heard a voice
That rose in song, but ceased almost before
One could rejoice.

I listened as the many singers caught
The melody,
And the grand anthem, as by echo wrought,
Swelled full and free.

And so I thought that sweet lives that but lent
Their joy to earth—
That work all in unmurmured days was spent,
And all life's worth.

'Twas only that short strain we needed here,
While up above
The seraph song is ever since more clear,
And rich in love.

One Master guides the harmony of life
In earth and heaven;
No pause unheeded falls, no note too brief
Is ever given.

Here but the single notes of the glorious song
Our ears can trace;
There the full Lyres, pure and deep and strong,
In endless praise.

Fugitive Thoughts.

Why put on paper what so soon passes away? Wait, gentle reader, and read, before condemning what is written. But what shall I write, and how? My theme, how select amid the infinite variety discussed and rediscussed, by sages, philosophers, historians, scholars, poets and divines, ancient and modern, wise and foolish, old and young, in books and quarterlies, weeklies, tri-weeklies and dailies! Surely all has been said or written that is worth reading. So Solomon thought near three thousand years ago, but the succeeding ages have added to the accumulated store, and still the public appetite clamors for more.

A newspaper article need not be methodical, poetical, philosophical, theological, political, personal, historical, grammatical or rhetorical (please excuse further description, my list of adjectives is exhausted.) Indeed, I have only described negatively. If I were to hazard an opinion as to the most essential quality, in the estimation of editors, I would write "brevity." How absurd to preach brevity to writers that are big with thought that must find utterance! What! clip the wings of the soaring eagle just as he is about to rise to empyrean heights, and have him come floundering down to earth by your 'briefs.' How cruel, and yet it may be necessary. But is there not another quality almost, if not quite as essential, as "brevity?" Yes, it must be light—that is, not heavy. Who will read these times in a newspaper a labored argument? What common reader would not prefer to take the conclusion of the argument upon authority? If you would be read have an eye to brevity and lightness—by the way, the present article will pass muster, it is hoped, in so far as the latter quality is concerned. Fiction will please, perhaps, better than truth, although the latter is said to be stranger than the former. It is well to remember, if you are a candidate for public favor, that light thoughts must have light apparel. Don't smother a weak thought with a wilderness of words however, as for that matter, if your words are light, airy, easily pronounced, and run smoothly, the more you tug on to a weak, eviscerated thought, the better it will serve to hide its poverty. It is the apparel the masses admire, not the body it adorns. The number of words will not appall the average reader, provided they have been discreetly chosen. And, let me whisper in your ear before you take up your pen, be careful in selecting a subject. Select one that can be briefly discussed and lightly dismissed, one that requires thought neither in writer nor reader, and then consult your "Webster Unabridged," and pile on the adjectives, adverbs and phrases, and throw in a good many interjections, use discreetly the dash and parenthesis, until you become bewildered, and forget what you have said, or what you wished to say, and then quit. My young friend, if you wish to get the ear of that fickle dame, "the public," through the columns of a weekly newspaper, don't forget what I have said. Are you a theologian, and fond of dilating upon repentance, faith, justification and regeneration? Be careful and to select a subject of this kind, nine out of ten readers will skip an ominous article with such a heading. But it may be you are a metaphysician, and would like to discuss the freedom of the will—that bone of contention over which philosophers have squabbled and wrangled, and fought, and died fighting, though without bleeding, for the most part, and yet the controversy still rages. No! abjure metaphysics, or else you need not expect to be heard. A religious newspaper eschews politics; you must, therefore, not venture into the prohibited region.

You may be political, but must not write politics. You may be religious, but do not write too religiously. Be sure particularly to refrain from doctrinal statements. These are old, trite, threadbare themes, that will not command a hearing in these days of refinement and progress. Moralize a little, if that is your vein, but spare as much as possible sins in high life. Don't grow indignant against fashionable vices and follies; you would thereby betray your vulgarity. If you must, for conscience sake speak against these things, do it softly, sweetly, smoothly, so that it will puzzle the offenders to tell whether they are reproved or commended. Well, now, gentle reader, if you have followed me as I have penned these fugitive thoughts, there may be comfort in the thought that the end is reached at last; not that others equally good or bad are not waiting to be chained to this sheet of foolscap, but I must not violate my own canon—brevity—lest the editor should drop this into his waste-basket, where thousands of others find a grave.

Recording Stewards.

MR EDITOR: There has been some difference of opinion as to whose duty it is to record the minutes of a Quarterly Conference in the Quarterly Conference Journal, when they have been approved by the Conference, and signed by the presiding elder and the secretary; whether it is the duty of the secretary of that Conference, or of the recording steward of the circuit.

On this subject Bishop Baker has these words in his treatise on the Discipline, chapter 7, section 2, paragraph 5, page 201: "Since the year 1820 one of the stewards has been specifically appointed a recording steward. This office, however, does not constitute him, ex officio, the secretary of the Quarterly Conference. His duties require him to record the doings of the Quarterly Conference."

And Bishop McTyeire, in his Manual of the Discipline, fifth edition, chapter 2, section 10, paragraph 6, page 62, says: "The recording steward is not ex-officio the secretary of the Quarterly Conference. He is the custodian of its papers and records, and should copy into a book the minutes of the Quarterly Conference when they have been approved."

From the foregoing it is clear that in the opinion of these expositors of church law it is the duty of recording stewards to record the minutes of Quarterly Conferences.

In making up their opinion on this subject they were, no doubt, influenced more by the uniform practice of the church in the premises for the last sixty-nine years than by a literal following of the wording of the law as it now stands in our Disciplines.

In quoting from the above authors I have not copied the whole of either paragraph named, but only so much as was pertinent to the subject in hand. Respectfully,

R. E. ALEXANDER.

A Motion for Better Collections

MR EDITOR: In your issue of the twenty second of May appears a very suggestive and timely article from the pen of Bro. T. L. Mellen. Not only the preachers, but the lay brethren, would do well to consider it, and those of them who have the minutes of the last session of our Conference will find many similar reports. It will also be seen that those works that make the poorest reports to Conference collections also make proportionately meager collections for the pastors. Walnut Grove, with its 110 members, paid the pastor $280. East Baton Rouge, with its 515 members, reports for pastor $251 50, but fifty cents per member. From this it will appear that some others are also remiss in duty as well as preachers. My observation has been that where you find a people so regardless of the preacher's wants, you find a people violently prejudiced against giving money to any cause. In other words, a free gospel at home begets the same spirit toward all other church causes. While it may to some extent be the fault of the pastors, I do not think it universal nor applicable generally. I have preached a "special sermon," explained the object, appointed the day, and then, from a congregation of 75 or 100 people, received the whole amount of $3. Pastors can't run their hands into men's pockets. So, after an explanation, exhortation, etc., on the subject, what can the pastor do with such a people? Why, almost nothing. They object to foreign mission, because "we have heathens at home." They object to domestic missions, because others "are as able as we." They shy at the worn-out preachers and widows: "let them work as I do;" and thus they elude you at every point. We are told that they need education, so they do. But Solomon says such "shy goods are wiser in their own conceits than seven men that can give a reason;" so what can one man do toward educating such a people when he sees them only once a month. No, Mr. Editor, the pastor needs the assistance of his educated members in these as in all other matters. There is one appointment in the Mississippi Conference, so I am told, where the stewards take all the collections in their hands, and do not allow the pastor to have any worry with them; and the result is: Everything paid in full.

Bro. Mellen cites us to the collection from Natchez station for Conference claimants nearly thirty-seven cents per member—I reckon the best in the Conference. By reference to the minutes it will be seen that the Woodville station paid $25 50 for that cause—fifty cents more than assessed. It will also be seen that for the three causes we collected $119 35, which gives an average of $1 45 per member. I do not think there is another charge in the Conferences which will show as great an average. My means of collecting was this: I sent a circular containing the amounts assessed for causes to each member, requesting a return of the circular, with any amount which the person might give, and the cause for which given. I am confident that many gave as much for each cause as they would have given for all together, had we depended on the usual way of collecting by hat or basket, and nearly every one returned the circular. If any brother can utilize this method, I grant him liberty. Brethren, let's report better next Conference. Yours, etc.,

Christ Our Refuge and Strength.

"When I am happy with Him December 's as pleasant as May," when alone meditating on the scenes and changes of this life, how cheering it is to have some kind friend drive away those dark clouds with a word of cheer! To encourage you in Life's great battle, or to encase you again in the armor that had fallen off in the last fight you had, where you fought so nobly, and had been so signally defeated. The sharpness of the enemy's blade you have felt again, and, wounded and faint, you come to the conclusion that the path through life is no flowery one.

The advice and counsel of friends are good and valuable, but their wisdom is limited. Your dear ones fail to give the aid required. They cannot fight so powerful an enemy. They yearn to throw some impenetrable shield over you that would protect you from his sting. But their yearnings are in vain. He marches on, and is soon at your side.

The sad wail of loved ones soften Him not. Your pleading cannot stay the blow He is about to make. A few gasps, a shudder, and it is ended. He leaves a conqueror. He has taken the ruddy glow from your cheeks, the brightness from your eyes, and stilled the busy brain.

Who is He that makes the cold blasts of December as pleasant as the balmy breezes of May? It is Jesus Christ, my friend and adviser, and yours. When a boy I found Him, and ever since He has guarded and guided me with His eye. Dear friends advise me, and I am thankful, but I come to Him, and He points out the way I am to go. Sometimes it is through a wilderness, where the wild beasts howl. But what care I for that? I am happy, for He is with me.

My soul is under the protection of Jesus. He cannot touch that. Death's cold breath, as it fans the blood from my cheek, cannot fan Hope from my soul. Christ has been there these many years. He will cause Death's cold breath to touch me like the balmy zephyrs of heaven. I walk with God. That is the reason December 's as pleasant as May.

WARREN CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I have been thinking mine a hard and laborious circuit, fifty miles long, embracing all of Warren county outside of Vicksburg station, and not a local preacher or exhorter of our church, or of any other denomination, except an Episcopal minister eighty six years of age, in the bounds of my work, and consequently all the preaching, pastoral work, etc., of this large territory, devolving upon me; but when I saw in your Field Notes a communication from Bro. L. Carley, stating that his circuit (Enon) is eighty miles long, with eleven appointments, I came to the conclusion that my work is not heavier than some others, and hence have no right to complain, but feel thankful that I have full scope for all my energies and devotion, and the privilege of doing full work in my Master's vineyard. I am glad to note the fact that Warren circuit is in a better condition at this time than at any time since my connection with it (and this is my third year). There is more consistency among the membership, and a better spiritual tone in the public means of grace, though we have added but few to the church since Conference. We have Sunday-school at all our appointments, and using our own Sunday school literature with thoroughness and increased interest.

Obituaries.

REV. LEWIS PIPKIN was licensed to preach in South Carolina in 1804 and was ordained by Bishop Asbury; his parchments he held untarnished and unspotted as a local preacher in the Methodist Church, sixty one years. He was of a preaching family, having two brothers engaged in the same holy calling—Barnabas, formerly of the Mississippi Conference, who died last year, and Richard, a younger brother at one time, and for several years, a member of the same Conference, who located, about 1854, and settled in Allenton, Wilcox county, Ala., where he died in 1871, and whose remains now lie in the public grave yard at Oak Hill, said county.

My first acquaintance with this beloved brother, and to me a father, was at a camp meeting at Simpson's Camp ground, in Conecuh county, Ala., in the fall of 1851. The next year, 1852, I was appointed by the Alabama Conference (being then in the itinerancy) preacher in charge of that, the Conecuh Circuit in which Brother Pipkin lived, and never shall I forget, or fail to appreciate, the kind, affectionate, and useful counsel, advice and instructions, that I received from this holy man, not only in his public ministrations from the pulpit, but also from his godly example at home, and daily association with the world, and his connection, and attention to his domestic business and labors. He was truly a man of prayer, had regular stated hours for private prayer, and no press of business was ever allowed to hinder him in the observance of these devotions, when the hours of prayer arrived. One instance I will give, as I had it from his own lips. "Brother Ramsey," said he, "I never have been so busy but what I could always find time to pray." "How do you do," said I, "when you are engaged in your crop, plowing or working otherwise?" "Well," said he, "I pitch my horse, let him rest a few minutes, get over the fence, if need be, and ask God's blessing upon me and mine, and I think it pays me, for I can't expect God to bless me unless I ask him." In short, Mr. Editor, I have seen many professing Christians, and ministers, since that time, and now I say I have never seen, or been associated with, any that came as near the Bible type of a holy man, as Lewis Pipkin. Such was the meek and quiet spirit he possessed, that he was called "Moses," known generally as "Uncle Moses." As a preacher he was plain, practical and forcible, and no doubt in the day of final reckoning "many will rise up and call him blessed." I learn that all these traits and virtues of Christian and ministerial character, he retained and exemplified in his life in this country, after he left Alabama, and in death his end was peace. He was happily married. Sister Pipkin who preceded him in "that bourne from whence no traveler returns," was in every respect "a help meet to him;" one who in all the walks of life was prompt, energetic and efficient, and whose Christian life and character reflected light to all with whom she was associated in the family circle, the church and society. Her last whispers were, "Jesus is precious," or words to this effect.

Since I came to this place, on a visit to some of my children, I went out into the country, in Nevada county, to Mount Vernon Church, where I met quite a number of the children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren of this good man and wife, whose remains lie in the grave-yard at this church; and while standing looking at the resting place of these veterans of the cross, my heart filled with emotions, my thoughts flew reverently went back to the olden times, to scenes and reminiscences of my early associations with them, and to the counsel and admonitions which I heard from his lips when I was comparatively a young man, and to the big tears which he often shed while engaged in trying to persuade men to repent; to his hearty shouts when happy indeed, and to the hymn he sang which he at such times would invariably sing, "I love my Jesus, that I do, to glory hallelujah," etc.

At this place I had the pleasure of presiding in a quarterly conference made up of the descendants and of baptizing three children of the fourth generation, his great-grandchildren. From his two sons and two daughters there I obtained the following statistics of his long line of descendants. There are now living of his family in the section of Arkansas, 77, in Texas, as near as could be ascertained, 107, making all in this section, as I have data, footing up to 184. In this estimate is included sons-in-law and daughters-in-law who have married into the family. Brother Pipkin's early labors in the colonies were spent in South Carolina, then in Georgia, where he lived and labored twenty six years, he then moved to Alabama, and spent thirty years, and thence to this State, where he ended his labors, and "ceased to work and live." Says one, Mr. Editor, his labors were confined to a town or two of the Southern States, in all of which he left his impression as a holy man of God," whose praise is in all the churches, and whose precepts was to the wicked a rebuke, often drawing from them the confession "there is one good man," and "if Uncle Moses don't get to heaven, it will be a bad chance for the rest of us." He was eighty seven years old at his death.

I am glad to record the fact that his children, and their children, are treading in the footsteps of their worthy ancestors. The son, John T. Pipkin, is a local preacher in Texas, one grandson, Daniel Pipkin, is now in the Vanderbilt University preparing himself for the work in the ministry, his name I have forgotten; and if he, or any other workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth, and may the Lord grant the spirit possess the godly and cultivate the graces of his venerable grandfather, and may the mantle of this old Elijah, which has fallen from him, be gathered up and worn by the young Elisha, with honor to himself, to his name and to the cause that he has espoused. I close by quoting the words of the Psalmist, which beautifully and appropriately apply to the subject of this notice: "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace." Yours,

A. C. RAMSEY.

SUSAN S. (POWELL) DAVIS was born in Madison county, Tenn., September 1, 1818; joined the church in September, 1836; married to Amos Davis in June 10, 1866; died in Lincoln, Jan. 16, 1879, of pulmonary consumption, March 20, 1879. From the time she joined the church, until death, she was a devoted Christian. As her pastor, it was my privilege to be with Sister Davis frequently during her sickness. She was confined to her bed for more than a month previous to her decease. She was conscious of her approaching dissolution, and perfectly resigned to the Divine will. Having made the necessary arrangements, she prayed earnestly that she might die the death of the righteous, and was heard. She retained a sound mind to the last moment. During the night previous to her death, though unable to speak, she was in a wakeful state, and upon the approach of the messenger of death, she smiled sweetly, and with her eyes fixed upon the prize of her calling, she fell asleep in Jesus. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." We miss them. That looks like what was this.

DIED, on the night of Saturday, the twenty-fourth of May, at her home in Jackson, La., and after a long illness, MARTHA ELIZABETH HAMILTON SIMS, wife of James King Sims, in the seventy seventh year of her age.

Miss Hamilton was the eldest child of Capt. John Sims, deceased, and Nancy Hamilton, his wife, also deceased, of Wilkinson county, Miss., and was the last survivor of a family of ten children. She was born on the twenty eighth of December, 1802, in Fairfield district, South Carolina, but passed much the greater part of her life in Mississippi and Louisiana. She was thrice married. Her first husband was Allen Gossett, who for several terms was a representative in the Legislature of Louisiana from this (East Feliciana) parish, and the sole offspring of this marriage was John Sims Gossett, deceased, who was the adjutant and acting major of the Eighth Louisiana Cavalry during the late war. Her second husband was Mr. Douglas, a Methodist clergyman, and William Douglas, a present citizen of East Feliciana, is the sole survivor of that marriage. James King, third husband, survives.

From an early period of her life, until after her third marriage, the deceased was a member of the Methodist Church, but she then changed to that of the Presbyterian, of which her husband was a member, not because of any change of views as to doctrines of this or that denomination, or of this or that form of church government, but because it seemed right to her that husband and wife should worship together at the same altar, and that deference should be shown by the latter to the former. With her all true worshipers, by whatever name called, were recognized as brethren, and were so treated by her.

She was what all who knew her esteemed her to be, a truly good and useful woman. As a wife, she was affectionate and obedient, as a wife devoted and faithful; as a friend, true and unchanging, and, as a member of society, studious to do all the good she could. To say that she was without fault would be both untrue and presumptuous; yet her virtues were so numerous and conspicuous as to hide from view any blemishes of character or disposition that might have been detected by the curious.

SURVIVING FRIEND.

THE committee appointed by the superintendent of the Sabbath-school of Arbacoochee, Ala., Methodist Episcopal church, South, to prepare resolutions expressive of the feeling of the school in regard to the death of Mrs. S. V. RATCLIFF, wife of Mr. Leon Ratcliff, submitted the following, which were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, It has pleased an all wise and erring God to send the destroying Angel into our little fold, and remove to that home not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, our most efficient and honored members, Sister Ratcliff. That we earnestly strive to live more consistently to the example she has left us, so that when we, too, shall have passed beyond the sunset, we may meet her in heaven, with her crown of glory at the feet of the Redeemer.

Resolved, That we tender to the bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy in their great bereavement, and though we can not realize their grief we ask them to remember that her death was but the beginning of a new life, and that now she stands at the gate waiting and watching for them.

Resolved, That the members of the school wear a badge of mourning for the space of one month as a token of our appreciation of her virtues.

STARS.

Stars of the night, through space unbounded
Gleaming,
Points in the darkness to our feeble sight;
Worlds upon worlds, with glad existence teeming,
To the great vision of the Infinite!
Hours of midnight contemplation,
My spirit seeks to grasp your vast display,
But the full effort thought imagination,
And fear but wearies while it strives to weigh.

Yet while the awful, the bewildering splendor
Of starry heaven fills my soul with fear,
There's a message sweet and tender,
Breathes consolation in my listening ear.
That hand which holds these countless worlds in its
Can surely lead me through life's troubled
And through space unmeasured seeing,
Hears my helpless soul's compassion gaze
Can in songs of adoration
Join the bright ones since light
First birth
Can from heart where grace has wrought
Creation,
The voice of praise ascends through all the Earth.

The universal chorus swelling,
Again gains the throne
Loves to hear rendered
His peaceful
Immeasurable glory
Which through boundless
Sea from the whole creatory
Sent to sing
Eternal appeal
Overnight and grandeur
Day
Ceaseless song from saints
All my Father and my Friend.

The Deacon's Rod.

"Spare the rod and spoil the child," said Mr. Hardcap, oracularly. He always quotes Scripture with oracular solemnity.

"Well," said Mr. Geer, "if I had as many children as Solomon had I think I should use the rod. But with only four I can get along very well without one."

"I understand," said young Wheaton, "that to be a mistranslation. The revisers are going to change it so as to read: 'Spoil the rod and spare the child.'"

The little laugh that followed this announcement, which was made perfectly sedately, aroused Mr. Hardcap's righteous indignation. Mr. Hardcap never gets angry, at least he says he does not; but he occasionally gets righteously indignant.

"Makin' fun o' Scripter ain't no anywhar," he said. "Any fool can make fun o' Scripter."

"But, Mr. Hardcap," said Mr. Geer, soothingly, "don't you think that circumstances alters cases? Don't you think that in our higher civilization, with our better development, with parents better understanding how to manage their children, and how to manage themselves, too, and with children more amenable to reason and affection, we ought to be able to dispense with the rod, though it may have been very necessary in Solomon's time? Why, even the horsebreakers do not use the whip on their horses any more."

"No," said Mr. Hardcap, shaking his head resolutely, "I ain't no wiser than Solomon, and I don't never expect to be."

We were gathered around the stove in the church lecture-room, after the prayer-meeting, at which the topic had been the training of children. These supplementary prayer-meetings are often better than the main meeting which precedes, as they say a lady's postscript is often better than the letter. There is more in it, and fewer words.

"Well," said the Deacon, who had hitherto stood an observant but sleepy listener, "I agree with Mr. Hardcap; I believe in the use of the rod."

"Why, Deacon!" It was a whole chorus of voices that uttered this exclamation.

"I do," said the Deacon, "and I have tried a good big one as big as my middle finger. And I use it pretty much every day."

Amazement defied expression. The notion of the good-natured deacon beating one of his children with a hickory stick as big as his middle finger took away our breath. We waited developments.

"Worse worse!" Dr. Deacon, how can you?"

"Which one is it, Deacon?" said I.

"Jemima Poppenhausen," said the Deacon.

"Jemima Poppenhausen!" exclaimed two or three voices simultaneously.

"Jemima Poppenhausen," said Mr. Hardcap, trying to work up a little righteous indignation, but without success, and ended by breaking out into a smile. Mr. Hardcap never succeeds very well in working up righteous indignation against the genial Deacon. "Jemima Poppenhausen; why, the Deacon can't get no such child. It's just one of the Deacon's games."

"Jemima Poppenhausen," said the Deacon. "She is the only bad child I have. All the native depravity of all my children is concentrated in her. Everybody cries, It is Jemima Poppenhausen. If anybody won't go to bed, it is Jemima Poppenhausen. Tot never cries; Tot is never cross; Tot never gets balky over her spelling lesson; Tot never gets so tired that she cannot go to bed without a cry; Tot never gets wilful at the table, and pouts and breaks out into a cry because she cannot have her own way. Not she. Whenever any of these disasters happen, Tot has gone away and Jemima Poppenhausen has taken her place. And then the rod comes out of its place in the corner. It was Tot's own plan. She said one day that she hated Jemima Poppenhausen, and that she wished I would get a stick and beat her whenever she came to the house. So when Tot disappears, and Jemima takes her place, sometimes we give her the stick, and she drives Jemima out of the room, flourishing the stick bravely after her, and coming back from the victorious onslaught, her little tearful face wreathed in smiles. Sometimes the mother gets the stick and pokes Jemima Poppenhausen till the cry turns into a laugh. Sometimes we simply put Jemima Poppenhausen by herself, with the stick, in the study, and pretty soon Tot comes in with the stick over her shoulder, declaring that she drove Jemima Poppenhausen up the chimney, or out of the window. I really do not know what we should do without that rod."

"Do you think that is right?" said Mr. Hardcap. "Isn't it kinder makin' a sport of sin?"

"The apostle tells us," replied the Deacon, "to overcome evil with good. And if I can overcome a cry with a laugh I think it is better than to overcome it with another cry. If I can pacify the pride and self-will, and petulance, and anger, and put them all in an imaginary Jemima Poppenhausen, and teach Tot to hate them all, I think I am doing her more good than by simply teaching her to be afraid to show them out before me. If I can get her to drive the devil away I am doing a great deal better by her than if I merely drive it away, or repress it myself."

"That is what you might call the scientific use of the imagination," said Mr. Geer.

"I don't know," said Mr. Hardcap, "about making some make-believe child the scape goat for a real child's sin."

"But the scape goat was a Bible idea," said the Deacon. "The Lord used the imagination a great deal in dealing with the Israelites. When He wished to give them the idea that they had completely gotten rid of their sins, He told the priest to tie a scarlet thread on the head of a goat and lead it off into the wilderness. It was a rude sort of object teaching, but it accomplished the purpose. Tot dislikes a pouting, crying, sulky child as much as you or I do; but we never dislike our own sins while we are committing them."

"I don't believe that," said Mr. Hardcap.

"Then why don't we stop?" said the Deacon.

"Because — because — we don't want to," replied Mr. Hardcap hesitatingly.

"Exactly," said the Deacon. "Now, if I can get Tot to look at herself when she is pouting, or sulking or cross, if I can get her out of her passion long enough to see what an unlovely thing it is, I have won half the battle; and if I can get her to go after it with a stick, and drive it away, I have won all the battle. And in using the imagination I am only following the example God has set me."

"Well," said Mr. Hardcap, "I am going to try the Deacon's stick right away."

"One thing," said the Deacon, "if you do, you must keep perfectly good-natured yourself. A little righteous indignation in your own heart and tones of voice will ruin the charm."

For myself, I am not sure how the Deacon's stick would do in other hands. But in the Deacon's hands it has helped to bring up as delightful a family of children as it is not often one's good fortune to meet anywhere.—Lalcus, in the Christian Union.

"The Lord is Risen Indeed."

Easter is the grand and crowning festival of Christianity. Around it all others cluster. Without it they are nothing. Christmas, without an Easter, is a mere pageant, Good Friday a tragedy, and Whitsunday a fiction.

Easter is the history of the resurrection of our Lord, the promise and prophecy of the resurrection of His saints. It is the day-dawn breaking over the realms of darkness and of death; in the resurrection of Christ we have the seal to the divinity of His mission and to the truth of the gospel. To it we have the clear and the strong assurance of the resurrection of the body and life, and immortality beyond the grave. "If Christ be not raised, then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection from the dead."

"Christ has risen; man shall rise, deathless lives in glorified humanity; we shall live also. This corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal shall put on immortality. Then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written: O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"

But, notwithstanding this, it is evident that the resurrection of Christ does not take the important position, in some of our modern Christianity which it held in the Apostolic age and in the early Christian Church. Rome exalts the cross as the great symbol of our faith; and Protestantism largely follows the example, until the resurrection of Christ is made to take the place of a mere episode in the great and sublime history of our redemption. With many, Easter is only the echo of Christmas, over which the darkness of Good Friday casts its gloomy shadows.

In the Apostolic age the resurrection of Christ was the grand theme of preaching and Christian thought. Calvary was known and named, but only because it lay in the way that led to the garden of the resurrection. When the enemies of Christianity exclaimed in derision: "Your Lord was crucified, dead and buried," the church exultingly replied: "He rose again from the dead, ascended into heaven, and sitteth at the right hand of God, the Father Almighty, whence He shall come to judge the quick and the dead."

But, with the resurrection of Christ, the resurrection of His saints has also been practically too much ignored. In accordance with popular religious thought, the soul is endowed with all the glories of man, and the body is despised as a mere garment to be thrown aside, and, if not entirely unnecessary, at most but an insignificant supplement to the life to be redeemed in the world to come. Easter, without the resurrection of the body, has but little significance.

In our resurrection life only are we authorized to expect the consummation of our redemption. Within its sphere lie nearly all the promises of the New Testament. The change into the glorious image of Christ, the crown of victory and the everlasting inheritance of the saints will be enjoyed by us only when we shall stand arrayed as the children of the resurrection.—The Lutheran.

Bishop Caldwell, English Bishop at Madras, in a paper on "Indian Converts to Christianity," says: "Remembering that we never can know the private life of any class of people in England so well as we know the private life—if that can be called private which is perfectly public—of native Christians in this country, I maintain that the Christians of our Indian missions have no need to shrink from comparison with Christians in a similar station in life and similarly circumstanced in England or in any other part of the world. The style of character they exhibit is one which those who are well acquainted with them cannot but like. I think I do not exaggerate when I affirm that they appear to me in general more teachable and tractable, more considerate of the feelings of others, and more respectful to superiors, more uniformly temperate, more patient and gentle, more trustful in Providence, better church goers, yet free from religious bigotry, and, in proportion to their means, more liberal than Christians in England holding a similar position in the social scale. I do not for a moment pretend that they are free from imperfection; on the contrary, living among them as I do, from day to day, I see their imperfections daily, and daily do I reprove, rebuke, exhort, as I see need, but I am bound to say that when I have gone away anywhere, and looked back upon the Christians of this country from a distance, when I have compared them with what I have seen and known of Christians in other countries, I find that their good qualities have left a deeper impression in my mind than their imperfections."

Religious Intelligence.

—The Free Church of Scotland supports missions in India, South Africa, Syria and the New Hebrides.

—The twenty Unitarian Societies in the West have a total indebtedness of nearly $18,000. They paid $16,170 the past year.

—The North Carolina Episcopalians have held their annual convention. They report 5,511 communicants, an increase of 367.

—Latest news from the Presbyterian mission in Ooromiah, Persia, states that the revival movement continues. Revivals were in progress in three villages, with 200 converts and inquirers and there were calls for evangelists from several places.

—Dr. John Henry Newman is to be a cardinal after all. The report that he had declined to accept a scarlet hat from Leo XIII proves to have been untrue. The English press regards the act as a long deferred recognition of Dr. Newman's eminent services to the church.

—The St. Louis Y. M. C. Association is doing a remarkable work in the city hospitals. During sixteen months, 50,126 papers, periodicals, and Bibles have been distributed.

—In 1856 the translation of the Bible into the Russian language was begun. It was finished in 1877, and last year the first edition of 24,000 copies was exhausted.

—Says the London World: "The Emperor of China is the stoutest monarch in the world, and the Emperor of Germany the tallest, though even he can only boast of seventy-two inches while his nephew, Prince Adalbert, stands six feet, six inches in his stockings."

—The town of Zeitoon, Turkey, was lately about to be destroyed by Moslem troops for rebelling against the Turkish oppression. Through the efforts of Rev. Henry Marden, an American missionary, the rebels submitted, and the order was given that the town should be spared; and thus ten thousand lives were saved.

—The English Church Mission in Benny, on the Niger, hopes that the period of persecution is over. The favorite wife of the king, who inspired the persecutions, has lately died. The chiefs are yielding very much, and the attendance at the Sabbath services has increased within two months from 120 to 450, including two chiefs, and the richest women in Bonny. The king and chiefs seem ready to yield what they cannot prevent.

—A Wesleyan missionary writes from China: "The famine appears to have given the people a thorough shaking with regard to idolatry. The priests of Buddha have perished in vast numbers. The sixty or eighty acres of temple land upon which they have depended for support have utterly failed them, and they have starved to death in sight of their dumb and helpless gods. Those temples are now deserted. The mute image stands there still, dust-covered and unworshiped, and the people are in doubt and dismayed."

—On the occasion of the eightieth anniversary of the Religious Tract Society of London, the preacher was Rev. W. B. Pope, D. D., ex-President of the Wesleyan Conference. An idea of the extent of the operations of the Society may be gathered from the fact that nearly 9,000,000 of tracts have been granted to societies and individuals in London alone. The total circulation for the past year at home and abroad amounts to nearly 70,000,000, and since the formation of the Society to very nearly 1,853,000,000.

—A monthly periodical will be started at Geneva in July, to be devoted to the exploration and civilization of Africa. Of 570 purely medical periodicals published in the world, Germany has 121, the United States 119, France 93, England 49, Italy 38, Spain 21, Belgium 19, British India 15 (mostly official sanitary reports,) Russia 15, Holland, Poland, Sweden, the South American States and Switzerland 10 each, Canada and Hungary 7 each, Denmark, Portugal and Algeria 4 each, Australia and Turkey 2 each.

—The English Presbyterian Synod at its last meeting received and answered favorably an offer of co-operation with the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists. Professor Francis C. Patton, of Chicago, was elected professor in the college, at a salary of $4,000 a year. A member of the Synod expressed the belief that had Scotch and Irish Presbyterians settling in England not fallen away from the church of their fathers, the English Presbyterians would be hardly second in numbers to the Church of England itself. The average salary of the ministers is $1,500 a year.

—Give, go, or die! The Baptist paper, the Examiner and Chronicle somewhile ago had the following:—"In 1836 the anti-mission spirit was so strong in the Miami Association, Ohio, that nineteen churches expelled six churches that favored Sunday-schools, missions, Bible, and temperance societies. At this time the six churches had 141 members, the nineteen churches 706 members. Twenty years after, in 1856, the missionary churches had increased to twenty, with 1,961 members; and the anti-mission churches had decreased to ten, with 343 members. In forty-one years after, in 1877, the missionary churches had increased to sixty-five in three associations, with 6,733 members, while the anti-mission churches had ceased to report themselves."

—In the two years from 1876 to 1878 the Baptists in Kansas increased their organizations from 291 to 331, their members from 13,393 to 16,053, and their meeting houses from 68 to 69. The Methodists increased their organizations from 710 to 1,018, their members from 27,591 to 33,767, and their meeting houses from 147 to 152. The Presbyterians increased their organizations from 137 to 157, their members from 4,802 to 5,620, and their meeting-houses from 55 to 69. The Lutherans increased their organizations from 28 to 58, their members from 1,270 to 1,550, and their meeting-houses from 11 to 33. The Catholics had 187 organizations in 1876 and 223 in 1878. The population of Kansas increased between 1875 and 1878 from 531,136 to 708,197, and is likely to reach a million in 1880.

—For forty-six years the British and Foreign Sailors' Society has been working in the interests of seafaring men, of whom four millions entered or left English harbors last year alone. At the annual meeting of the Society it appeared that during the year 523 libraries had been supplied to ships, and 24,605 copies of the gospels, 1,917 Bibles and testaments, and 235,170 religious tracts and papers had been distributed among the men of the sea. The Society has twenty-nine stations at home and foreign ports, with thirty-seven agents or missionaries. At Malta, Geneva, Naples, Hamburg, Rotterdam and Antwerp the Society carries on its operations. The receipts of the Society amounted to $22,715, which had all been expended in the course of its work.

—The Synod of the English Presbyterian Church, a body of 50 members, met in London, April 23. The Rev. Dr. William Graham, author of a "Life of Dr. McFarlane," was installed moderator. The church has a home mission work which is undergoing a process of consolidation, no new stations having been established during the year, and a foreign mission in China, at Amoy, Swatow and Formosa, with sixteen missionaries, of whom three are at home on furlough, fifty-seven native evangelists, thirty-two students and 2,117 members, with an income for the year of $20,105. In discussing the temperance question, a member asserted that one Presbyterian professor had secured a Sunday closing bill for Ireland, and now a member of the Synod, Mr. J. C. Stevenson, M. P., had taken charge of a similar measure for England.

—Roman Catholic missions in Asia have attained to large dimensions. The success of Francis Xavier some centuries ago in India and Japan was followed by a period of decline. The Society of Foreign Missions at Paris was almost destroyed by the French Revolution, and the missionaries which it had supported were left in a precarious position. To continue the missions already in existence, the Society for the Propagation of the Faith was formed, and it has sent out an army of missionaries of various orders. The summary of the Asiatic missions as given for 1878 shows that there are 10 Chaldean bishops, 2,630 priests and 2,835,583 Catholics, against 80 bishops, 2,853 priests and 2,191,200 Catholics in 1850. In the provinces of Mongolia and Manchuria there are 21,317 Catholics in a population of 4,000,000. This is a very hard field. The people are nomadic in their habits, the cold is most severe, and the missionaries, cut off from outside resources and "compelled to travel long distances, have a hard lot. In China there are 772,112 and in Japan 15,622 Catholics. In the Annamite Empire the Catholics claim a following of 629,491. They claim 887,371 in India, 48,064 in Mesopotamia and Persia, 11,000 in Palestine, 10,000 in Smyrna, and 70,500 in Anatolia and the Turkish Archipelago. There are besides 360,000 United Greeks and 2,783 Lebanese Christians. Last year, it is said, 9,311 adults were converted in China.

Our Young People.

A BOY.

Only a boy, with its noise and fun,
The veriest mystery under the sun;
As brimful of mischief, and wit and glee,
As ever a human frame can be,
And as hard to manage—ah! me, my!
'Tis hard to tell,
Yet we love him well.

Only a boy, with his fearful creed
Who cannot be trusted, but must be led
Who troubles the neighbors' dogs and cats,
And tears more clothes, and spoils more hats,
Loses more tops and kites and bats
Than would stock a store
For a year or more.

Only a boy, with his wild, strange ways
With his queer remarks and his odd replies
Sometimes foolish and sometimes wise
Often brilliant for one of his size
As a meteor hurled
From the pleasant world.

Only a boy, who will be a man,
If manly qualities can be
In water or fire or some fiend's grip
Consider not to rob us of this, or he
Our blessing, our trouble, our rest, our
Our torment, our Only a boy.

The Deacon's Story.

Deacon Baker laid down his religious weekly, raised his "specs" until they rested on the top of his shiny bald head, grasped firmly the arms of his Elder Brewster arm-chair, crossed his legs and looked meditatively into the fire.

Whenever Deacon Baker raised his "specs," assumed that position, and said he had something to say, we knew it would be worth hearing. The Deacon's household was a primitive one; in it many of the old customs were preserved. There were old-fashioned chairs, settles, fireplaces and occupations. There were clothes for every day, and Sunday garments:—the latter laid away during the week, folded and perfumed, made one think there might be a religion in dress. There was a Sabbath observance that made one feel that there still remained

"A day of rest and hope
A day for God's own."

There was nothing stilted or forced, and we boys, who had been sent up from the city to get exercise and health on the farm, took in the simple piety that abounded there as we did the sunlight and the healthful air of the hills.

Father had been there before us, and he often said he owed much of his success in life to the wholesome teachings of the good Deacon—teachings that came, as some springtime and autumn, in their course. There was the opening of a furrow here, the dropping of a seed there, and at length a reaping of good resolves and purposes that astonished even ourselves, for we hardly knew whence they came.

My brother Ben was quicker in perception than myself, and he always said the Deacon was of the same sort as other people, and that away back he possessed the same frailties and failings, only he had mastered them—compelled them to yield.

"I have heard people in prayer meetings," said Ben, "tell about being 'monuments of God's saving grace,' 'brands plucked from the burning,' and all that; I don't put the Deacon in that line, but I am certain that at some time, and in some place he has gone wrong."

I always liked to make out why Ben could think so, and I always ended as I began—in wonder. The evening of which I write, it all came out.

"I have just read a little paragraph," continued the Deacon, "that puts me back a matter of fifty years. You can read for yourself what I allude to; but what I am going to tell has never been in print.

"Fifty years ago, come April, I was fourteen years old. I remember the day, and more particular the night, as 'twere an hour since. I see my old home as 'twere before me now—the sloping roof, the big flat stone at the door, the maple trees, the orchard, the well-sweep. I see the shadows they cast, for the moon was up; I see myself standing in the road and looking back; I hear the words I said,—they have always sounded in my ears, more or less, coming back from the past as the echo from the hills: 'The world is wide,' I said, 'and I mean to try it. I will go where I can do as I like, where I can be my own master.'

"Poor fool that I was! I left a pleasant home, a dear mother, and a good father, run away. My only stock in life was a defiant will and a purpose to do as I had a mind. I had rebelled because my father insisted on my obeying him without question. I found other things wide, beside the world. I found there was a great distance between the starting out and the getting to; that a poor boy with a bundle, and a good place with kindness and pay in it, were out of sight of each other as is our country on the one side and China on the other. I found it was one thing to plan what I would do, and another to do it.

"I have often heard people say that I was good because I was born so—that 'twere the nature of things. I am not one of them sort, who call themselves 'vile worms of the dust;' I trust I have attained some measure of grace, and I have got it by hard discipline. I would like to tell all my life from fourteen to seventeen, but there is no time to-night, and there is this particular circumstance I want to dwell on.

"I can't say I had no principle at seventeen years old; but I can say the good in me was about all covered up. I have often thought of myself then as a rich piece of ground run over with weeds. My plans were how to deceive my employers, how to get the most for the least, and to get square with the world because I had set myself against it. My mother, had forgiven me for running away, and had gone to heaven; my father had brought home a new wife, who had no call for me, and there seemed no hand to hold me back. And this is what struck me so forcible in that piece in the paper: that there is a leading hand of Providence; that it is ever stretched out and above us; that its grip is often loose—that it lets one go and go, as 'twere—but at last it reaches out and snatches one back, as it would snatch you from the edge of the falls—and then goes him upon a freight from which he can never more descend.

"I was seventeen years old when the hand reached me. I had almost touched bottom; I had contemplated, but, thank God, not committed crime. I had pitched with two companions to rob my employer. We had engaged passage on an East Indiaman, to sail at break of day; when the robbery would be discovered we would be on the high seas. In them days there was no telegraph to get ahead of us, and we had no fear of being caught. I was to remain in the store, secreted among some old boxes; at a certain hour I was to let in my companions, and together we would do the desperate deed. Well do I remember that night. It was dark and outside it was still; inside there was noise enough I could hear my heart beat like taps on the door; the blood forced into my head with a whizzing sound; there were strange unnatural whispers in my ears, and I could have sworn I heard the clanking of chains and the opening and closing of prison doors. My own breath became painfully audible and was fanned back into my face like a hot flame. I could endure darkness no longer. I crept out from the boxes; I groped about until I found a candle; I lit it, and seeing a piece of written paper, I took it up and read it. It seemed to me then like the handwriting on the wall. Some time I will show it to you; I have it laid away. This is what was written:

"'It may be thou art on the verge of ruin; if so, turn back from a sinful path, for it is never too late to retreat. The path of evil thou hast well trodden, forsake it; disused, the grass will grow upon it, thou will perceive it no more.'

"Some would say it was chance laid that paper in my way; I tell you boys, it was the hand of Providence. It grasped me amidst my one clean put of my wicked ways. I kept guard in that store all night; my comrades, seeing the light, thought I was caught and would tell on 'em, and so they shipped in the East Indiaman, and in the morning were far away. With all my bad surroundings gone, I began as 'twere a new life.

"I have heard it is said, 'The sins of youth become the smarts of old age.' That may all be; but the sting is taken out of my smart. I have bound up my sad days like a book fastened with clasps, and I seldom open it, for I hold, what God has forgiven, shall my forget. But that little piece in the paper brought it all back to my mind clear a-noon-day."

"Deacon Baker," said brother Ben, grasping the old man's hand, "I knew it—I knew you had fought with temptation and beat it."

"Did you ever," said I, "hear from your companions?"

"Yes; there was a missionary aboard the ship, through him the Lord caught hold on them. One said out to India, and I've heard he did a great deal of good there; the other one became master of a full-rigged ship and went down on her, standing by his duty like a man, refusing to get into the last boat, because he was one too many. Boys, I often think of them old days at home before I ran away. I can never make out what possessed me to do as I did, nor turn my back on them that loved me. I tell you it's an awful thing to go out into the world from the home that has held you so long and so tenderly, without a leave-taking and a God bless you.

"Boys," said the Deacon, when he bade us good night, "I hope you will never have to be pulled back with the forced way, and never forget there is above you a leading Hand."—New York Observer.

ANNIE GALE has a sweet spot in one of the Western States for little Annie Gale. Not long ago she was led to trust in Christ as her Saviour. The news of her conversion soon spread through the place. A lady said a friend called on her father and said: "I hear all manner of your Annie to think she has been converted." She was just like a little angel always, she was good enough before. If Dan Tucker, now, could be turned around and made a Christian of, I believe in it." Annie heard the conversation, and her heart beat with pity for poor Dan. She knew him to be one of the worst naughty of characters. Impelled with love for his soul, she went to his wretched dwelling and began to talk to him in tender tones about Jesus and God's love to the chief of sinners. After referring to her own conversion, she asked him if he was not a sinner, and if he did not need the same Saviour whom she had found? Poor old Dan's heart was touched; he wept, he fell upon his knees and cried, "O Lord, be merciful to me the worst of sinners!" God heard that earnest, penitent cry, and Annie left the old man praising the mercy which could save a wretch like him. It was Dan's business now to tell the story of God's love. He would say, "I've the same gospel, the very same gospel, that so blessed little Annie Gale. You wouldn't think it could be, such a dreadful sinner as I've been; but the same good Lord who takes little children in His arms and blesses them, saves the chief of sinners too. I strive Him and cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out,'" John vi. 37.

It was amid the darkness of the night, at the brook Jabbok, that Jacob of old wrestled with the angel and prevailed. It is in the soul's dark, lonely and solitary seasons still that the church's moral and spiritual wrestlers are crowned with victory, and as princes have power with God.

ORGAN OF THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES OF THE M. E. CHURCH, SOUTH.

THURSDAY, JULY 3, 1879.

REV. LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.

OFFICE.—112 CAMP ST., NEW ORLEANS.

Rest for the Soul.

Jaded brains, weary bodies, and work to the end of life's chapter, are the common lot. But these are small evils in comparison with that tiredness of soul which comes of doubt and uncertainty in regard to spiritual things. The questions which affect us must also be settled by each one for himself. It would seem that some things should be so well ascertained, and so certainly demonstrated by this time, that all earnest inquirers would be at rest concerning them. God, the future life, revelation and its import, have occupied the studious thought of the ages, and yet each individual of each generation has to grapple with these momentous subjects personally, and satisfy himself.

Supposing points of this kind do not trouble us there remain the burden of our own sins, our relations to God, the accountability to which we shall be held. And in the Christian experience there are temptations that batter against the walls of the inner citadel, anxious cares that consume the soul even as a fever consumes the body, and afflictions that threaten at times to undermine the faith. Without a war of opinion is being waged. Nothing is settled in the atmosphere of controversy. There are all phases of belief and unbelief, from the most enlightened theism to the blankest materialism and atheism. Out of all this battling of discordant schools, and incongruous and opposing doctrines and convictions, each one for himself, must choose, and find rest if he can.

Where shall it be found, and how? Christ's words are a fair challenge to all honest souls. He promises rest to those who come unto Him. He assures us that we shall find it if we will take His yoke upon us. No other teachers, ancient or modern, has ventured on such a deglutation; or, if they have, the pretense stands self-exposed. Thousands and millions have laid their burdens down at the feet of Jesus. They have accepted the invitation, and the rest has been found. They have found rest unto their souls. The noted infidel, Robert G. Ingersoll, in a recent funeral address over his dead brother, said:

"Life is a narrow vale between the cold and barren peaks of two eternities. We strive in vain to look beyond the heights. We cry aloud, and the only answer is the echo of our wailing cry. From the voiceless lips of the unreplying dead there comes no word; but in the night of death hope sees a star, and listening love can hear the rustle of a wing. He who sleeps here, when dying, mistaking the approach of death for the return of health, whispered with his latest breath: 'I am better now.' Let us believe, in spite of doubts and dogmas, and tears and fears, that these dear words are true of all the countless dead."

These are very sad words, and honestly spoken. In his meaning of it, the "better now" may have meant annihilation, a dreamless hereafter, or they may have meant the faintest shadow of a hope of a future life. Certainly there is no rest for the soul in the most cultured and accomplished infidelity. We cry aloud, it is true, but instead of the echo of our wailing cry we have the words of Christ: "I am the resurrection and the life." Instead of the cheerless gloom, the utter despair of the infidel, we have the witness in ourselves. The Christian company, over their dead, can confess with one voice, without a tremor of doubt: "For we know that, if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." The infidel's words are the utterance of a soul without hope or comfort; those of the believer are the words of a soul completely at rest, and impregnable to the assaults of skepticism.

That this rest of the soul is real no one will deny. Mr. Ingersoll and Mr. Huxly, also, would doubtless say that, however real, it is based upon a delusion. That is to say, a delusion, a lie, is more productive of happiness than truth. The Christian religion is to reason probably true; but to faith and experience it is certain, assured. To the spiritual man God, pardon and heaven are as real and clear as the sunshine, while to the natural man they are foolishness. The one rests in Christ, undisturbed by the vagaries of the doubting; the other drifts upon a dark and tempestuous sea, with no better expectation than that the soul sinks into nothingness at last.

The surpassing excellency of Christ's religion is that it is a religion of rest—rest for perplexed, disconsolate, weary souls. The mind tossed upon the waves of speculative and conflicting theories, without satisfaction and without peace, can find rest in Christ. It is worth trying. The way to a merciful Saviour is open to all that labor and are heavy-laden. To the infidel, the doubter, the tired and forlorn sinner, to all who would find rest, the way to Jesus is plain.

The Seizure of Our Churches During the War

Recently the Western Methodist, of Memphis, after a paragraph or two, referring to the character of Bishop Ames, says:

The above was in type, when looking over the Western Christian Advocate we saw a communication from the Rev. George R. Bristor, Ames Methodist Episcopal Church, New Orleans, La., embracing an appeal for contributions to aid in paying the indebtedness of that church. Mr. Bristor attempts to write history, embracing events during and since the war. After stating that when New Orleans was occupied by the Federal army, nearly all the evangelical pastors of the city vacated their pulpits, and closed their churches, and, assigning causes for this course, Mr. Bristor says:

"When the knowledge of this fact reached the President of the United States, Abraham Lincoln, he ordered, through Secretary of War Stanton, that all these churches should be reopened, and placed in charge of loyal ministers, until their regular pastors should return and assume proper control—italics ours. By invitation of the secretary the Methodist Churches of the city were placed under the jurisdiction of the late Bishop E. R. Ames."

Now, we are not fully cognizant of the plan pursued at that time by Bishop Ames and his preachers in New Orleans, and therefore we shall not review the statements of Mr. Bristor as to the course of events in that city. But we beg to call in question the truth of the statement which we italicise in the above extract. It seems to us that here we have an effort to smooth and even efface, if possible, one of the most disgraceful and humiliating incidents in the relations of the Methodist Episcopal Church to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. We state it thus, because the Methodist Episcopal Church has never made amends for the conduct of Bishop Ames.

The Western then quotes the special order under which one of our Memphis churches was seized while in charge of a regular pastor, and in constant use by our people. The general order from the War Department, by which all our Southern Churches were placed at the disposal of Bishop Ames, is also given as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
WASHINGTON, Nov. 29, 1865.

[illegible] commanding the Department of [illegible] and Texas, and the Generals commanding Armies of Occupation and Posts and Garrisons in the States of [illegible] and the States in the Southern Department.

You are hereby directed to place at the disposal of the Rev. Bishop Ames all houses of worship belonging to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in which a loyal minister, who has been appointed by a loyal Bishop of said church, does not now officiate.

It is a matter of great importance to the government, in its efforts to restore tranquillity to the community and peace to the nation, that Christian ministers should, by example and precept, support and foster the loyal sentiment of the people. Bishop Ames enjoys the entire confidence of this department, and no doubt is entertained that all ministers appointed by him will be entirely loyal. You are expected to give him all the aid, countenance and support practicable in the execution of his important mission.

You are also authorized and directed to furnish Bishop Ames and his clerk with transportation and subsistence, when it can be done without prejudice to the service, and will afford them courtesy, assistance and protection.

By order of the Secretary of War.

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

The order from the War Department, so far from originating with the President or Secretary of War, was beyond question issued at the suggestion of Bishop Ames, or other representatives of his church. 2. The seizure was not conditioned upon our churches being closed or deserted by their pastors. The order reads: "You are hereby directed to place at the disposal of the Rev. Bishop Ames all houses of worship belonging to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in which a loyal minister, who has been appointed by a loyal Bishop of said church, does not now officiate." 3. Our churches in New Orleans were open and regularly occupied by our people at the time Bishop Ames took forcible possession of them. Rev. Stephen J. Davies, a member of the Louisiana Conference, was preaching regularly in the Carondelet Street Church when the Bishop demanded the keys. 4. As there was nothing in the order about the churches being vacant, so there was nothing in it about restoring churches when the pastors should return. What Bishop Ames and the Northern Methodist Church intended must be inferred from subsequent events. Our pastors had been back about five months before the white churches were restored, and then only upon a peremptory and reiterated order from President Johnson, Dr. Newman, as is well known, made most strenuous efforts to retain permanent possession of them, especially of the Carondelet Street Church, and we are bound to believe that this was the original purpose and hope of Bishop Ames and his ecclesiastical associates.

As the Western says, the Northern Church has made no amends for this flagrant outrage, this most unchristian measure. Some of them have gone so far as to concede that it was a mistake. It is due, however, to the truth of history that events should be accurately stated, and, so far as possible, fairly interpreted.

Presense on the Work of Wesley.

This eminent French Protestant, writing to Rev. Matthew Lellevre, of the French Methodist Church, says:

"You apprise me that they are preparing in the United States, to the grand memory of Wesley, a monument more durable than those of stone or of marble. That monument, it seems, is to be a book in which all the different fractions of evangelical Christendom shall express their respect and their sympathy for that mighty servant of God. On this ground it is that you have asked me to join my testimony to theirs. I do it with eagerness, in measure as I can—that is to say, contenting myself with a simple testimony of admiration and of gratitude; for I am not capable of attempting a characterization of that illustrious servant of God—illustrious in spite of himself, humility being one of his distinctive features. The Methodist Churches of America had good right to make an appeal to the whole world of evangelical Christianity; for a man like Wesley is its common property, stamping as he did his work with a peculiar impress, through the general and notable influence which it has exercised over the contemporaneous church.

"Laying on one side what relates more specially to the churches which bear his name, and which have ample reason for remaining faithful to their proper character, until the stroke of the hour for the grand fusion in worldwide synthesis of a complete Christianism—an hour which appears to me destined to coincide with that of the final consummations—I will call up some of the signal services rendered by Wesley to the universal Reformation.

"In the first place, from the doctrinal point of view, he reacted against the scholastic dogmatism in which the generous sap of the sixteenth century had been congealed; and he restored the moral element, the human liberty sacrificed to the dogma of absolute predestination, without falling into the Pelagian error. I stop not to consider the consequences which have been derived from that service to the bosom of the Wesleyan Churches as matters on which I am not now to pronounce myself. I merely reserve that grand affirmation of free will, without which I declare it impossible to comprehend a serious struggle against contemporary pantheism, and that insisting upon holiness which was so necessary in face of an orthodoxy more disposed to lull the soul than to brace it for the strife.

"In the second place, Wesley, without breaking prematurely with the official church, was one of the most puissant initiators of the true notion of "church," which makes it rest, not upon birth, but upon personal faith, and brings it up, without invalidation of the ministry, to a large practice of the universal priesthood, the laical sacerdocy. This primary ecclesiastical reform bore in its bosom the independence of the spiritual society in presence of the State. Thus has Wesleyanism in the second generation almost everywhere rended the title with the civil power.

"In the third place, Wesley gave the most magnificent spring to the missionary movement without separating the mission within from that without, for it was a veritable mission which he undertook with Whitefield in lands called Christian. I know of nothing more admirable than that ardent propagandism, indefatigable in the two worlds, suspending the multitudes upon the lips of those real apostles who, to use the expression of one of their faithfullest disciples, the Rev. William Arthur, carried with them verily "a tongue of fire," and, in the age of Voltaire and of Bolingbroke, brought back indubitable Pentecosts. They were the beginners of a general awakening which has produced itself throughout Protestantism. The "dry bones" were reanimated by their voice, heard through all the earth. The domestic mission brought forth the foreign, which owed to them that incomparable expansion, which makes it the glory of the Evangelical Church in the nineteenth century. Thanks to them and to their emulators, the angel of the Apocalypse has truly resumed his flight under the whole heavens, to carry the everlasting gospel to the peoples of all languages.

"In fine (for I must restrict myself to the indication of these ideas without unfolding them), Wesley once more brought down the gospel from the more or less frozen heights of a kind of religious aristocracy. He bore it to the disinherited, to the ignorant, to the enslaved. It could once again be said: "The poor have the gospel preached to them." The partisans of a religion comme il faut made it a reproach to him, and said to him, as Celsus said to the primitive Christians: "You do but concern yourselves with this mob of the crossways, with all these wretches who are the refuse of humanity." Wesley might have responded, like Origen in his immortal reply to the Greek philosopher: "'Tis true; we do devote ourselves to these wretches in order to raise them up, because you have never given them a thought. We represent a Master who said: "I am not come for those who think themselves in health, but in quest of that which is lost."

Well, were it worth the while, my dear sir, to set forth all those grand ideas that lived in the person of Wesley, to draw that figure, so noble and so pure, that life of unwearied devotion. It is not in writing to you that I shall attempt it, for I cannot forget that you are yourself one of those who have best made known to us this great Christian—great above all in that he said from the depth of his heart with John the Baptist: "He must increase, but I must decrease."

Without doubt your churches, like all the other sections of Christianity, have had their imperfections and their straitnesses. I frankly avow that my thought has need of more air and space than the orthodoxy of the awakening (revell) be it Wesleyan, Lutheran or Reformed. Each epoch receives new lights from Him who is styled the Sun of Righteousness and of truth. I only wish that those lights were penetrated with a flame as ardent as that which animated the fathers of our churches. Those grand servants of God who have left us are like so many Elijahs translated in a chariot of fire. We must gather up, not their shroud, which represents but the human infirmities and errors that we should well beware of converting into dead traditions, but their mantle—I mean that which symbolizes their wide and fruitful activity. This is the only way in which the Elishas can continuate the Elijahs.

Our Moorings.

We quote from Dr. Sledd, in the Theological and Homiletic Monthly, the conclusion of a strong and timely article under the above heading:

The tendency in many quarters for some time past, and still is, to put doctrine in the background. Many preachers, perhaps from want of sufficient familiarity with our doctrinal tenets, perhaps from fear, or, worse still, perhaps, from a lurking disbelief of them, seldom advert to anything that is distinctive of Methodism. In many places the grand old hymns of the church that embody at once, and in beautiful equipoise, both doctrine and experience, have been almost entirely superseded by songs of imagination and sentiment—songs that awaken lively emotions, it is true, but emotions very nearly akin to such as are inspired by the Marseillaise or Hail Columbia. We heard the sainted Marvin sadly lament this tendency to the merely sentimental in the music of our Sabbath-schools, our social meetings, and our stated Sabbath worship. In his "Doctrinal Integrity of Methodism" he gives his views of the necessity of strict adherence to our doctrines in terms by no means equivocal.

A sound, well-matured Christian experience must be "rooted and grounded" in unadulterated scriptural doctrine. It is on the sincere milk and strong meat of the word that souls are to be fed and nourished unto eternal life. No soul can "grow up into Christ" when fed simply on the flowers of human rhetoric, the subtleties of metaphysical speculations, or the noxious compounds of unbelief. Ministers cater for souls—let them take heed to the quality of the food which they set before them.

It cannot be denied that doctrines once most strenuously insisted on are now but seldom heard in many of our pulpits. The omission has not been supplied—cannot be supplied by anything better. The doctrines alluded to refer more directly to personal experience—the life in Christ—and to give them prominence in our ministrations is all-important to the life, strength and comfort of the souls committed us. Few men realize to how great an extent the great mass of hearers are dependent on the pulpit for their instruction in matters of religion, or with what absolute confidence its deliverances are accepted. The souls of the people are in the hands of their minister in a most solemn sense. How fearful, then, his responsibility, and how sacred his obligation to give each one "his portion of meat in due season"—to withhold nothing that would be "profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, and for instruction in righteousness." And if he not only withhold the true, but substitute that which is false, their blood will God require at his hands.

May not the defective and unsatisfactory character of the experience of multitudes of our people be attributed, in a large degree, to the obscurity into which some of our doctrines have been permitted to fall? May not this be one great reason why "many are sickly among us, and many sleep?" Our mission will not permit us to carry so much dead weight much longer. We have a magnificent army, well equipped for a splendid campaign. But what if its strength must be spent in caring for the sick and burying the dead? What victories can it win? What new honors can it lay at the feet of the Captain of Salvation? In the gospel, in its integrity, there is life—happy, joyous, triumphant life—for every one. Let us know that life ourselves—proclaim it in its fullness and richness to the people, and lead them to the sweet experience of its power. These are our moorings.

Dr. McFerrin was in Memphis recently and delivered an address on the affairs of the Publishing House. We give an extract from the report of the Appeal:

He did not find fault with his predecessor in the management, but the Committee found that the Publishing House owed everybody, from the bishop to the printer's devil—all sorts of debts, from one dollar and fifty cents to one hundred thousand dollars. The Book Committee took twenty days in investigating affairs, and arranging a plan of relief. To have sold the property would have been ruinous, as it would not bring enough to pay out, and a large debt would have remained, to be paid by constant begging and contributions. It had been decided to consolidate the debt, and raise the money to pay it by issuing three hundred thousand dollars in bonds bearing four per cent. The Committee in charge was composed of some of the best business men in the country, and a few preachers thrown in to give it ecclesiastical dignity. He had been placed in charge of the business greatly against his wishes; but they said he must take charge, and they would put a business manager in to look after the internal affairs, so that he could go abroad and secure subscriptions.

The first Saturday night after he went to work, all the hands had been paid in full, and this had been continued every week since. Ten thousand dollars of interest on bonds, a lot of back taxes and insurance, had been paid, and there was more stock on hand than a year ago. The enterprise could easily be made to pay the twelve thousand dollars of annual interest on the consolidated bonds. About two hundred and thirty-seven thousand dollars had already been subscribed, and he hoped the balance could be taken before the first day of July. He wanted the Methodists of Memphis to help him in his great work. If they got only four per cent., when six per cent. could be had by some other investment, they might afford to contribute two dollars on the hundred for the benefit of a great enterprise that had the sympathy of all the Methodists. He had given one thousand dollars, had subscribed one thousand dollars in bonds, and his wife and son had also subscribed. Many of the creditors had agreed to take bonds for their debts. Memphis had not been visited sooner on account of her misfortunes and sorrows; but now that he beheld signs of recuperation and prosperity, he wanted her people to do their share. After fifty-three years of earnest work for the church, he did not want the great work of his life to be a failure. If it should be, he would never ask for another cent for the church; he had been begging for it for so many objects that in portions of Tennessee, when he was seen, the people would ask, "What's Bro. McFerrin doing here—going to take up a collection?" Some of them really thought he would take up a collection at a funeral. He had grown tired of begging. He had been at it till his wife had told him that he looked like a begga, and now he wanted to be a broker, and sell bonds. But the subscribers were not to be asked for the money till the entire three hundred thousand dollars had been subscribed. Those bonds were to be secured by property worth nearly that amount, with eight hundred thousand Methodists at the back of it. Unless the money could be raised, there would be a great auction—a Methodist auction—but, he wouldn't see it, he would hang his head and sneak away.

British Methodism.

The London Watchman of May 14, says:

Again—through the kind attention and promptitude of our correspondents—we are able to publish in our columns this week the numerical returns of more than three-fourths of the districts, the annual sessions of which commenced yesterday morning. It is well known that four or five of the thirty-four—into which the Connection at home is divided—usually hold their meetings later than the rest; and in the case of another, we have received information that, on account of unavoidable circumstances, the meetings has been postponed for a fortnight. We cannot, therefore, expect to present a full, if not complete, list much earlier. Thus far our fears have been realized, that the state of the Connection as to numbers would show a decrease, for we thought it very probable that the extent to which commercial depression, political influence, and social distress have prevailed throughout the year, would operate prejudicially upon the religious interests of our societies. We are thankful, however, to find that the losses occasioned by removals, and from various causes, amongst which we may place foremost temporal privation, have not been more numerous. We had feared, for instance, that the decrease in Cornwall would have been much larger, and we are pleasingly surprised to find that Liverpool has been able to maintain its ground, and that in Manchester and Sheffield the net loss has been so small, whereas in the York District there has been a considerable increase. On the whole, though there is much cause for humiliation and sorrow, there is reason for thankfulness and encouragement.

A number of camp meetings are announced in our columns. Seashore begins soon—July 16. Hennington, Crystal Springs, July 24. Let us urge our people to make ready. These occasions are for the salvation of sinners, for the revival of believers. They are a great public blessing, purifying and benefiting society, and arousing and building up the churches. Tent-holders should be on the ground betimes, and have their arrangements made, so that they can be profited by the religious exercises. The more zeal and spiritual life we carry with us to these meetings the better the meetings will be, and the more good we shall do. It may cost something to go, but it pays well. The conversion of your children and friends, and the refreshing to your own souls, are blessings that more than compensate for any expense, or for any amount of inconvenience. Troubled and inquiring souls will find the best helps at the camp meetings. There is there a concentration of power and of light rarely found anywhere else. There is the most direct preaching, the strongest faith in prayer, and a tide of earnest sympathy. It is the best place we know of for inquiring souls.

The Texas Christian Advocate of June 11, referring to our old friend and former yoke-fellow in the Louisiana Conference says:

We were pleased to meet in the city the past week Dr. R. H. Reed, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Sherman, Texas. He visits Galveston to recuperate. Though not in bad health, yet from overwork, has found it necessary to enjoy the pleasure and health giving qualities of the sea breeze. This is the first "vacation," the doctor informs us, of which he has availed himself since entering the ministry. We commend the example of his board of stewards in unanimously granting this vacation, and thus securing rest to an overworked pastor, to many other boards in our State where their pastor is in like condition.

Among the Editors.

—The time has not yet come when we can eliminate from Holy Writ the thirteenth of first Corinthians. At least, if any do so, it is not because its lessons are no longer needed. Heart-burnings, jealousies, anger, malice, wrath, mar the peace of society and the church simply because men persist in thinking evil, when they do not know it, and believing the worst of another when charity would hope all things. Uncharitableness infects all classes. Even "holy men of God" are not guiltless of this thing. Because a man may have fallen into circumstances of apparent disadvantage the solution at once adopted is, I have either been the object of neglect or put aside because another pressed a demand for the place which I ought to have filled. Meanwhile it is true that his interests were carefully considered, though the result has not satisfied his wishes or met his expectations. Nor did any one hustle him aside. The brother upon whom the grave suspicion rests is altogether innocent and perhaps unaware that he is the bane of a brother's peace.

In all let brotherly love begin and continue.

There are few circles in which charity is not wanting and seldom a gathering of friends where no word is spoken which it were not better to have left unsaid.

—Let us not neglect to send our children to our own Sunday-school. Make them familiar with the teachings of Methodism from their youth. Surround them with our catechisms and books and papers and periodicals; explain to them our doctrines and peculiarities. Let us insist on their attending service with us. Let us speak well of our pastor and of our brethren when we speak of them at all in their presence. As far as we can, let us clothe the house of God with such attractions as that it will win their confidence and love.

We would not have you to be a bigot, but we would have you to be a pronounced Methodist, to make the influence of your preference known and felt, especially in your own family circle. If your church is worthy of your own choice, it is certainly worthy of your hearty commendation to your child. The Christian principle that would attach you to a particular church is worth little, if it does not move you to use all the agencies, that God has put in play in your paternal character and relations, to commend that church to your child.

If any suggestion that may come to you as to how membership in another church may promote the material advantage of your child be dismissed as a dangerous temptation. Pray earnestly under such bereavement; lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. Not that membership in another church is a necessary evil, but that a selfish and worldly motive to such an end is an evil and as such unworthy the pious purpose of a single minded Christian.

—There is nothing that will wear out sooner than what may be called occasional sermons. When men seek an audience by preaching upon secular and quaint topics, they soon create an appetite that they cannot possibly long satisfy. The hearer will constantly demand a fresh sensation. Love, courtship, marriage, divorce, the theater, dancing, young people, married men, married women, old people, all such topics may be strung along for a period, but they become terribly wearisome and disappointing after a time. A short, earnest, well illustrated forcibly delivered discourse upon some aspect of the gospel, or some spiritual need of the human heart, will always awaken a response, and will be much less likely to become stale. A lyceum lecturer has only a limited series of taking discourses at best, and the most successful, with few exceptions, lose their popularity after a few years. But a devout gospel preacher, full of his theme and the "enthusiasm of humanity," will "bring forth fruit in his old age," and be reluctantly dismissed by the church to his higher reward.

A note from Rev. T. E. Hough, now at Vidalia, La., informs us that his health is wonderfully improved. Many will be glad to read this. We congratulate him, and hope his permanent restoration to health may be rapid. He thinks he will be able to visit the Seashore Camp Meeting. We hope so, and wish him much physical and spiritual refreshment.

ENTERTAINMENTS. Comprising directions for holiday merry-makings, new programmes for amateur performances, and many novel Sunday-school exercises. Collected and edited by Lizzie W. Champney. Boston: D. Lothrop & Co.

Performances and merry-makings may easily be overdone in Sunday-school and church entertainments. The tendency is to excess, and to the countenancing of tableaux and dramatic exhibitions, which only awaken an appetite for the theater and other pernicious diversions. The spirit of worldliness is more promoted by them than anything devout and spiritual. This work, so far as we have examined it, contains nothing objectionable in its matter. Whether this manner of entertaining and instructing by performances is advisable is the question. The volume contains great variety, and may be useful to Sunday-school managers and others. For sale by Lathrop & Wilkins, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

OLD CREOLE DAYS. By George W. Cable. New York: Charles Scribner & Sons.

There are seven stories in the volume to wit: 'Sieur George; 'Tite Poulette; Belles Demoiselles Plantation; Jean-Ah Poquelin; Madame Delicieuse; Cafe des Exiles; Posson Jone. The scenes are laid in New Orleans and Southern Louisiana, and the characters are well drawn. Those of us who are somewhat familiar with the localities and the people described will recognize the skill and fidelity of the author's delineations. This particular field is new in the literature of the day, and Mr. Cable has produced a very fresh and entertaining book. He has a genius for this kind of literary work. The author is a Louisianian, born and educated in New Orleans, and we are glad to congratulate him on the merit of his production.

THE CULTIVATION OF THE SENSES. Philadelphia: Eldredge & Brother.

This is No. 1 of a series entitled: "Manuals for Teachers." These Manuals were originally published in England, having been prepared at the request of the Literature Committee of the National Educational Society, by men distinguished at their several universities, and possessed of large experience as teachers. They have been carefully revised and adapted to the wants of American teachers. "The Cultivation of the Senses" is a very instructive work, excellent in arrangement, clear and compact in statement, and calculated to be helpful to teachers and to everybody. 12mo, 96 pages. Price, fifty cents. For sale by Lathrop & Wilkins, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

DANIEL QUORM AND HIS RELIGION. Second series. By Mark Guy Pearse. Illustrated by Charles Treshler. New York: Nelson & Phillips. Cincinnati: Hitchcock & Walden, 879.

The volume is without preface or introduction, and so the reader must make out the scenes of the story and people for himself. Daniel Quorm was a class-leader, a lay preacher, a shoemaker, living in a community of miners. He is an original and most unique character, sensible, quaint, evangelical. He and his associates use largely what we take to be the Yorkshire or Cornwall dialect. Daniel is, beyond doubt, an English Wesleyan. The book is the product of some master-hand. Pathetic, beautiful, spicy, spiritual, practical, heart-searching. It will entertain and profit all who have any taste for spiritual things. Get it and read it, and loan it to any anxious one you may know. 12mo, 225 pages. Elegantly bound; laid paper; illustrated.

STUDIES IN THEISM. By Borden P. Bowne. New York: Phillips & Hunt. Cincinnati: Hitchcock & Walden.

Knowledge and skepticism, knowledge and belief, postulates of scientific knowlege, mechanism and teleology, the conservation of energy, substances and their interaction, Theism and Pantheism, relation of God to the world, the relation of God to truth and righteousness, the soul, spiritualism or materialism, postulates of ethics, are the titles of the several chapters, and give the general scope of the author's work. Prof. Bowne is professor of philosophy in Boston University, and is the author of an able work on "The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer." He is an acute and luminous thinker, and expresses himself with simplicity and clearness. His studies on theism are a valuable contribution to the solution of the questions which are specially prominent at the present time in theology, philosophy and science. 12mo, 414 pages.

TYPICAL FORESHADOWINGS IN GENESIS, OF THE WORLD TO COME, AND THE DIVINE PREPARATION FOR IT. By William Lincoln. Published by J. A. Whipple, Believers' Book Rooms, Boston.

So far as we can gather from a brief examination, the author is a pre-millenarian, and the views of this class of expositors is the keynote of the typical foreshadowings. He treats of the Lord's way with Adam, with Enoch, with Noah, with Abraham, with Isaac, with Jacob, with Joseph. These were all typical characters. With much that is rather fanciful and far fetched, the book contains some very suggestive and valuable reflections. Paper cover, 12mo, 267 pages. For sale by Lathrop & Wilkins, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

—THE air of perfection, cleanliness and home-like comfort which is so apparent at the American House, Boston, is one of the characteristic features of that well-regulated establishment. To those disposed to economize this popular hotel offers an opportunity seldom found at so thoroughly a first class house, having reduced its rates to $3 and $3 50 per day.

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER.—Read the testimony of distinguished men respecting this water. "For malarial poisons" and all blood diseases peculiar to women there is none its equal." E. E. Lyons, 12 and 14 Camp street, is the agent from whom you can get our supply.

DESTRUCTION AND RECONSTRUCTION.—Dr's valuable work by Gen. Richard Taylor, of the Confederate Army, giving his personal experience of the late war, should be in the hands of every one in the South. See advertisement, and then enclose $2 to Lathrop & Wilkins, who will forward the volume.

TRUNKS.—Before you take that long summer jaunt, be sure you have a trunk that will defy baggage smashers. If you want our advice in the matter, we'd refer you to S. Baum and wife, 551 Magazine street. We will give you all the necessary information as to ways, lines and dates. Those of us who have visited the above-named establishment will tell you it is cheap enough, in all means.

COOPERAGE.—We invite the attention of sugar planters and others to the many solid superior advantages of the work done by P. Hirsch, Nos. 50 to 60 North Peters street, and advise them as a matter that interests them particularly, to make a note of it, and to communicate with this reliable gentleman. He has been engaged in this business for a number of years, and is at present doing a large stock.

CARRIAGES AND HARNESS.—If you want any kind of a carriage, phaeton or buggy, the house of J. A. Jahn & Co., 35 Carondelet street, is the best in the South to get your wants supplied at. We have known this concern for years, and for honorable and straightforward dealing there is no house on the continent that stands higher. See advertisement.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE, STAUNTON, Va.—We take pleasure in directing attention to the advertisement of this popular seminary. It is located in one of the healthiest climates in the world. It presents attractions unsurpassed. Its buildings are home-like and elegant, grounds attractive. Scenery grand.

This school is attended by boarding pupils from seventeen different States. It has acquired this great popularity not by the religious management of President Harris, whose mature scholarship and long and successful experience make him one of the most distinguished educators of the Union. This school requires strict economy, especially in dress. With these advantages we are not surprised that this popular institution enjoys a national reputation, and draws its pupils from all sections of the Union. See advertisement.

THE HEROINE.—The Fourth of July comes on Friday this year, and deserves the keeping of such a holiday by every man, woman and child in America. For this part of the country the well to do old people, a most charming opportunity of passing the happiest holiday imaginable in an excursion on the fine and fast Steamer Heroine to Mandeville and return. She will make three trips on the Fourth. A most excellent dinner will be had for fifty cents, or one can have nearly the same thing, Cold Meats, Salads, &c., for a dollar. Capt. W. G. Coyle deserves the patronage of every pleasure seeker and no man should miss the opportunity on that coming Friday of availing themselves of this entirely gentlemanly boat. Take pleasure trips, fellow citizens. See the advertisement elsewhere in our paper for hours of departure and mind that you get a ticket for the first excursion.

LOUISVILLE AND CINCINNATI SHORT LINE.—The attention of our friends and the travelling public recalled to the merits of the above line. Its popularity is constantly increasing, and steadily on the increase. The efforts of the managers to make the road the favorite fully appreciated by the travelling public. No road has a better or smoother track. No road has better coaches. No road offers better facilities in the number of through trains equipped with Pullman palace sleeping cars. S. S. Parker, general passenger agent, has long been connected with this road, and known throughout the whole country as one of the most enterprising and reliable railroad men in the country, one who manages the details of his important office with the skill, intelligence and fidelity for which he is so justly appreciated.

THE Chicago and Alton Railroad still continues to retain the popular Through Line to Chicago and all Northern and Northwestern points. This company have given much attention to the wants of the traveling public, and now are prepared to give their patrons elegance and rapid transportation in their palace day and Pullman sleepers. The employees are always found courteous and obliging, as the management will not keep those who are not in their employ. If you contemplate a trip North do not fail to take the Chicago and Alton Line, and enjoy the lovely scenery of Illinois. S. H. Knight, Esq., is the ticket agent, corner Fourth and Pine streets, St. Louis, that would a more polite and affable gentleman never existed.

LOUISVILLE AND GREAT SOUTH RAILROAD.—The news we have had the pleasure of traveling over this road without testimony to the unsurpassed accommodations on this line. Aside from the pleasure of taking this route, many passengers choose it in view of personal comfort in travel. Those who may have business to transact with the general passenger agent, Col. C. P. Atmore, will find in him a most courteous and intelligent gentleman, and an officer well calculated to work up the business of his department in a proportion of such a proportion. Indeed the courtesy and attention to the comfort of passengers on the part of officers, conductors and employees generally is one of the most desirable features in the management of the road.

TOURISTS' ATTENTION!—The tide of summer excursion travel that for two or three years past has set toward the resorts of the North west, with its grand scenery of mountain, lake and river, its dangerous, charming retreats and cozy nooks, will this season reach its flood, owing to the increased facilities extended to tourists by the wide awake and enterprising management of our popular Great Jackson Route. The time has been reduced one day, and with no change of cars to Chicago, and but one change to points beyond, a trip to the great Northwest is now made with as much ease, and in as short a time as formerly, to Baden Springs or the lake shore villages. Already considerate fathers are securing accommodations, at desirable points of rest, for wearied mammas and charming daughters worn down by their efforts in the cause of charity during the past, more than usually exciting season, and besiege the ticket office for choice sections in the sleeping cars. In another week the travel will have fairly started, and we predict a big season for Jackson Route. Excursions will be run to accommodate. Sale of excursion tickets will begin on May 20. They will be good to return until November 1, thus giving ample time to go by the summer and fall seasons. Full information, with descriptive circulars and guide books profusely illustrated, in the highest style of the printer's art, may be had on application at A. H. Sheldon, ticket agent, 22 Camp street, corner of Common.

Farm, Garden and Household.

PROTECTION AGAINST CROWS.—Your Maine correspondent asks, "Do the crows pull your corn up?" Having planted corn more or less for over seventy years, I answer for myself, They do not pull up mine. In 1846 I found a remedy that I have used without a single failure from that time to this. Some have pretended that they applied this remedy, when it was found that they mistook some of its essential parts and it failed. They denounced it with a single trial, whereas if they had seen the operation performed they would have succeeded, and would have called it a God-given gift. Brother M. says, "Never cut your corn with dew, as rennet is a hypochondriac cure, preventing it from swelling or sprouting." In the next sentence he acknowledges that was wrong, or he says it did come up with the other planting. So it was only a matter of time, and this no doubt was caused by the moisture.

MY RECIPE.—For one peck of corn take a gill of tar, put the tar into a kettle, turn in three quarts of boiling water, stir it one minute—this will dissolve the tar. As soon as possible add the corn, stir it all the more as the water, which may be one minute or possibly a trifle more than enough, will cool. Add a little plaster of Paris to the corn, stirring it well to separate the corn, spreading it out thoroughly as unprepared corn, then spread it and scatter it.

Almost every person, unless he sows it done, is afraid to use the slag water, and advising stories that will not cause the tar to adhere plaster to the corn. Will some have to try this and if tested, prevent the germination. Your corn will be a few days longer in coming up; but this is to tenfold in yielding a good growth to the roots.—Cor. Germantown Telegraph.

SALSIFY, or Oyster plant is an excellent vegetable for spring and winter use, but not even one in a hundred do well with it. We have failed ourselves in getting more than half a crop while at other times we have had abundant yields. We find that the roots, if very large, do not grow much the first. The seed should be sown in drills or rows, from eight to ten inches apart, and when sufficiently grown, thinned out, two or three inches in a row. The ground for salsify should be very deep and well enriched, and the soil a rich loam. The long roots sometimes sometimes from three to twenty inches. They are, we think, best left in the ground through the winter, and taken out when desired the same as Carrots. They are boiled and a batter sauce made for them; or they are cut in thin shred and fried like oysters; or they can be grated, formed in the shape of oysters, mixed with the yolk of eggs and fried, in which way they are the most desirable.—Germantown Telegraph.

IMPROVED FRUIT.—Improving fruits or flowers without gratifying the intelligence that works upon them seems to be poorly understood. It is admitted that the original types of our best varieties were once wild ones often with a very small fruit, and that the arts of man, the gardener, has improved them until results have been reached that have developed the wild sour crab to the finest pippin. How is it done? At some stage of the progress cross-breeding no doubt came in part of the process, but in seeding that there must have been variations or changes originated.

In producing trees or plants two methods are employed; 1st, by seeds; 2nd, by developing a part of the parent plant into a new specimen, as by grafting, budding or from cuttings, layers, sprouts, etc. By these latter methods the individuality of the parent tree or plant is preserved, its identity maintained, so that whether it is a Golden Russet apple tree grown from a bud or graft, or whether it is a Wilson strawberry grown from a runner, all they are true to name. Were it otherwise nurserymen and florists would be launched upon a sea of uncertainty in regard to varieties. Now, if by any chance of culture, soil or other influence a tree or plant of a well known sort seemed to grow multitudinous fruits than its neighbors, it must not be taken for granted that plants grown from such specimens would be superior to the others of the same kind. The plant itself being only a developed part of the original must have and always does possess the characteristics and peculiarities of the variety to which it belongs. The superior development of fruit is a matter of vitality, health, vigor or constitution, arising from the conditions under which it exists of soil, fertility, cultivation, etc.

Still some very good men have been deceived in this matter of thinking a fine plant of a variety would give a better and decidedly improved lot of plants. The Mammoth Cluster rasberry was introduced, not as a new variety, but as a sport of the Manual. After many years culture it is pretty generally understood that there is no practical difference. Indeed we never saw the least in ours.

For the production of new sorts we must therefore look entirely to the seeds. Before new sorts can be produced from seeds the tendency to change must have been established or must be developed, while the seed is growing. Without crossing or hybridizing how is it done? How may we produce a desirable result in seedling? we may now ask, what the product will be?—Cor. Germantown Telegraph.

BOILED EGGS are laid on the bark near the roots of peach trees in early summer, which when soon hatch, and the worms find their way into the bark. At this time, say in June or August, they are easily found, and are easily removed. Coal ashes, or anything else thrown around the trunk that will tend to prevent them from the borers may do some good, but it is much easier to destroy the worms when small than to build mounds to keep them away.

LEMON ACIDOUS.—The principal powder-ed ingredient in eggs, whipped to a froth and rubbed over boots and shoes, will produce a fine polish, and prevent the leather from cracking.

E. P. POWELL, in the Rural New Yorker, says: "I find that nothing pays better than grapes. The worry of the people will be at the time of dusting the bushes with white hellebore, thus losing their sale, yet nearly every one reads and will use a few pounds of coffee, or for immediate use. The powder also is invaluable in hot weather and almost every one craves it."

IN those deep heavy soils, coal ashes will be found an invaluable sort for their effect, though rather mechanical, in mixing loose and lasting. Eighteen bushels equal to the weight of stable manure. Those who have no other use of their coal ashes can use them to advantage in filling in low spots on the road. They are almost equal to gravel for this purpose.

WASHING SILKS, LACES, etc.—Take two wash bowls; put some soft soap in each. Wash by kneading and squeezing the goods in one bowl and rinse in the other. Wipe with a soft, dry cloth and iron immediately with an iron not very hot. In washing dress goods do one breadth at a time, as it takes quicker. All silks, except very dark colors, wash well; also, silk laces and gloves, etc., that can not be washed in water. Do not throw away what is left, but set it aside; put it into a bottle to wash with again, using fresh benzine for rinsing. One gallon, costing thirty cents, is sufficient for many silk dresses. A piece of woolen cloth wet with benzine will permanently remove grease spots from carpets, etc.

TO BOIL SWEET-BREADS.—Soak an hour in salt and water. Drain. Parboil. Drain, roll in butter and broil. Turn often and each time they are turned roll them in a dish of hot melted butter, so they need not become hard and dried.

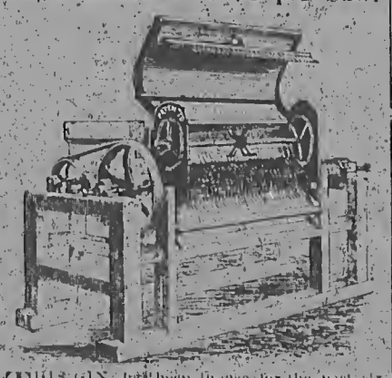
DANIEL PRATT'S IMPROVED
"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin,
PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.
Price Reduced to $4 per Saw.



THIS GIN has been in use for the past six seasons, and several recent improvements have been added. It obviates all friction at the end of the cotton box, prevents the roll from breaking, and gives a larger yield of lint from the same quantity of seed than any other Gin in use. The self-revolving head lightens the draft and causes the Gin to run easier with less driving power, thus adding a great deal more work with the same time. We guarantee a Steam or Animal power, less than any other Gin. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, producing cotton on this account of a greater market value. This improved value, given by length of staple with extra production of lint, added to increased amount of work done, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every 6 to 8 bales ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

FEEDERS and CONDENSERS with latest improvements also made by the Daniel Pratt Gin Co. to work with these Gins. Send for descriptive circulars.

WHY FLOWERS TURN TO THE SUN.—Wiesner has presented to the Vienna Academy a monograph upon heliotropism and geotropism in plants. After a historical sketch the author treats of the influence of light on heliotropism and shows that with decreasing intensity of light the strength of the heliotropic effect increases to a certain point and beyond this point decreases. The lower limit of light intensity coincides with the lower limit of heliotropic effect for the stoppage of growth in length while the upper limit does not coincide or only occasionally coincides with the upper limit of heliotropic effect for any growth in length. In the case of very sensitive heliotropic plants the upper limit of light intensity for stoppage of growth in length lies higher, and in less sensitive plants lower than the upper limit for growth in length. He then next takes up and considers the relation between the refrangibility of rays and their heliotropic effect and shows that portion of very sensitive heliotropic plants, as vicia sativa, curve in all lights, even in ultra red and ultra violet, except the yellow. Experiments on the joint action of heliotropism and geotropism are next described and the author concludes that the phenomenon of heliotropism is due to no equal growth upon unequally lighted sides of the plant.—Harper's Magazine.

A NEW PROJECT FOR THE CREATION OF AN INLAND SEA has been advanced by General Fremont. The removal of a barrier ridge, he affirms, would admit the waters of the Gulf of California into an ancient basin, and would create a navigable inland sea 200 miles long, 50 miles broad, and 300 feet deep. This piece of engineering would convert what is now a desert region into a commercial highway, and greatly improve the surrounding country. The region selected for the undertaking is an arid and sandy plain, lying between Arizona and Southern California, and the plan of sending into this depression the waters of the Gulf of California is to cut two canals, one ten and the other fifteen miles long, to be connected by a lake twenty miles long, which exists midway between the head of the Gulf and the basin of the proposed sea. Abundant geological evidence exists to prove that the sea recently filled this same basin. One million dollars is estimated by Fremont to execute the work, and General Fremont is reported to have visited Washington on the purpose of securing the appointment of a commission of engineers to make the necessary surveys to demonstrate its entire practicability, as a preliminary to presenting the scheme to Congress for an appropriation.

THE ORIGIN OF EXISTING FLORAS.—In the report to the Royal Society, Baron Ettingshausen says that the existing floras of the earth are descendants of the plants which constitute the Tertiary flora. The Tertiary strata contain the original species of the recent floras and plant forms of all parts of the globe. Moreover, in each of the recent floras are to be perceived the elements of their common origin. They have, however, been more or less changed, and have developed into manifold forms. The fossil plants, according to the Baron very much like the living ones, the varieties of the fossil plants corresponding with what are now regarded as species. The varieties, for an instance, of fossil pine, called Pinus pinites, so entirely correspond with many of the recent species of Pinus, that the former must be regarded as the original forms of the latter.

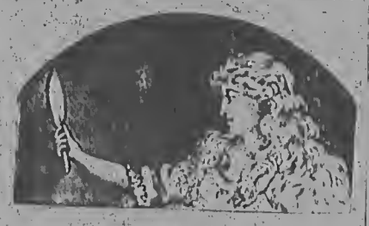
The Eocene flora of Great Britain, to which the author has given special attention, is remarkable for a series of ferns of tropical character. These have been discovered at Bournemouth, Bovey Tracey and elsewhere.

—At the recent meeting of the National Academy of Sciences, Professor Pickering gave an account of a new application of the photometer in observing the eclipses of Jupiter's satellites. Instead of merely noting the moment when the satellite disappears, it is possible with the photometer to determine pretty accurately the instant when its light is reduced to a certain percentage of the original amount, and this to obtain, during the gradual obscuration of the satellite, a series of observations, instead of a single one. This will give a final result of far greater accuracy than the old method.

The expectation is that by observations of this kind the constant of aberration and the time occupied by light in passing from the sun to the earth may be determined much more precisely than hitherto.

A single specimen of an unnamed plant was seen by Professor Gray in Michaux's herbarium, in Paris, some years ago, and found to be, Gray to be a new genus, and which he named Shortia uniflora. No more of it was found by any botanist till a plant collector sent some specimens for a name to Dr. Gray last year, which proved to be this.

The rediscovery has excited much interest among botanists. It is now believed to be less rare than was at first supposed, and the hope is kindled among botanists living next to explorations in the Southern Alleghanies. Professors Gray and Sargent and Messrs. W. M. Canby and J. H. Redfield are to start on the third of June for the "promising" land.



Ayer's
Hair Vigor,
FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS NATURAL VITALITY AND COLOR.

It is a most agreeable dressing, which causes luxuriant growth, prevents premature baldness and checks the falling of the hair. It restores, to each hair-follicle from which it has disappeared, the nourishment which is necessary to its existence, and the consequence is that the hair is thickened, and falling off ceases. Though not always restored to its original color, the hair never fades away under the use of this preparation. Its effects are permanent. Nothing can be more harmless than this elegant dressing. Its ingredients are known to the medical profession everywhere, and have received the highest commendation from the most eminent chemists. Containing neither oil nor dye, it will not soil the finest cambric. It imparts a healthy vitality to the hair, which preserves it from premature decay. As a remedy for all scalp diseases, it is unrivaled. Its occasional use will keep the scalp free from dandruff and itching, and prevent the hair from becoming dry and harsh, however long it may be worn. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are entirely destroyed, or where the glands are decayed; but wherever there is vitality in the follicles, this Vigor will restore the glands to healthy action. Where the hair is thin, weak, or otherwise diseased, it imparts vitality and strength, renders it durable, and promotes a new growth, even in cases where the glands are not decayed, when baldness, weakness, or otherwise diseased conditions of the hair have existed for years, this Vigor will restore the glands to healthy action. Where the hair is thinned, and the roots are decayed, but not entirely destroyed, this Vigor will restore a new growth of hair, though not always restored to its original color. The falling of the hair immediately ceases, and a new growth of hair appears, the glands are restored to healthy action, and the hair is thickened, strengthened, and invigorated. Where the hair is entirely destroyed, this Vigor will restore the glands to healthy action, and cause a new growth of hair, though not always restored to its original color. The falling of the hair immediately ceases, and a new growth of hair appears, the glands are restored to healthy action, and the hair is thickened, strengthened, and invigorated.

As a Dressing for Ladies' Hair, the Vigor is incomparable. It is colorless, contains neither oil nor dye, and will not soil white cambric. It imparts a delightful and lasting perfume, and is the article for the toilet it is recommended and unsurpassed in its excellence.

THE TIDY HOUSEWIFE.

The careful, tidy housewife, when she is giving her house its Spring cleaning, should bear in mind that the dear inmates of her house are more precious than houses, and that their systems need cleansing by purifying the blood, regulating the stomach and bowels to prevent and cure the diseases arising from spring maiaria and miasma, and she should know that there is nothing that will do it so perfectly and surely as Hop Bitters, the purest and best of all medicines. See other column.—Adv

M. Solelilet, who returned recently from his travels in Africa, reports favorably of the negro population and the Sultan of Segou, in which country he spent three months as peaceably as if he had been in France. He says that the Niger at Segou Sokkitoun, 2 000 miles from the mouth, is about 900 feet wide, and that access is easy to traders. He returns shortly to determinate the best route for a railway across the Sahara.

The Peabody Fund in London, according to the report of 1878, has done great good. George Peabody gave $2,500,000, which, with $1,000,000 additional for rents and invested moneys, has provided 5,000 rooms for the laboring classes. The death rate is considerably lower than in any other part of the metropolis.

The rapidity with which PERSONS TAKE ON FLESH while under the influence of these pills, indicates their adaptability to nourish the body, hence their efficacy in curing nervous debility, melancholy, dyspepsia, wasting of the muscles, sluggishness of the liver, chronic constipation, and imparting health & strength to the system. SEASHORE CAMP GROUND.—The regular annual camp-meeting on Seashore Camp Ground, for 1879, will commence on Wednesday, July 16, and continue from eight to ten days.

This camp-ground is situated two miles west of Biloxi, Miss., and near midway from New Orleans to Mobile, fronting directly upon the Gulf of Mexico, less than one hundred yards from the sea, and less than five hundred from the New Orleans and Mobile Railroad. Occupying an elevated position it is dry, clean and healthful, free from fevers, agues and epidemics. Shaded by a grove of rich and various foliage, and looking out upon the "wide, wide waves," it enjoys the cool, refreshing summer breezes of the sea, while the flowing waters of several mineral springs furnish free supplies of pleasant healthgiving drink.

Comfortable wooden tents or cottages of various dimensions, for individuals or families, are for rent on terms considerably reduced from former years.

The necessary but plain furniture for the same can be had at reasonable charge. Comfortable lodgings are furnished at fifty cents per night, and good board at the restaurant at fifty cents each for breakfast and supper, and seventy-five cents for dinner, or $1 50 per day.

Reduced rates of fare and freight have been secured on the railroads.

On the New Orleans and Mobile Railroad the fare will be the same as last year, $3 20 from New Orleans, and $2 65 from Mobile, for the round trip, and tickets will be on sale at the depots on and after Monday morning, July 7, and will be good to the thirty-first, inclusive. Freight will be received at the freight depots from the twelfth to the twenty-eighth of July, inclusive, and be transported each way at half the usual rates.

The New Orleans, Chicago and St. Louis Railroad will furnish at all points on the road through tickets to the camp ground and return at five cents per mile over their road, with the addition of $3 20 to cover fare on the New Orleans and Mobile road.

From the Observer: "Mr. Ross, father of the lost boy, Charlie Ross, has been to the mountains of North Carolina to look at another child, and to find that it was not his son. It is now five years since search for the boy began; he has seen six hundred children, and written thousands of letters, and all that he knows about the mystery is this: the lad was alive when the burglars Mosher and Douglas were killed. The afflicted parents continue to receive, as they are fully entitled to, the tender sympathy of all who have read of their loss, and of its peculiar circumstances.

The papers all over the country contain indices of the remarkable virtues of Mrs. Hyatt's Hair Restorer, and there are scores of living witnesses in St. Louis who take pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of the Restorer. Mrs. Hyatt's principle is the most reasonable, because she proceeds on the well-based supposition that the hair germ never dies while life exists in the person, and that it is only necessary to stimulate the germ to produce a satisfactory growth. PATIENT.

I was not patient in that olden time,
When my mortal soul heart began to long
For bliss that day to grind its reach; my prime
Was wild, impulsive, passionate and strong.
I could not wait for happiness and love,
Heaven sent to come and nestle to my breast;
I could not realize how time might prove
That patient waiting would avail me best.
Let me be happy now, my heart cried out,
In my own way, and with my chosen lot;
The future is too dark and full of doubt,
For me to carry, and I can't wait.
Take all my blessing all I am and have,
But, gave that glimpse of heaven before the grave.

Ah me! God heard my wayward soul's cry,
And, taking pity on my blinded heart,
He bade the angel of strong grief draw nigh,
Who ordered my lesson in his dark part.
I drank we, the wine cup to the bitter lees,
With strong submission and a broken will.
Then humbled straightway fell upon my knees
And God both knew my heart is kneeling still.

I have grow patient, seeking rest to those Who own kind help to take that God shall send.
In which, if what I long and should lose,
I know the loss will work some blessed end,
Some better fate to mine than I
Could ever compass, dormouth the sky.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, July 1.—During the session of Congress which terminated to-day, 727 bills and forty-four resolutions were introduced in the senate, 2,465 bills and 119 resolutions in the house.

WASHINGTON, July 1.—The following is the letter of McKinzie's quinine bill, which passed the senate and became a law to-day:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall and may be lawful for the secretary of the treasury to cause to be manufactured, at the laboratories of the United States, in the city of New Orleans, and at such other laboratories as may hereafter be established, a sufficient quantity of sulphate of quinine to supply the wants of the people of the United States, at a price not exceeding one dollar per ounce, and to cause the same to be distributed to druggists throughout the United States, under such regulations as he may prescribe.

WASHINGTON, July 2.—Attorney General Devens has written the following letter to Gen. Matthews, United States marshal, in reply to a telegram asking whether the latter should continue to serve Warrants in Garfield cases, as he is ordered:

DEAR SIR: I advise you to perform the duties of your office, which you are sworn to well and faithfully to the extent of your power.

The law prescribes those duties and affixes no fees as compensation therefor. No provision for payment of the fees of marshals or their deputies has been made, nor can I make any contract or promise that this provision shall hereafter be made. But your performance of your duties, so as far as the law contemplates that they are to be compensated by fees, seems to me to constitute good ground of obligation that the United States who are the service of deputies are required, and expect duties are to be made. I recognize the difficulties you may have to encounter. In all these matters, however, you will have to rely upon your expectation of future legislation by congress that shall be just to you. All other expenses, except the fees of marshals and their deputies, have been provided for.

CHAS. DEVENS, Attorney General.

ATLANTA, Ga., July 1.—Clarke's cotton factory and mill, sixteen miles east of Atlanta, has been burned. Insurance $30,000. The property was valued at $75,000.

SHREVEPORT, La., July 1.—At Mansfield, La., at 4 p. m., on Monday, a fire was discovered on the roof of Dr. Cunningham's drug store, which spread to the four adjoining stores, destroying all but one store in the block.

GALVESTON, July 1.—The first bale of cotton of this season's growth, was shipped today by C. Eckhardt & Sons, of Yorktown, Dewitt county, to Heidenheimer Bros., Galveston; it reaches here to-morrow. This is the earliest bale on record, and came from the same county July 3, 1860.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 1.—In the senate Mr. Eaton called up the adjournment resolution and moved to amend by fixing Thursday, July 1, at 5 p. m., as the time of final adjournment. The adjournment resolution, as amended, was passed at 1:30 p. m.

Mr. Harris moved to reconsider the vote by which the free quinine bill was referred to the finance committee yesterday. Mr. Morrill spoke in opposition, and Mr. Beck in support. The motion was agreed to, and the bill was passed by viva voce vote. No one voting in the negative.

At 2:45 p. m., a message from the house announced its concurrence in the senate amendments to the final adjournment resolution.

The joint committee which had been appointed to wait on the president and announce the impending adjournment, then reported that the latter had no further communications for congress, whereupon the president pro tem, at 5 p. m., declared the senate adjourned sine die.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 1.—In the house the political assessments bill went over without action, in consequence of dilatory motions by the Republicans.

The senate amendments to the house adjournment resolution were concurred in. The message from the senate announcing the passage of the free quinine bill was received with applause.

After the passage of some unimportant bills by unanimous consent, the house took a recess until four o'clock. Upon reassembling, Mr. Gibson, of Louisiana, moved to suspend the Mississippi River Commission bill, so as to enable the president to appoint any of the commissioners to be president of the commission. Lost for want of a quorum.

The joint committee then reported that the president had no further communications, and at five p. m., the speaker declared the house adjourned sine die.

NEW YORK, July 2.—Articles of incorporation were filed to-day by the New York Steam Power and Heating Company, the organization of which Gen. Spinola was the promoter, whose object is to convey steam throughout the streets of the city, to be used for motive power, for cooking purposes, for heating houses and for melting snow from the streets in winter. The incorporators include some of the wealthies and best known citizens of New York. Capital stock is fixed at $5,000,000, divided into fifty thousand shares.

PENSACOLA, July 3.—A special dispatch sent from this place on the 29th of June intimating that the Pensacola quarantine might be abandoned and yellow fever allowed to effect the nation is causing alarm in the interior, and for the benefit of all interior cities, and the owners and shippers of the remarkably large fleet now at Pensacola, for this season of the year, and vessels yet to arrive, the following card, with a large number of signatures has been issued:

The undersigned citizens of Pensacola denounce the dispatch in question as calculated to injure the commerce of our port and as not representing correctly the situation. Our port is perfectly healthy—not a case of yellow fever has been here in five years. Vessels from healthy ports are allowed to come to the city without hindrance or detention, but vessels from all infected ports are compelled to take care at quarantine station. This state of affairs will be maintained, and if the present board of health fails to do its duty the citizens and taxpayers can and will make the quarantine effective.

STARKVILLE, Miss., July 3.—This is a city of no mean importance to the history of Starkville, in fact, to the state of Mississippi, in an educational point of view.

Capt. C. M. Rehush has filed his bond of twenty thousand four hundred dollars, which has been accepted, and has begun work to-day on the Agricultural and Mechanical College.

He has obtained the services of Mr. P. D. Odell, who will superintend the making and laying of brick. The site upon which the college is to be located is peculiarly adapted to the purpose. It is a beautiful promontory, a high, picturesque grove, gradually receding for a mile to the railroad.

PASS CHRISTIAN, July 1.—The Mississippi Mills have sent to a single New York railroad 1,000 bales of cotton, to be delivered this day. This is the largest sailing order ever issued by Southern mills.

The largest fleet of ocean going vessels ever known in Pensacola harbor, is now in port.

ST. PAUL, Minn., July 1.—The storm Wednesday night was the heaviest ever known in Minnesota. Five persons are dead, and fifteen are injured, the greatest number since the signal service observations commenced. Fatalities are reported in all portions of the state. Reports are being received this morning, and the list will be greatly increased. Crops are badly damaged. Many barns, stables, etc., were destroyed. Reports from Dakota indicate that the storm extended over that state and Northwestern Wisconsin, in which regions there was a great fall of rain and hail, accompanied by thunder and lightning. Details come in slowly, but indicate damage. At Yasa, Goodhue county, Minn., seven persons were killed and thirty injured by cyclone and falling buildings. No particulars have been received from there yet. Two persons were killed in Winnebago and Mountain Lake by lightning. Ten Wing reports $10,000 damage to property in that city. Every town in the southern and eastern portions of the state suffered heavily, but details are still wanting. At Minneiska hailstones as large as hens' eggs fell, causing great destruction to crops. At Menomonee, Wis., a house was carried away by the storm, and two persons who were in it killed. More since been heard from.

ST. PAUL, Minn., July 2.—Another heavy rain and hail storm swept over various parts of the state yesterday, doing great damage to crops, especially in Minnesota Valley.

FOREIGN.

KINGSTON, JAMAICA, July 2.—Advices from Port au Prince, Hayti, state that the palace fired upon the senate. The senators then and many were slain. Fighting continues.

LONDON, July 2.—The Etoile Belge states that on Sunday last a placard was posted on the wall of the royal palace of Locken, three miles from Brussels, threatening the king with death if he ratifies the bill recently passed by the Belgian parliament depriving the clergy of the control of elementary education.

SIMLA, July 3.—The prospects of a cessation of the famine in Cashmere are gradually improving. Spring crops look slightly better. The area of autumn sowing exceeds expectations. The importation of grain is proceeding satisfactorily.

CAIRO, July 3.—A new Egyptian ministry has been formed under Cherif Pasha.

STORM CITY, July 4.—A tornado struck the southeastern part of Elkhorn at half-past five o'clock last evening, demolishing three dwellings, many barns, storehouses, etc. Only one person injured as far as known.

BERLIN, July 4.—It is announced that the old Catholics are henceforth to be treated in Germany as part of the Catholic Church. It is presumed, from this, that the old Catholics are to enjoy the advantages of being recognized by the State.

CAPE TOWN, June 17, via Madeira, July 6.—The troops have commenced an advance from Fort Pearson to Fort Chelmsford; and a junction has almost been effected with Col. Wood, who is also advancing.

The rumor that an armistice had been agreed to is not confirmed.

LONDON, July 6.—The daily Telegraph's dispatch, dated Cape Town, June 17, says: The Tugela column advances on the 20th inst. The 81st Regiment has evacuated Fort Chelmsford. It will defend the frontier and is combined with the advance shortly.

HAVANA, July 7.—The English steamer from Vera Cruz brings advices from the city of Mexico to the 30th of June. On the 28th part of the crew of the Mexican war steamer Libertad, in the harbor of Vera Cruz, mutinied and seized the steamer while the commander was on shore. Simultaneously some of the officers of the Vera Cruz garrison attempted to raise a revolt at the instigation of some discontented persons. Nine of the rebels were killed. The steamer Libertad went to sea. The steamer Independencia and other steamers had gone in pursuit, and she will doubtless be overtaken. Accounts of events in Vera Cruz are very conflicting.

The Government has apparently mastered the situation, but since the revolt of the garrison a reign of terror has prevailed there. All Vera Cruz merchants are hostile to the Government in consequence of the passage of a law against contraband trade, and have ever since been in a state of quiet revolt. It is generally believed that the nine revolters who were killed were assassinated in the guard house, on the pretext that they had attempted to escape.

KINGSTON, Jamaica, July 7.—Advices from Hayti, says Port au Prince is in flames. Business is suspended; blocks of buildings in ashes. The Custom house is closed in consequence of the revolution.

LONDON, July 7.—The London correspondent of the Liverpool Courier says: An agreement was signed Saturday on behalf of the original promoters of the Panama canal scheme, vesting their rights in M. de Lesseps, as the representative of future shareholders of an inter-oceanic canal company. Subscriptions for £750,080 in £20 shares, will be opened in London, Paris, Frankfort and New York, simultaneously, in about a fortnight.

PANAMA, June 28.—Lima advices to the 8th of June report a battle at Caloma and capture of that point by the allied forces.

The Chilian losses are stated to be 1500 killed. No official report of the action has been received and the statement is discredited. An insignificant encounter is reported at Quilhaqui, on the River Gua; some killed others captured. Campero was reported within twenty miles of Caloma on the 16th, resting preparatory to an attack on that place.

FIELD NOTES.

ALABAMA.

GAYLESVILLE, ALA., June 27.—No church news especially; some pleasant quarterly meetings; have not been on the district much in the last eight weeks. My little son, nine years old, had his arm broken more than two weeks since. For a while we despaired not only of limb, but life also. The prospect is that life can be saved even if the limb is lost; possibly can save both.

Yours truly, W. L. CLIFTON.

GUNTERSVILLE, ALA., June 30.—The Guntersville District Conference will be held here July 25-27. Sermon by Rev. J. T. Morris, on the evening of the twenty-fourth. Our church has been repainted and repaired at considerable cost, and now it is nice and comfortable. The Sunday-school is prosperous. We all have very dry, heath of country good. Your brother, J. W. NEWMAN.

OAKEY STREAK, ALA., June 30.—Oakey Streak circuit has in it the counties of Butler, Crenshaw and Covington; has seven appointments, 270 members, four churches, four class meetings and five Sunday schools. The spiritual condition of the circuit we think is improving. We are praying for and expect a gracious revival. Crops are good and well worked. Very few degrees of it is part of the country. Our protracted meetings commence next week. Hope to have a good time.

J. B. NELSON.

LAFAYETTE, ALA., July 1.—Our District Conference was held at Alexander City, June 27-29. It was an occasion of interest. All the pastoral charges represented, though three of the pastors were absent. There is an evident improvement in the interest of Methodist Sunday-schools. There is generally an improvement in all the interests of the district, except in churches. No much improvement in our charge in all. President Mass, of Tuskegee Female College, and Mason, of Lagrange, were with us. We had some glorious meetings.

JOHN R. STEVENSON.

ROBINSON SPRINGS, ALA., July 3.—This circuit has five churches, one parsonage, 395 members, five Sunday-schools, 165 pupils. No parsonage. Peace, liberal condition of the church is tolerably good. We have prayer-meetings and class meetings at some places. Wheat crop is tolerably good. Corn and cotton fine. Seasons favorable. Crops have not suffered much for rain this year. We think that the people will have no excuse for not paying the preacher this year. Prospects for revivals good. Quarterage very slow. Truly,

S. H. NETTLES.

MISSISSIPPI.

HAZLEHURST, MISS., June 30.—July 31 is the time for the opening service of the camp meeting at Crystal Springs. The twenty-fourth is a clerical error of the Executive Committee. Please correct, and accept an invitation to the meeting from the committee. Yours truly, W. E. M. LINFIELD.

WATER VALLEY, MISS., July 3.—Since my last I have been among the universities. First, Vanderbilt. It is moving on satisfactorily, rapidly developing into a first-class institution, several new departments to be opened next session. Next, University of Mississippi, last week. A noble institution, doing a great work for the State. An accomplished faculty, composed of Christian gentlemen. The work on the Grenada district is improving; conversions at ordinary quarterly meetings. Protracted and camp meetings commencing with fine promise. Crops fine, but needing rain.

THOMAS Y. RAMSEY.

HARRISVILLE, MISS., July 3.—We have sent thirty-four new subscribers to the ADVOCATE from Rankin county; forty-four now taken; thirty more should be. Baptized fourteen children last quarter. Sold some Bibles, hymn-books and Disciplines. Congregations large and respectful. No parsonage. Church houses not good. Quarterage in the hands of the people, as the preachers have received but little. Crop prospects not better since the war. Praying and trusting for better times.

P. A. JOHNSTON.

LOUISIANA.

LITTLE RIVER, LA., June 27.—I visited Bro. Sheppard, at Pingville, on the third Sunday in this month. I attended his class-meeting on Sunday afternoon, and was pleased with the spirituality of his church. They have just finished a parsonage, which cost $500. They only owe $80 on it. They received twenty persons into the church in the last month. Last Sunday, after preaching, I preached a funeral sermon for a member of our church. I opened the doors of the church, when the husband of the deceased, almost seventy years old, came and joined. I have eight white appointments and four colored on my portion of the work. My congregations are good. The prospects at Vidalia are good. We have two Sunday-schools on the work. The one at Vidalia is very flattering. The young people take great interest in their Bible class. We have raised the money to build the church at French Fork. They let it out last Saturday. We intend to pay as we go, that when the church is ready for dedication there will be no debt on it. Your brother,

GEO. JACKSON.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ALBANY, ORE., June 18.—Just returned from a camp meeting forty miles distant; good and precious time; six joined; ministerial help scarce. The presiding elder had to preach three times on Sunday, besides administering the Lord's Supper; the circuit preacher on the ground, but in bed sick. Weather cool and fine for the grain, which promises a large yield. Am en route to district meeting. Anticipate a good time. We have peace and plenty in all our borders; times hard; money scarce. We need, above all things, that this beautiful land receive a Divine baptism.

Affectionately, T. H. WHITE.

QUITMAN, Ark., July 2.—The fourth session of Quitman College closed June 15. The past session was prosperous. Outlook hopeful. Commencement sermon by Rev. Z. T. Bennett, of the White River Conference. It was, indeed, full of thoughts, and attended with the demonstration of the Spirit. The next session of our college begins on the third Monday in September. Christian education is our motto—the Bible first and last.

JAMES A. PEEBLES.

WHITE STATION, TENN., July 2.—Sardis District Conference, North Mississippi, closed at Hernando, June 28, as harmonious, pleasant, profitable session. All the preachers are most of the laymen were present. District in good condition. Revivals needed. Crops good and in good condition. The Holiness so-called began in DeSoto county, Miss., 4 years ago. The wave is rolling back. More labor now than when in its infancy. Some of its more prominent leaders, sensible men regret the evil effects left by Southern citizens on the subject, a trick of the devil to perpetuate and destroy. The Lord reigneth, let the earth rejoice.

W. P. BURTON.

Commencement at Oxford, Miss.

MR. EDITOR: Last week was commencement week at Oxford, Miss., the seat of our flourishing university. You can well imagine what a stirring week marked those six or eight days which culminated in the gratifying ceremonies of the twenty-sixth of July. I will not say much here with regard to all of the work's exercises. It is enough to say that the able and well-timed address delivered by Judge Wiley P. Harris, of Jackson, Miss., before the two societies of the university. The distinguished speaker departed from the line usually literary topics, and adhered to the stirring issue of the state—some of the practical social and industrial questions which now almost grapple and keep in bondage a new south. The main points of the address are these: first, to lessen the quantity of cotton planted, and to increase the cereals, grasses and stock-raising; second, to promote our agricultural and manufacturing industries by the formation of societies having for their respective ends objects such as in England; third, to cultivate independence of the negro as a laborer, giving him to his own mind to go elsewhere or stay here. No more whining over the exodus; rather help away those who wish to go.

The last day, the great day of the feast, was enriched by some excellent speeches from the graduating classes. Among these were the specially excellent efforts of Mr. Wm. H. Magruder, of Baton Rouge, La., and Mr. Wm. R. Harper, of Okolona, Miss. Mr. Magruder is the son of your own prince of teachers, Prof. W. H. N. Magruder—a man who has done more than any other one man in the actual Christian education of young men in Louisiana and Mississippi.

The subject of young Magruder's speech was "The Mission of the Microscope," which he handled with singular clearness and composure, and which he made attractive by the chaste beauty of his language, the native vigor and practical turn of his thought, and the graceful finish of his oratory. It is specially refreshing and promising to see the young men of the church grasping the great facts and principles of science in harmonious connection with the supreme doctrines of our Christian faith.

The idea of vacation seizes our people in summer, so we have no unusual religious movement in this section of the State, but our pastoral work goes on regularly and healthily. Crops are clean and good, but must suffer if it rain not soon. The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is in great favor in our Conference. May its circulation increase.

Whitworth College.

Resolutions passed by the Brookhaven District Conference, at Crystal Springs, Miss.:

Whereas, This Conference has learned, from the report of the Board of Trustees of Whitworth College and others, that said institution of learning has just closed a very successful term, and that it is growing in the esteem and confidence of its patrons, and is now entering upon a wider career of usefulness; and that through the exertions of its worthy president, a new brick dormitory has been erected and added to the college buildings during the past year, thereby affording accommodations for a larger number of young ladies. And whereas, It further appears, from the report of the Board of Trustees, that "the entire college buildings now stand in the hands of the trustees unincumbered by loans, or otherwise;" therefore

Resolved, That Whitworth College is worthy of the fostering care and patronage of the church, and that it is to us a cause of just pride and gratitude that Whitworth now stands among the first, if not the very first, of the institutions of its kind in the South.

Resolved, That in Dr. H. F. Johnson, its president, we recognize an experienced educator—a man possessed of rare administrative ability—of scholarly attainments and great zeal for the cause of Christ, and in the entire faculty, the ability to sustain the high reputation which Whitworth has already attained.

Resolved, That to those who desire to place their daughters where their mental training will be thorough, and where they will be brought at the same time under wholesome religious influences, we do most cordially recommend Whitworth College as in every way worthy of their patronage.

Apportionments for Missions.

BY REV. W. WILSON, D. D., MISSIONARY SECRETARY.

The apportionments for foreign missions are made by the board according to the requirement of the Discipline in Article IV, section 1, chapter X, on the support of missions. The board is "to determine what fields shall be occupied as missions, the number of persons to be employed in each, and to estimate the amount that may be necessary for the support of the missions under its charge, and to divide the same among the several Annual Conferences."

In the selection of the fields for the occupied, the board endeavors to discharge the solemn trust committed to the Church in furnishing providential facilities for the direction our work should take, and in the missionary operations of other churches. In doing so we feel that the only purpose of all missionary work, to preach the gospel to every creature, is taken to avoid entering territory already fully occupied by the representatives of other churches, and at the same time that of neglect any region to which we may be called by its evident need, or by which we may be invited by the providence of God, have even these appointments as the best means to the end in view. Through the call to China was organized, and its feeble start was made in respect. The world, great and imperative it is now as it was at the time of the board, and the large as that is the United States to-day. A population to-day of more than fifty millions, and the world without hope and without God, are the subjects of Christ's gospel commission. The immediate duty of the church is to preach the gospel to all the world. Men have not been given the ability to do this work, but they are able and willing to do it. They are willing to bear the cost. When the work of the church is accomplished, the way will be open for the second coming of our Lord. Christ will not come to reign over a world of unbelievers. The world is to be converted before the last shining fall of Satan. No Christian believer can indeed, no Christian believer can be indifferent to the conditions and needs of China without serious loss to himself and to the interests of Christian character and influence in Christian power.

Now, in making provision for this work our board has always acted with great caution. The men sent have been few, the supplies meager. The contributions of the people have been made the basis of appropriations. Our brethren have earnestly besought the board to send more men to furnish them with the means for building churches and schools, and to provide for the extension of the work. The need of all this has been admitted, and estimates made for exceeding any appropriations ever granted, and at the last moment, the opinions backward look to the figures, that tell what the church's sense of obligation has been, has darkened the vision of the great need and the prospect of enlargement and success, and induced reduction of appropriations far below confessed need. The same may be said substantially of our other missions, Mexico, the Mexican Border, and later, Brazil; to say nothing of our Indian, German, and other work, on this continent. The only offset to this mortifying process of underestimate and scaling is in the appropriations to the Annual Conferences. They are made, in accordance with the disciplinary requirement, to correspond with the estimated necessities of the work. If the entire amount apportioned should be paid, the board will be able still to meet the demands of the work in its present condition and arrange for its extension. But the whole of it will be required. Our work is restricted and embarrassed for want of the means.

If it could be guaranteed that the church would honor the call of the board to the last dollar, appropriations could be made, and would be made, exhaustive of the apportionments. But the board is afraid of debt, and every member of any Annual Conference knows as well as the board does how many charges and preachers there are who are more than content if they bring in from fifty to seventy five per cent. of the missionary claims, and how almost exceptional are the reports in full. Three-fourths of our members give nothing to missions. It is impossible to account for the meagerness of the collections upon any other grounds. Few of our men of means give in any just proportion to their ability and the value of the work. Experience teaches, the board that it dare not appropriate the entire amount apportioned to the Conferences until the preachers shall bring the obligation to contribute to this cause faithfully to the conscience of every member of the church, and the whole church shall come to a true understanding of the Lord's commission, and a hearty resolve to execute it. It will require a good deal of preaching and praying about missions, and a vast elevation of Christian experience to bring this about.

We are in want now, serious want, for no reason but that neither preachers nor people have felt themselves under obligation to pay the amounts apportioned to them by the board. Dear are now in the hands of the treasurer, and the missionaries are waiting anxiously for the remittances upon them, which could be paid in full if the arrears upon the apportionments of last year were sent in. As it is the treasurer waits, and the missionaries are looking in vain for supplies.

No one can say that the amount is beyond the ability of the church. It is mortifying to a lover of his church to see the figures. For several years the apportionment has remained the same, while the church has been increasing in numbers rapidly. Shall eight hundred thousand give no more than six hundred thousand? The work has been growing too. Shall we stop our mission fields and tell them to admit no increase, regard not their hopeful extension? The apportionment for the incoming year is at the rate of little more than fifteen cents per member.

The apportionment is made according to its spirit, with reference to the extent and importance of the domestic work in each conference, and to the ability and disposition of the people to give. It is sought to maintain a due proportion between our work at home and that abroad. Neither ought to suffer for the other, nor in the plan of things can it. That is the most generous church, not really endowed with Christian graces, and most manful in labors, which does most for the cause abroad. Dear with you always, bounds, and is continued upon obedience to the whole mind of the world. There is no other basis for generosity, a proper conception of the mission of Christ in the world. It is a step blessed to give than to receive. The man who has the ability and does not give to receive the apostolic benediction.

Possibly there may be some mistakes in the apportionments. No measure in the hands of such is infallible. It is only a form of approximation, and will make a place for itself by experience. Any thing in error will be corrected by the board, and the brethren may be sure that no injustice will be done. Many have suggested that the apportionments be made by districts, and not by conferences. This is only a question of detail, and can be easily settled by experience. Any thing in error will be corrected by the board, and the brethren may be sure that no injustice will be done. Many have suggested that the apportionments be made by districts, and not by conferences. This is only a question of detail, and can be easily settled by experience. Independent Order of Good Templars.

NEW ORLEANS, June 16, 1879.

MR. EDITOR: As the question of the propriety of lodges of our order holding meetings on Sunday has been discussed in the columns of the religious papers of this City, I deem it necessary that I, as Grand Worthy Chief Templar of said order of Good Templars in this State, should give expression of the law on the subject.

Page 105, Art. 20, of this code reads: "It is not proper for a lodge to hold its regular meetings on Sabbath evenings, and such action works a forfeiture of charter."

Therefore, in answer to the correspondent of the Christian Advocate, I would say that ignorance of the law must be accepted as the excuse in the case of the lodge to which reference is made.

Respectfully,

JOHN M. WATKINS, M. D.,
G. W. C. T.

The following statement of the fee book of Sir Astley Cooper is by encouragement to young and struggling physician: "My receipt for the first year was £5 5s.; for the second, £25; the third, £64; the fourth, £98; the fifth, £100; the sixth £280; the seventh, £400; the eighth, £640; the ninth, £1,100. In 1814 Sir Astley made £21,000! A Mr. Hyatt, ancient merchant, gave him £1,000 on recovery under his care; and Mr. Coles, of Mincing-lane for a long course of time gave him £500 every Christmas.

The late Signor Blitz, the magician, once said to Daniel Webster in Washington: "Give me 100,000 Treasury notes to count, and watch closely, and you will find only 75,000 when I return them." "Signor," responded Webster, "there is no chance; there is here better magicians than you; they would not leave 50,000 after their counting."

GOD'S LIGHT.

"Dixit Deus: Fiat lux. Et facta est lux."—Gen. i. 14.

(From the Faith of Abelard.)

BY REV. SAMUEL W. LITTLEFIELD.

The earth is green with grasses,
The sky is filled with lights—
Sun, moon and stars. There passes
Vast cycles of unique days and nights.

On either hand outlaid,
Around, above and see!
Those heavenly realms are gilded
By help which shines for thee.

The suns of winter cheer thee
For lack of fire below;
While the bright moon draws near thee
With stars, thy path to show.

Leave pride her ivory spaces,
The poor man on the grass
Breaks up fresh fragrant places,
By which the song birds pass.

The rich with wasteful labor—
For wanted dresses shall fill—
Mock the poor in our neighbor,
Paints between will his hall.

But, in that open chambers
Where all things largest are,
Let the poor man recumbent
Beyond palaces stay and bar.

Vast a work and splendid
As nature's more than man
Nay, this for us not ended,
The race endeth not.

The rich man keeps his servant,
And gold gilds the poor.
And God sends stars observant
To watch above his door.

The Tenth of May.

The tenth of May is held as almost sacred by the family of the late Rev. James Bowman, in commemoration of his birth. It was ever celebrated while he lived.

It was a family custom for years for each member of the family to meet at his home, and vie, as it were, with each other in manifestations of love and reverence for him. None but those who have reverenced a sainted father can tell of the happiness of those reunions, the hearty, cordial welcomes of love with which each one was met at the threshold, when the tear drop bedewed every cheek, from the firm man to the youngest child. The first act after welcomes over, was the assembling of all around the family altar Elkanah-like to make offerings and a fresh dedication of all his family to almighty God, offer thanks for all his blessings in the past, and ask a continuance of his guidance in the future?

Then came the little tokens of love, as one by one, commencing at the oldest, they deposited their offerings at his feet. What emotions of surprise, love and joy beamed from his eye, and how his countenance was lighted with happiness! Then came the festive board, around which all gathered to partake of the fatted lamb which was always prepared for the occasion, and social converse, with a few words of counsel and advice from his well matured mind, filled the remainder of the day.

But, alas! the sadness at parting when the hour came to go. Well do we remember as one by one the last farewell was said, and how each eye was strained to catch the last glimpse of his noble form as he stood waving a last adieu! With what anxiety we always looked forward! For already bent under the weight of years his furrowed cheek, his hoary locks and tottering steps, with his threescore years and ten, all told that not many more occasions such as these would be afforded us. Yet we hoped and prayed: "Spare him, if it be thy will, oh! God."

Then came the solemn October's breath,
And with it the messenger of death.

And as all nature seemed to rest upon her well earned honors, and the last rays of departing day sank within the sable curtains of the night, then sank to rest this faithful servant of God. And as we go to record his death in the old and well-worn family Bible, we find this record left as a heritage to his children:

"As this record may probably survive me, it may be satisfactory to my children to know that I regard the Holy Bible as a revelation from God, and that its divine doctrines and precepts are sure means of salvation, by leading us to the only Saviour of men, Jesus Christ, our Lord, for it is by faith in Him only that we can be justified. I most confidently and most reasonably trust to Christ alone, 'who is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth.' May the like precious faith be the rich inheritance of all those who read these lines."

Moses' Account of Creation.

MR. EDITOR: I read in the ADVOCATE of the nineteenth of June an article headed, Moses' Account of Creation, in which the author tacitly denies that Moses gave any account of creation, and positively denies that he stated a single fact on the subject, except in the words: "God created;" and, strangely enough, labors to prove that what we read in the first chapter of Genesis is not a statement of facts, but of history, seeming to forget his denial that he wrote any history of creation, or stated any positive fact on the subject, except that "God created." And yet the whole account, whether written by Moses or not, is full of facts. The first day of creation is signalized by four prominent and several minor facts. First, God said: Let there be light, and there was light. Then the light was separated from the darkness; then the light was called day, and the darkness night.

It would occupy too much space to point out all the facts incident to each day's work; it will be sufficient to remark that each day's progress in the work of creation developed new facts peculiar to the circumstances and state of advancement. The sixth day, however, is so replete with important facts, and the time so definitely measured by the movement of the solar system now complete, that both the time and place of the sixth day's work is definitely stated. The beasts of the field and the cattle were created after the dry land appeared, and was clothed with grass, and fitted for their habitation; and, as they were created for the earth, we presume they were created on the earth; and man, the crowning achievement of creative power, was not only created on the earth, but of the earth; so that both time and place of that day's work are definitely stated.

The writer does not seem clearly to comprehend God's mode of doing His work. His mind seems to be encumbered with the ordinary routine of mortals in doing their work. The fact is the whole work of creation is either a myth or a miracle. If a miracle, it is but the determination of the divine will, as is indicated in the account of the creation of light. God willed the light, and light was. And though the work did not occupy an appreciable portion of time, it was accomplished within the limits of definitely measured time—measured by the diurnal revolution of the earth, as at the present day. Indeed, when we reflect that the Jewish Sabbath was founded by the law of Moses on the seventh day, is conclusive evidence that the days of creation were ordinary days of twenty-four hours.

The writer states as a fact worthy of consideration that the story of creation can neither be proved nor disproved. The fall of Adam, the murder of Abel, the banishment of Cain, the translation of Enoch, and the building of the ark, as well as the tower of Babel, and the call of Abram, may all be placed in the same category, and dealt with by skeptics after the same fashion.

It is certainly not very remarkable that it should have been said that life was separate and subsequent to material creation, for it is written by Moses: That after God had formed man from the dust of the earth he breathed into the material organism the breath of life.

How much time was consumed in the creation of man is not stated, but it was certainly less than a day, for after, on the same day that he created the beasts of the field, and the cattle, and the snakes, and lizards and the snails, and the worms, and saw they were all right, he manifested the climax of creative genius by the creation of man.

The controversy between science and theology has nothing to do with a literal and reasonable exposition of the text. It must be understood to say what it means, and mean what it says; it therefore must be rendered in its most literal and obvious sense, or rejected.

Had the author grappled with the real difficulties of the narrative he might have found a subject worthy of his pen, but, as it is, instead of light behold obscurity.

BROOKHAVEN, Miss. R. H. RICKETTS.

To Those Interested in Holiness.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: If you will allow my humble letter a place in your paper, I would like to say a word in favor of the "Way of Holiness." For eight years this magazine has been trying to set forth the doctrine of holiness as taught by our Saviour, but all along it has been poorly sustained, because of the lack of interest taken by the church in general in the literature of holiness. And now the work is at a stand, the editor not having the means with which to carry on the work, as in writing to me not long since he says: "We got out of paper in printing the April number. I ordered a supply by express, to be paid for on delivery. It came on, and has been lying in the express office about six weeks, while the type set up for our May number has been on the press forty days, waiting for the paper to print. But money fails to come in, and I have no other resources to look to; only a few dollars are wanting. When we shall be able to bring it out is a matter of conjecture with me. I don't know what the Lord may design. He may be going to take from the friends of holiness a privilege and a blessing which they have not fully appreciated in sustaining it."

Oh! friends, must we be deprived of this periodical, devoted to the cause of holiness, which has been a blessing to so many souls, and which, by our aid, could still speed on its mission in leading believers to a higher life. I appeal to you, my Christian friends, many if not all who read this, are able to subscribe for the "Way," and perhaps would do so if they had the subject brought before them. Knowing this, it has given me courage to ask you. Only ten dollars will procure paper enough to run the press for three months. My father has been a subscriber to the "Way of Holiness" ever since the year 1875. During the years that have followed I have been a faithful reader, and O! how I miss its welcome visits now! When I received the editor's letter stating that the lack of funds was the cause of the suspension of the "Way of Holiness," I fell on my knees and prayed that God would provide some way to carry on the work. But prayer alone will not suffice. We must work as well as pray.

Brothers and sisters of the Methodist Church, will you not assist in carrying on this great work? Mr. Editor, pardon me if my letter is too long, but my love for the cause constrains me to write. Any subscriptions or donations will be gladly received by Rev. William Baker, editor of the "Way," at Chattanooga, Tenn.

A LOVER OF HOLINESS.

Obituaries.

ON THE morning of October 4, 1878, at her residence in Sumter county, Ala., Mrs. HETTIE TUTT departed this life, leaving her husband, Capt. J. V. Tutt, and four little children.

"Bettie" was a sincere Christian in word and deed. She became a short time previous to her death, a communicant of the Baptist Church, of which she was an ornament, until it pleased God to remove her into closer communion with himself.

Those who knew her best valued her for those graces of mind and disposition which, when combined, make the perfect woman.

Of a temperament gentle and amiable and conscientious, with a mind well balanced, she was loved by the young, esteemed by those of her own age, and favored by those her superiors in years.

"Bettie" was an angel of light in her household. To us all how great the loss, but more especially to that bereaved husband.

The children have lost the love of a mother—a mother who entered into full companionship with all their joys and griefs. Her parting words to her husband were, "Meet me in heaven."

MRS. CELIA B. MCCLENDON died in Ouachita parish, La., January 23, 1879. She was the daughter of Willie and Celia Burr, and was born in Jones county, Ga., October 8, 1810. She was married to Mr. Isaac M. English September 12, 1827. In 1836 she moved to Alabama, and from there to Louisiana in 1853.

Sister McClendon was dedicated to God in holy baptism in her infancy, and in her fourteenth year, while attending a camp meeting held at Flat Rock Church in Pike county, she was happily converted to God, and joined the Methodist Church. From that day to that of her death she remained faithful to the vows then made.

As a wife and mother she was a good friend, and endeavored to train up her children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. The mother was with her a short while before she died. She was then suffering, but not complaining. She talked freely of her future prospects, saying that she was abiding the Lord's will, and that she felt prepared for her change. Before leaving we knelt at her bedside in prayer and, as we closed she was expressing aloud to Christ Jesus. For several hours before her death she became unconscious, and we feel assured that she was ready, that her long service in the Master's cause was not in vain, and that she now rests from her labors. She leaves an aged husband and ten children. May God in His mercy reunite them in heaven.

GEORGE THOMSON was born August 20, 1852, was converted and joined the Church in 1874, and died March 9, 1879, in the Christian's faith and hope, in Hillsboro, Scott county, Miss.

JOHN W. KELLISON, Pastor.

LUCY A. BUSTEN was born in 1832; joined the Church in early life, and was a consistent member until her death, which occurred March 13, 1879, in hope of everlasting life, near Hill boro, Scott county, Miss.

JOHN W. KELLISON, Pastor.

MISS DELILAH PLASTER was born December 1, 1818, and died March 12, 1879. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and died in peace.

LEWIS H. FEATHERSTON.

DR. MARTIN B. DAUGHTERY departed this life on the twenty-sixth day of March, A. D. 1879, at Why Not, Lauderdale county, Miss. He was born on the eighteenth day of February, A. D. 1806. We are not informed as to where he was born. He had been married three times. His first companion and two lovely little daughters are all that remain of his family.

Dr. Daughtery died with pneumonia. Death to him had no terrors. His disease, no doubt, was contracted by exposure. He had been going in all sorts of weather, day and night, for about two weeks, to attend to the afflicted, before he was taken to his bed himself. He was not only a good physician, but also one of the best nurses that we ever knew. His invariable rule was to go to and, when called on him, and to do all for them the circumstances required. His success in curing the sick was proverbial. His charges were light when compared with the usual rates of the most of physicians. He was also very indulgent to his patrons.

His companion was his most indefatigable in her attention to him during his illness. The citizens around him manifested great regard for him during his life and since his death his loss is considered a general calamity. The common expression is, "There is no one that can fill his place."

His religious views were with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of which church he was a member, and an ornament of the church to which he belonged. N. T.: Baker's Chapel.

JAMES N. B. CLARKE was born May 1, 1803, in Augusta, Ga.; joined the Methodist Church in July, 1826; married to Miss Mahala Clarke, near Sparta, Hancock county, Ga., September 14, 1826; moved to Florida in February, 1841, and settled first in Tallahassee, then in Quincy; thence to St. Andrew's Bay, and finally in Pensacola, where he departed this life March 28, 1879, aged nearly seventy-six years.

Bro. Clarke was in every way a man of exalted integrity and truth, an exemplary citizen and neighbor, a faithful and loving husband, a devoted and never failing friend, and never wavering in his attachments to friends, and impartial in judgment in all. "As ye would that men should do to you do ye also to them likewise" was the guiding rule of his daily life. Bro. Clarke loved the church more than in mere words—his love was spiritual and real, as "all this is love that we walk after his commandments is." He knew from blessed experience the joys of a pardoned sins. With sacred and grand sounding leaps with Paul he could say: "Justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ," and with John: "He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself." For more than fifty years he walked humbly with God. For many months his price for his youth he was a great sufferer confined wholly to his room and bed. As his pastor, I was for months all pleasure to visit him during the last four months of his illness. In the patience of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ the bible contained all. He talked much of heaven and rejoiced that soon he would be there to see its glories, and to gaze his eyes in the face of the author of the redeemed. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints."

C. H. DISNEY.

MY beloved father, JOHN W. SCOTT, departed this life April 3, in full hope of a blissful immortality. He was born in Jefferson county, Miss., June 1, 1829, united with the Methodist Church in Fayette, Miss., April 3, 1845. And for thirty-four years, nine months and seven days, as a consistent man has he refrained from sin and labored to lead others to Christ. He served his country faithfully during the late war, and gave his all for his family, by his works, respecting with loyalty to the commandments of God, the laws, and the powers that be, obeyed the voice of the church and the world. Just and upright as a man, faithful and orderly as a Christian, tender and loving as a husband and father, his life is widely and keenly felt. His loss is left deep upon his family, although dead he yet speaketh. He was permitted to see his children all in the church, honored with official recognition and given promise of faithful and efficient service. With a sacred servant of Christ his rest is sweet, a valiant soldier of the church militant has been promoted to the triumphant, a gallant general has been born, for a profession in it has been translated where he shall see face to face and shall know even as he is known. His delight was in the law of the Lord and in it did he meditate day and night. He was reared by Christian parents and in early life had the great truths of the gospel instilled into his mind and heart. Though he was a diversified and man, yet he was ever a consistent Christian. His religion made him sympathize with the tempted and rejoice with those who rejoiced. For the Church he labored even to God and his life long created holiness he served, letting nothing cause him to swerve from the purpose of his heart in his service for the faith once delivered to the saints. With a smiling face he bade farewell to this life and, armed with the heavenly hope, stepped the portals of that dread realm from whence no fallen soul on earth shall ever return. Time will never revive past things, nor bring back scenes and happy hours. To us each the Church has lost a wise counselor and an active worker. He was a blessing to humanity, of much need of the world. He will be greatly missed in every relation of life, but no ill by his family who sincerely and irreparable loss.

On the evening of April 4, after the funeral services, with all his funeral party which was conducted by Rev. D. D. Smith, his body was carried to the cemetery at Macon, Miss., by the Masonic fraternity of which he was a member.

BRO. VERNAN WRIGHT was born in Anson county, N. C., April 7, 1801, and died April 14, 1879, aged seventy-eight years, seven days and seven days. He removed from the place of his birth to Hinds county, Miss., in the year 1832, where he lived up to the time of his death. His disease was consumption, and had been lingering for several years, and was quite on his death bed as the life he lived. I have known him as long as I have known any man. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, about the year 1852. He lived the life of a Christian, and died the death of the saint. He has gone home to be with Jesus. His loss is deeply felt by his family, and a large circle of friends.

Resolved, That in the death of Brother Wright our Missionary Society has lost a zealous and appreciated member, the community a noble, generous and exemplary young man, and his family a true, devoted, and promising son and brother.

JOHN A. GRAY, Chairman.

DIED, May 3, 1879, at Brownwood, Brown county, Texas, little Stella Roberta, infant daughter of Judson J. and Mollie A. Travis, aged Martin, aged one year and twenty-six days.

MISS ANNIE AMELIA JACKSON, daughter of J. T. Jackson and M. S. M. Jackson, deceased, was born and raised near Mt. Sterling, Clay county, Alabama, and died in her thirty-first year, at the residence of her brother, near Meridian, Mississippi, May 8, 1879.

She was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1874, and was, until death, a devoted Christian. She lacked, talked, dressed and acted as a Christian. Meekness, gentleness, patience and humility were prominent features in her character. She never manifested feelings of envy, nor spoke evil of any one but was ever happier than when she could contribute to the happiness of others.

During an illness of eighteen days she never murmured, but bore her sufferings with Christian patience, often speaking calmly of death and giving special directions concerning her burial. She desired to be brought back to Mt. Sterling and buried by her mother, which request was granted, and a large concourse of her friends attended her funeral. In her last moments she was often full of joy and peace, and while looking upward with a sweet smile upon her face, the pure spirit took its flight to join the loved ones gone before and forever dwell in the mansions above. A bereaved father, three brothers and a sister, are left to mourn her loss. May they all meet her in heaven.

E. J. JACKSON.

JOHN SOLOMON was born in North Carolina, January 4, 1795. While quite a child his parents removed to and settled in Georgia. He was married to Miss Rebecca Sturdivant, February 8, 1821, by whom he received the blessings of the Christian dispensation as set forth by Methodism. He was powerfully converted while ploughing in a new ground. He was unspeakably happy in the love of God.

For the while he died praising and shouting the high praises of God, February 12, 1879. He was buried by Rev. John Which, of the Georgia Conference, and received into the Methodist Church, December 31, he removed to Alabama and settled near Clopton, in Dale county, in which community he lived and labored and called to the rest of night. In the doctrines and usages of Methodism he was well informed, especially was he a consistent private reader and student. He was fervent in spirit, serving the Lord. As a class leader he served the church very efficiently for many years. Methodism, as a system understood, was to him or her power and influence in society. And the precious remains of both, Aunt Rebecca and Uncle John, were buried in the Methodist burying ground at Antioch, Dale county, Alabama, May 13, 1879. During his sickness he gave request as to the disposition of his property and preparation for heaven. In answer to the question being asked by his pastor, he said: "My way is clear, glory to God." My way is bright as day." He was a kind husband, a loving father, a tender grandfather, a great grandfather, a friend to children, a great friend to children, a friend to the poor, a friend to all. Gentle in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints.

A FRIEND.

THE FUTURE LIFE.

BY WM. C. BRYANT.

How shall I know thee in the sphere which keeps
The disembodied spirits of the dead,
When all of thee, that time could wither, sleeps
And perishes among the dust we tread?

For I shall feel the sting of ceaseless pain
Where I meet thy gentle presence not,
Nor hear the voice I love, nor read again,
In thy serenest eyes, the tender thought.

Will thy own meek heart demand me there?
That heart whose fondest throbs to me were given?
Shall I be blessed from thy tongue in heaven?
One word of love, one look of thine could shed
Beyond the reach of death, immortal balm
On all my earthly pangs. Oh! is it there,
Amid the rapture of that glorious sphere,
And larger movements of the unfettered mind,
Will thou forget the love we shared and joined here?

No, thou wilt not. The memory of our youth,
And all its hopes, and all its strong desires,
And all the recollections that endure,
Shall not be quenched by death, more than by years.
Nor shall our love grow less, but gather light
As we proceed in our eternal flight
Towards the source of love; the source of all
Our being; the fountain of life and joy,
And all sweet things that charm us here below,
And all good things which are not found below.

Nor shall we, in our blessedness, look down
With scorn upon the shapes of earth we wore.
Nor shall we, casting back our glances proud
Along the path of light we trod to heaven,
Spurn the dim road through which we passed to bliss,
Because a portion of our way was dark,
And amid pain, and fear, and sorrow, and death.
Nor shall we, in the lofty pride of power
And knowledge infinite, look coldly down
On those we left behind us on the earth.
No, we shall bear our love for them unchanged
Pure as it was before the change we felt,
And, in our love, remember what they are,
Encompassed by infirmities, and sins,
And sorrows, and temptations dark and fierce,
And troubled with longings after lower things,
And all the while, struggling in weakness with
The tempter, and our hearts sad with defeat.
Then will we, from the celestial heights to which
Our happier natures have exalted us,
Look down with gentleness and truth and love,
And with a smile shed light upon the tears
We wept in our abasement; and our hands,
Made powerful for good, shall be outstretched
To raise our suffering brethren, and support
Their fainting steps in the narrow path we trod,
And guide their devious footsteps into life.

The Question of Penal Colonies.

BY PROF. WM. WELLS.

The magnificent success of the Botany Bay penal colony of England in Australia is calling the attention of Europe anew to the whole question, at a period when the criminals in some lands are so numerous that the prisons cannot contain them.

It is a marvelous fact that the country which is now engaged in the distant southern seas in arranging a Universal Exhibition, and inviting the world to its doors and its hospitality, was, less than a century ago, a savage wilderness, and began its civilized life as did, indeed, Rome itself, with a band of criminal outlaws. In 1788 England sent thither its first cargo of 700 criminals of the most depraved and dangerous character, to get rid of whom as prejudicial to home society she had adopted the system.

But it was soon seen that there was also a bright side to this proceeding, against which many philanthropists had raised their voices. To the astonishment of the home government, these new settlers took at the most part a new start in life and went to work to found for themselves a home. After the expiration of their term of transportation very many of them remained there, and absolutely dwelled with voluntary comers in energetic efforts to achieve success. As they had their record to make on an unfavorable past, they were often the most reliable men of the colony in mercantile transactions.

In the year 1840 transportation to New South Wales was suspended, and the entire result of the enterprise was most satisfactory. A new British empire had arisen within fifty years in the southern hemisphere, the social character of which differs but little from that of the mother country, and of which the percentage of crime is not greater than in England itself.

The transportation of criminals to Australia ceased in justice to the character and enterprise of the country, but England did not drop the system, but transferred its objective point to the Andaman Islands in the Bay of Bengal; and the number of criminals sent there up to the present time amounts to about 10,000, and there seems no disposition on the part of England to discontinue the system.

Among the other European nations Russia has led the way in the matter of exile or transportation, and Siberia has been the great prison-house to which some 15,000 are now annually sent; and so far as results are concerned, Siberia has been better than its representation, for most of the criminals and their posterity lead orderly lives, as we learn from unimpeachable testimony of reliable investigators. The hatred and horror connected with the name of Siberia arise more from the fact that so many of the prisoners are political rather than criminal. But a goodly number of thriving and happy communities have arisen from those sent thither by the government, and who remain there from choice or compulsion.

The Portuguese have transported criminals for 200 years, and mainly to the west coast of Africa, where they have a criminal colony. It is a common idea that this coast has a deadly climate, but this is not always the case. There are localities that are quite desirable for this purpose, and have been so used for a long time. Spain and France both have criminal colonies on the line of this coast. Spain sends her political criminals to the Fernando Po; Angola is the criminal colony of the Portuguese, and France condemns the criminals of her navy to Gaboon. Livingstone and other English authorities recommend the western coast of Africa for this purpose.

France has had a criminal colony for some years in New Caledonia, about 250 miles east of the Australian continent, to which she sends most of her political criminals, and whither were transported the Communists of 1870, whom her Radicals are now so anxious to welcome back to France. The French are poor colonizers, whether voluntary or involuntary, and are more distinguished for failure than success. Napoleon III sent his political criminals to what is called the "dry guillotine," in the murderous climate of Cayenne, or to certain death-spots in Algiers. He thought it better to put them as soon as possible out of the way of coming back.

The country which as yet has no colony of this kind is Germany, and it begins to need one greatly for the criminals of all hues, regarding whom the record is quite discouraging. Prussian and other German prisons are now literally filled to the brim and running over. There are said to be now, in all the German prisons together, no less than 150,000 individuals, and 100,000 of these fall to the lot of Prussia. The alarmingly rapid increase of crime in Germany, with that also of the population, is making a serious question to the government of the matter of disposition of criminals.

Statistics, for the last six years, in Prussia show an increase of from fifty to two and three hundred per cent. in certain classes of crime, and it is hardly any better in other parts of Germany. And the question to the country has become a serious one—they must build more prisons or found a penal colony, to accept all the criminals against society or the State. They now resort to the practice of simply turning their notorious Socialists out of the country to prey on somebody else, and this will not long be submitted to on the part of other nations. We have now a goodly number of these, that would better grace some green isle of the southern seas, such as the New Hebrides, or the Solomon Islands, or the Cameroon region of western Africa, than our own festering cities.

Indeed, there are plenty of places left yet in the world where these malcontents might found, if they please, a new social compact on their own score, and put it to the test in their own experience before they force it upon others by robbery, fire and the sword. Some of the best minds of Germany are, therefore, now engaged in the investigation of this question, and are bringing it before the people with a view of convincing them that, on humanitarian grounds it will be better to give the criminal and discontented classes an opportunity to make such a home for themselves and their posterity as has been done in a similar case in New South Wales by the English, and the main incentive to these thoughts are the insane demands of the Communists. Let there be in Germany such an outbreak among the Communists as lately in France, what will the country do with them? And there is a growing inclination to reply—Send them to a distant colony.—New York Christian Advocate.

An Insinuating Method.

The New Jerusalem Messenger publishes a letter furnished by a New Church minister, received by him from a friend, describing his friend's method of disseminating the doctrines of Swedenborg. The minister, it is added, does not endorse the principle here set forth," nor, we presume, does the editor. It is a curiosity in its way:

"I have not yet distributed any tracts that have reference to Swedenborg's work, for reasons that I think good. I am, and have been for five months, teaching a class in Sabbath-school. At first they numbered about fifteen, but now I have regularly between twenty-five and thirty-five scholars, besides ten or fifteen men and women who take seats within reading. I have been teaching New Church doctrines all the time, and I think there has not been a thought in regard to disbelief. I have felt that I could do more good by revealing no other source of information than the Bible. There are not many here ready to receive the doctrines, and investigate them fully. Therefore, I think if they had known where I got my ideas, they would not have shown the interest that they have, but would have become prejudiced, and I would have met opposition. I think in certain conditions it is better to build the New Church up within the old, and little by little the old will shed its old covering and advance from the tares I will be here but two more Sundays, and before I go away I would like to leave something that will lead the people on from where I leave off. So if you have any tracts that you would like to have distributed, I would be much pleased to accommodate you. Some seed may fall upon good soil. Would be happy to receive any suggestion."

We have a suggestion to make, not to the writer of this remarkable letter, but to pastors and superintendents of Sunday schools. If they have no objections to the covert insinuation of the doctrines of Swedenborg, they need not trouble themselves; nor about the introduction of any other notions differing from "the faithsence for all delivered to the saints." But if they feel any solicitude about such matters, they have need to know who teaches, and also what is taught, in their Bible classes. Such things cannot safely be left to settle themselves, or to be settled by chance.—Watchman.

—The Guide to Holiness, Dr. C. W. Palmer editor, has, in the May number, says the Central Christian Advocate, a wise editorial on "Holiness Organization." He says: "It will not be thought presumption in one who has been identified with the cause for nearly half a century to affectionately exhort all lovers of holiness not to have anything to do with any movement that tends to distract the churches, and bring the witnesses of full salvation into collision with the pastors."

He quotes also at length from an article published in the Guide twenty-seven years ago, written by Rev.—now Bishop—Jesse T. Peck. We clip the following paragraph: "Finally, after prayerful reflection, and with the most tender regard for the dear brethren who have thought their circumstances justified it, I am clear that any organization of the friends of holiness, as a distinct work, is undesirable and highly dangerous. It must lead to invidious distinctions, which are by no means intended by the friends of the measure."

Religious Intelligence.

—The report of the operations of the London Missionary Society given at the anniversary in May acknowledges abundant cause for thankfulness in the Society's wide range of usefulness, in its efficient agencies, and in the tokens of the divine favor it has received. The directors consider that the character of its missionaries, the suitability of its stations, and the fulness of its instrumentalities; the number of churches gathered in heathen countries; the character of their members and their steady growth; the increasing readiness to give, to serve, to maintain ordinances and to spread the gospel beyond themselves; the willingness of many to offer themselves as pastors, evangelists, missionaries, and steady growth of their attainments are at once an evidence of successful management in the past and an indication of future achievement. In Madagascar the expulsion of the mission committed in 1870 has been completed and consolidated. Nine country stations have been established, each provided with its mission house, its model church and school; the Central Girls' School, the Normal School and the Theological College have been erected in Antananarivo, and also a Normal School in Fianarantsoa; the entire system of primary education has been revised, extended and endowed with new life; the press buildings have been erected and supplied with complete material; and the evangelistic system has been enlarged. A new station has been opened in China, several mission buildings have been erected, and preparations nearly completed for the opening of a mission in the province of Sz Chuan. A new station has been added in India, the Bechuana mission in South Africa has been strengthened, a mission to Lake Ngami has been commenced, and the Moffat Institution erected. The New Guinea Mission has been extending its lines, and has now four ordained English and forty native missionaries. The total receipts of the Society were $565 500; the balance from last year brought it up to $580 065; but even this was $26 175 less than the expenditures of the year. There are 153 English missionaries, including 43 women, on the list of the Society, and nearly 400 other agents. The report gives much space to Madagascar. Only ten years have passed since the idols were burnt, and yet there are 67 729 church members, 886 native pastors, and 1566 evangelists. Referring to the question of government, interference, the Interim Committee reports: "With regard to the government of the churches, it may be well to say that the churches are at liberty to manage their own affairs, without any interference from secular or outside authority. To all human appearance, the churches in Madagascar were never further from anything approaching state churchism than they are at present."

AMERICAN AND FOREIGN CHRISTIAN UNION.—The thirtieth annual meeting of this Society was held in its rooms, the Bible House, New York, Tuesday, May 6, 1879. Frederick H. Wolcott, Esq., presided. The receipts of the Society at home were reported to be $13 163 19; the expenditures, $11,109 81. Of this sum, $4,103 57 were expended for publication work, $3 277 32 for home mission work, $1 513 12 for foreign mission work, $1 361 08 for cost of management, and $553 72 for law charges, etc. Including the receipts of the American chapel in Paris under its care, and of the Chapel Missionary Association, the total receipts of the Society were about $21 000. The Society has continued the publication of its monthly magazine, the Christian World, specially devoted to disseminating information respecting the Roman Catholic question, and the progress of missions among Roman Catholics. It has sustained for the whole or a part of the year eleven missionaries, laboring at nine different points in our own country, chiefly among the foreign population of German, Irish and Bohemian extraction. Besides, exercising a supervision over the American chapel in Paris, founded and owned by this Society, it has been able to render assistance to the Normal School of the Waldenses of Italy, situated at Torre Pellice, to the Free Italian Church, to the Evangelical Society of Genoa, to the French Waldenses of the Hautes Alpes, to the Church of Jesus in Mexico, etc.

—The annual report of the Protestant Reformation Society in England contains startling statistics in regard to the progress of the Roman Catholics in Great Britain. In 1829 there were in that country 477 priests and 451 chapels; in 1879, 1 903 priests and 1,122 chapels. The Romish Almanac does not give the number of monasteries, etc., at the present time; but while there were none in Great Britain fifty years ago, there were in 1851, ten years ago, 67 monasteries, 232 convents and 20 colleges. The report says:

"It is evident that the Church of Rome is directing her forces with great vigor for the conquest of Great Britain. Her movements also are guided with skill. Leo XIII., while not abating one jot of the pretensions of his predecessors, is proving that he gives full recognition to the principle of suaviter in modo and fortiter in re. He has addressed polite letters to the Emperors of Germany and Russia and other potentates with a view to the interests of his church, and conferred a Cardinal's hat upon Dr. Newman, who had opposed the definition of the dogma of infallibility, and in his letter to the Duke of Norfolk gave expression to sentiments which called forth a vigorous protest from the extreme Ultramontane Dublin Review. Dr. Newman's acceptance of the hat may be regarded as an act of submission to the will of the Pope. Leo XIII. is clever as a tactician, and, therefore, formidable as a foe."

—The United Methodist Free Church missions report a small increase of funds, and an increase of 237 members on the foreign stations, making the whole number of members 7,100 or one-tenth of the entire denomination. The total receipts were $89,300. The missions are in Australia, 1 082 members; China, 143 members; East Africa, 21 members; Jamaica, 2,389 members; New Zealand, 655 members; West Africa, 2 807 members. The Rev. Thomas Wakefield, of East Africa, was at the anniversary, and told of the three languages—Kishawahili, Kinglka and Galla—of the people with whom he labored, and how parts of the scriptures and other works had been published in each of them, most of which were printed at the station, and that "the people were intelligently reading in their own tongues, the wonderful works of God."

—The English Wesleyan papers say that "recent advices from the Rev. Matthew Godman, of Sierra Leone, speak of a journey undertaken by himself and one of his colleagues seventy miles into the interior. They report that they penetrated beyond the swamps and found a healthier climate. They report themselves also to have discovered an unsuspected, if rather rude civilization, for they found a people who understand how to smelt iron, which they manufacture into spear heads and other weapons and implements. The people are said to be comparatively few, inoffensive, with no particular ideas about religion, but quite willing to receive Christian teachers. Mr. Godman preached several times, and at almost every service the head man of the tribe was present."

—The forty-fourth annual meeting of the London City Mission was held May 15. The report stated that thirty-one new missionaries had been engaged during the year, making the total number of missionaries engaged 448. The receipts reached $259 820, a slight advance upon the previous year, and the expenditures amounted to $248,770. The chairman, Mr. Joseph Hoare, said that there were about two hundred districts suitable for mission work not yet occupied, and which, if the public would provide the means, the Society would be able and willing to occupy. The Earl of Shaftesbury dwelt at length upon the good work being done by the missions in bringing so many intellects into the service of God and the gospel, and closed his address with an earnest appeal for more union between the Church of England and dissenters, so that the masses of the metropolis might believe in the cementing principle and power of combination that essentially belongs to religion.

—European journals report that Peter's pence flow in so slender a stream in the Papal treasury as to occasion considerable anxiety. If the rumor is correct we can perhaps give the reason for this decline of income. We have heard recently of Romish domestics refusing to contribute because the dignitaries at Rome were accumulating such fortunes. They heard first of the great wealth of Cardinal Antonelli, the Pope's Secretary, and before they had recovered from the shock this gave them, they read an account of the millions left by Pius IX. They had just been called upon to give for the relief of the poor man who was "a prisoner in Rome," and we speak mildly when we say that they were astonished when the amount of his wealth was made public.—Christian Intelligencer.

—The World states that the worship of St. Joseph is gaining ground in France, although the Congregation of Rites has just condemned as ridiculous an Ave Joseph contained in a pamphlet approved of by the Cardinal-Archbishop of Toulouse, and honored with the benediction of the late Pope. Not only this, but the Propagateur de la Devotion a St. Joseph relates how a child who for four days had been unable to open his eyes was immediately cured by reciting this Ave, which the Congregation of Rites now declares to be ridiculous.

—The special religious services which were begun in Liverpool in connection with the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey are still continued prosperously. Missions are conducted in different parts of the town, and are participated in by ministers of the different denominations, including Churchmen, Independents, Presbyterians, Baptists and Wesleyans. The supply of ministers is abundant, the meetings are well attended, and the services are attractive and profitable.

—The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel has suffered a decrease of $15,000 in its gross income from that of last year. It has employed during the past year 567 missionaries in its various fields of labor in Asia, Africa, Australia and the Pacific, America and the West Indies, and Europe, with about 1,200 catechists and lay teachers, mostly native in heathen countries, and has about 250 students in colleges abroad.

—The late Dr. Hugh Miller, of Bloomfield, near Helensburgh, Scotland, bequeathed $201,250 to religious and philanthropic objects of which two-thirds are devoted to missionary purposes. He gave $100,000 to the missions of the Free Church, one-half to be applied to the maintenance of ordained native ministers, one-half to native medical missionaries.

—The literary papers give us a notice of a new and "very useful" map of the Kwangtung Province of China, published by the Basle Missionary Society. It is prepared largely from official maps and Admiralty charts, but numerous details respecting the interior of the province have been supplied by various Protestant missionaries.

—Dean Stanley said, in a recent address in London, that the whole contributions of the Roman Catholic Church at this moment to the Missionary cause "do not amount to one-third of what is contributed by the Protestant societies of Great Britain alone."

—Mr. Edward Kimball stated recently that within the past two years he had assisted 70 churches in removing an aggregate of over $2,000,000 of debt.

Our Young People.

LITTLE BY LITTLE.

One step and then another,
And the longest walk is ended;
One stitch and then another,
And the largest rent is mended.
One brick upon another,
And the highest wall is made;
One flake upon another
And the deepest snow is laid.

So the little coral workers,
By their slow but constant motion,
Have built those pretty islands
In the distant Indian ocean.
And the noblest undertakings
Man's wisdom hath ever rested,
By oft-repeated efforts
Have been patiently achieved.

Then do not look disheartened
On the work you have to do,
And say that such a mighty task
You never can get through;
But just endeavor day by day
Another point to gain,
And soon the thought-of thing you feared
Will prove to be a plain.

Rome was not founded in a day,
The adage all have taught us,
And Nature by her trees and flowers
The same lesson teaches.
Then let us not be weary,
But labor on with cheerful heart,
And, having once begun the work,
Resolve to persevere.

Boys of English History.

The fierce storm beats down on the gloomy Normandy castle of Falaise, in a deep dungeon of which lies imprisoned the boy Prince Arthur, lawful heir to the crown of England, but now, alas! a helpless victim of the cruelty and injustice of his bad uncle, John Plantagenet, the usurper of his throne. The thunder peals so loudly, and the wind rages so angrily, that Hubert de Burgh, the warden, does not for a long time distinguish the sound of a knocking and shouting at the outer gate of the castle. Presently, however, in a lull of the wind, his ears catch the noisy summons, and he instantly gives orders to his men to let down the drawbridge, and admit the newcomers. These were three in number; one attired as a king's messenger, and mounted on a richly caparisoned horse; the other two in the garb of common men, and on foot. When they had come into the presence of the warden, the king's messenger said:

"I am charged by his Majesty King John of England to deliver to you this letter and require your faithful discharge of its commands."

So saying he handed to Hubert de Burgh a sealed letter, which the latter eagerly broke open and read. As he read, his face clouded. It was a long letter, and couched in vague terms, but its substance was this: That whereas the peace of England and of King John's possessions in France was constantly being disturbed by the pettishness of the young Prince Arthur, desiring to see him king instead of his uncle, and taking up arms to enforce their claim, it was necessary, in order to put an end to this rebellion, that this young prince should be rendered unfit for governing; and as no people would be likely to choose a blind boy for their king, Hubert de Burgh was instructed to have Arthur's eye put out; and the two men who had arrived with the king's messenger were come, so the letter said, to carry out the design.

Hubert de Burgh said nothing as he put by the letter, and dismissed his three visitors from his presence. Cruel man as he had been, his heart had still some pity left, and he shrank from obeying his master by so horrid an act of cruelty upon the innocent boy in his charge.

However, the order of the king was peremptory; and if the deed must be done, thought he, the sooner the better.

So he ordered the two villains to get ready their instruments, and follow him to the dungeon.

"Stay here," said he, as they reached the young prince's door, "while I enter also and prepare him for his fate."

So those two set down their fire and the red-hot irons, and waited outside for their summons.

When Hubert entered the dungeon, the poor boy was just waking from a sleep. He sat up and rubbed his eyes, being dazzled by the light which Hubert carried in his hand.

"You are welcome," said he (for Arthur, while so few to love him, loved even his surly, though not unkind, jailor.) "I have been in my dreams away in merry England, where I thought I was living in a beautiful palace, with food and servants, and rich clothing, and that there was a crown on my head. And so it shall be some day, Hubert, when I get my rights, said they, because you have not been so unkind to me as some in my adversity, you shall be a great and rich man. But why look so solemn? What ails you?"

The warden stood silent for some moment before he spoke, and then his voice was thick and hoarse:

"Prince," he said, "take your last look on the light, for you may never see it again."

The boy sprang from his bed, and seized Hubert by the knees.

"What! Are they going to kill me? Must they take away my life?"

"Not so," said Hubert; "it is not thy life that is required, but thine eyes." And as he spoke he stamped on the floor, as the signal of those two who waited without to enter.

At sight of their horrid instruments, the cords which were to bind him, and the cruel faces of the executioners, Arthur fell on his knees, and implored mercy of the stubborn Hubert.

It was a strange and pitiful sight to see that weak and helpless boy kneeling, and with tears entreating that stout old warrior, whose bosom heaved and whose fingers twitched, and whose faces winced, as he listened, while the two others stood motionless, grasping their irons and cords, ready for the word of command to step forward and do their cruel deed.

But the cries and entreaties of the helpless and beautiful prince prevailed. Hubert wavered and hesitated; he bade the men advance, and then bade them withhold; he looked at the prince and he looked at the glowing irons; he pushed the supplicant from him, and then suffered him to cling to him. The executioners themselves were moved to pity, and lay down their instruments. Finally, with a mighty effort the warden yielded and said: "Rise, boy, and take with you your socks, till I require you." Then turning to Arthur, he said, "Prince, thou shalt keep thy sight and thy life while I am by to protect thee." And the rough hand of the old warrior stroked the hair of the weeping boy as it might have been his own son's.

The answer that Hubert de Burgh sent back that day by the king's messenger was an earnest appeal for mercy for Arthur, the king's young and now beloved charge.

But King John was a stranger to all feelings of pity, and his revenge was quick and dreadful. Foiled of his cruel design upon the eyesight of his hapless nephew, he determined now to have his life. So he ordered him to be taken from Falaise, and the custody of the humane De Burgh to the castle of Rouen, under whose walls flowed the waters of the River Seine. But the prince did not remain long there. One night a jailor entered his dungeon, and, waking him from his sleep, ordered him to follow him. The boy obeyed in silence, as the jailor confined himself to the winding staircase which led to the foot of the tower, beside which the Seine flowed. A boat was waiting at the bottom in which sat two men. The torch of the jailor threw a sudden glare over the dark water, and by its light Arthur recognized, with horror and despair, in one of the two the chief features of his uncle John. It was useless for him to pray and entreat; it was as useless for him to struggle or cry out. They dragged him into the boat, and held him fast as it darted under the shadow of those gloomy walls into the mid-stream. What happened there no one can tell; but had any listened that still dark night they might have heard a boy's wild cry across the waters, and then a dull, heavy plash—and that was all.

The story is that of these two, King John with his own hand did the foul deed. However that may be, Arthur of Brittany was never even heard of more.—Boys' Own Paper.

The Angle Children.

Nearly thirteen hundred years ago the old English who had come to Britain were heathen, and believed in many false gods; the Sun, to whom they made Sunday sacred, as Monday was to the Moon, Wednesday to a great, terrible god, named Woden, and Thursday to a god named Thor, or Thunder. They thought a clap of thunder was the sound of the great hammer he carried in his hand. They thought their gods cared for people being brave, and that the souls of those who died fighting gallantly in battle were the happiest of all; but they did not care for kindness or gentleness.

Thus they often did very cruel things, and one of the worst that they did was the stealing of men, women and children from their homes, and selling them to strangers, who made slaves of them. All England had not one king. There were generally about seven kings, each with a different part of the island; and as they were often at war with each other they used to steal one another's subjects, and sell them to merchants who came from Italy and Greece for them.

Some English children were made slaves, and carried to Rome, where they were set in the market place to be sold. A good priest, named Gregory was walking by. He saw their fair faces, blue eyes and long light hair, and, stopping, he asked who they were. "Angels," he was told, "from the Isle of Britain." "Angels?" he said; "they have angel faces, and they ought to be heirs with the angels in heaven." From that time this good man tried to find means to send teachers to teach the English the Christian faith. He had to wait for many years, and, in that time, became Pope, namely, Father Bishop of Rome. At last he heard that one of the chief English kings, Ethelbert, of Kent, had married Bertha, the daughter of the king of Paris, who was a Christian, and that she was to be allowed to bring a priest with her and have a church, to worship in. Gregory thought this would make a beginning; so he sent a priest, whose name was Augustine, with a letter to King Ethelbert and Queen Bertha, and asked the king to listen to him. Ethelbert met Augustine in the open air, under a tree at Canterbury and Christianity fell about the true God and Jesus Christ, whom he has sent, and, after some time, and a great deal of teaching, Ethelbert gave up worshiping Woden and Thor, and believed in the true God, and was baptized, and many of his people with him. Then Augustine was made Archbishop of Canterbury; and, one after another, in the course of the next hundred years, all the English kingdoms learned to know God, and broke down their idols, and became Christians.—Young Folks' Historical Series.

A few evenings since a father and daughter at Wellesley, Mass., were curiously recalling incidents of the latter's childhood. "I shall never forget," said the young lady, "how you took me out to church one Sabbath, when I was about three years old, and punished me for playing in meeting. I can remember the flogging of that peach tree switch to this day." "Very strange, very strange," said the father; "I don't recollect the circumstance at all." "Ah, well, papa, you were at the other end of the switch."

Teach me, Father, to say, with David's triumphant faith, 'The Lord, my God, will enlighten my darkness.' Let me feel that there is always some ray of divine sunlight near me, if I would but open my eyes to see it.

ORGAN OF THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES OF THE M. E. CHURCH, SOUTH.

THURSDAY, JULY 10, 1879.

REV. LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.

OFFICE—112 CAMP ST., NEW ORLEANS.

Sunday and Whisky.

The Louisiana Constitutional Convention, now in session in New Orleans, has passed an ordinance prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors on Sunday. The liquor men are already moving to oppose the measure. They will endeavor to have the vote reconsidered, and will doubtless use personal and moneyed influences to the utmost to defeat the measure. We have hopes that the Convention will stand firm, and that whisky-selling in Louisiana on Sunday will receive its quietus. We should be glad if all trade were prohibited on Sunday, and also that the retailing of intoxicating liquors were altogether done away with. These measures would be just, and are demanded by the public welfare, but if we cannot have them, the prohibition of the sale of liquors on Sunday will prove of inestimable benefit. It will give us comparatively quiet and peaceful Sabbaths, and the amount of crime will be greatly reduced. There is more drinking on Sunday than on any other day, and there are more drunkenness and disturbances of the peace.

The prohibition will be a benefit to our State in a material point of view, encouraging emigration and the investment of capital, and inspiring the respect and confidence of other communities. The settlement of the State debt and the rate of taxation are not so vital as this liquor question. The shutting up of the drinking saloons will do more for the general prosperity than any other thing that the Convention can do. It will be worth more to New Orleans than a railroad to Texas. New Orleans has never had a Sabbath, and her open shops, theaters, dancing-houses, and coffee-houses and markets, are things which may well bring the blush of shame to the cheeks of her citizens when they are traveling abroad. An annual visitation of yellow fever would scarcely be a greater calamity to the city and State than is the general and open desecration of the Sabbath, and the sale of whisky. The loss of property and life, and the depreciation of values occasioned by liquor, and the crimes and pauperism which it produces, are greater than from all other causes put together. Whisky has much to do with lawlessness wherever it prevails. To be an orderly and law-abiding people we must become a sober people. The material welfare is always closely connected with the moral. To ignore the Sabbath and keep open these fountains of death—the grog-shops—on the Sabbath costs in dollars and cents more than sufficient to pay our State debt annually.

But, upon the higher grounds of morals and religion, what can be expected of a community that permits a divine institution to be desecrated by a business that at all times is hardly less than criminal? For the rising generation to be raised amidst such influences must be ruinous to thousands of our young men, and the tendency is to obliterate all reverence and respect for Christian institutions. It is a time when the friends of religion, and all who have the reputation and material welfare of the country at heart, should unite in the effort to shut up the liquor-houses on Sunday. The liquor-sellers are banded together in opposing the measure, and all good men must unite in the endeavor to defeat their plans for our ruin.

The law already existing, which gives to police juries the power to close stores and liquor houses on the Sabbath is a good one, and has proved a blessing in the parishes where it has been executed. But we need a State and organic law in order to reach those points where the whisky influence is in the ascendant. The ordinance once incorporated in the Constitution will be likely to stay there, and the friends of temperance and of religion will be apt to see that the law is enforced. We confess that the action of the Convention has given us more hope for the city and State than anything that has happened for a long time. When we get rid of Sunday trading, Sunday liquor selling and the Louisiana Lottery Company, we shall be well on the road to a restored prosperity.

Our depressed industries, our decayed real estate, and our grasping and throttled commerce, need these reforms even more than railroads, ships, levees and jetties. Give us a Sabbath, a sober people, and deliverance from the power of rum-sellers, and from the blight of legalized gambling, and our good State will become a commonwealth of which her citizens may be justly proud.

Exodus—One-Sidedness.

BY W. E. M. LINFIELD, D. D.

A dark future is pictured for the South by Dr. Fowler, of the New York Christian Advocate—a day of revenge and spoliation by the negroes. The incongruity of these forecastings, with the conciliating assurances of the Louisville fraternal address, has set us to thinking out a solution of the contradiction. Incongruities consist with a high respectability, human nature being the consideration, and, as the address plead in the interest of Christian harmony, it ought to be shielded from the suspicion of artifice, and leave us to find an explanation for the change of feeling in the newspaper article, in which appear two open faults: First, a grave blunder in the use of the law of association, and second, a total personal unacquaintance with the condition of the negroes.

The appropriation of a great historic event, widely known and well understood to aggrandize a small local affair of doubtful report, is not literature but lawlessness, such as the exode of the twelve famous tribes from Egypt, under the lead of Moses. And the migration of a few hundred darkies from the State of Mississippi is an exhibition of imaginative zeal as reckless of the rules of association as of the consequences of a misapplied analogy. There is no parity in the events so grotesquely associated, and therefore an utter disparity in the ideas derived, and the use they are made to serve. The piece of work is a master effort to convey a suggestion: "As they did, so do you," and to cover a personal desire by a hint from an unsuspected reference. If passion did not dominate where reason should have ruled, how could ordinary insight fail to perceive the double edge in the overdone analogy? If the Mississippians are the Egyptians whom the retiring negroes are to spoil, what is to become of the Kanelans and others, the occupants of the territory they are to occupy? The picture deepens in darkness as the exodus moves on, and night is the doom of the land left to the approaching destiny of the land sought.

The doctor must mend his rhetoric to save his own head. It is not too bold to add that the one open fault is procured by another—bad advice and false prophesying—from a total unacquaintance with the condition of the negroes.

Our government has not thought it to ascertain the condition of the laboring population of either our own or adjacent countries, with a view to a comparison and a generalization. Without the data governing in the premises, any judgment is of doubtful value, but other governments have taken the pains to ascertain these life-conditions, our county not included, and the reports are ample. An exact generalization—i. e., the standard of well-being for a laboring population—cannot be stated until all the particulars of the group are collected and compared. An opinion without such a guide is of little force in an accusation or exculpation of blame for neglect or oppression of the laboring class. To divide a nation in sentiment, and array them against one another in hostile feeling upon any phase of sympathy derived from a case involved in such obscurity, neither indicates the wisdom of years or the maturity of reflection. But, so far as the notices at hand, and familiarity of association, enable an intelligent statement, the following is offered:

1. That the actual life-conditions, including personal, domestic, social and political, of the laboring populations of the South, both blacks and whites are alike, and are what the climate, soil and industry admit, and the public laws afford. This is a candid, careful and full statement of the prevailing life-conditions of the whole laboring population, and sympathy for the one, to the exclusion of the other, is simply an exception on behalf of the negro to the common lot of labor in which, under universal necessity he shares, to eat his bread in peace.

2. The relative condition of the negro laboring population in the South to other laboring populations, whose conditions have been reported upon, admits the following conclusion: Better earnings for the labor bestowed, the gauge of this statement and its contents is taken from uniform practice. In a farm contract labor is put against land, stock and tools, and an equal division of the crop. The negro farm laborer in the South handles more money than any other reported laborer of his class. His domestic rights and comforts rest on the broad basis of natural ability, his home will compare with the best of his class, and his acquisition of property is facilitated by joint interests. He has no competition with labor-saving machinery to reduce dependence upon him, or diminish his wages to cost of machine work. No antipathy of capital against universal need to greater advantage. If the hand of Providence can be detected in the affairs of men, and if the sentiments ascribed to him in the Holy Scriptures certify to us hidden things, then the universal well-being is the rule, and individual advantages subordinate. The Christianization of the negroes was and is the work of his neighbors. The greatest service of the negro to the rest of mankind is in his just labor with the white race in the South.

Centenary College, Louisiana.

The commencement exercises were, on the whole, very gratifying. The audiences were better than for two or three years past, and there was improvement in the exhibitions, both of the preparatory department and of the societies. The speeches of the members of the societies on Tuesday night were of a high order of merit, and well delivered. The annual sermon was preached on Sunday morning, June 29 by Rev. R S Woodward, of Natchez, Miss. The large college chapel was well filled, and we had a practical and strong sermon on the Cross of Christ. Rev. C. W. Carter, of the Louisiana Conference, delivered the address before the Alumni Association on Tuesday morning. His subject was: "The Ideals of Manhood," and it was treated in a masterly manner. It is seldom in a lifetime that we happen upon such a treat as this was. It would have done honor to the rostrums of Yale, Harvard or Vanderbilt. Centenary has reason to be proud of her alumni, Dr Carter graduated twenty-four years ago, and richly merits the honorary degree which he now receives from his Alma Mater.

The meeting in the hall of the Franklin Society on Tuesday morning, an hour or two before the alumni address, was as usual a feast of fat things. There was an address by a member of the society, the delivery of the society diploma to J. W. Chambers, a handsome address by him, and then a general fusillade of short and brilliant speeches from visitors. It was a sort of literary love-feast, an experience meeting, flashing and sparkling from beginning to end—the end excepted this time—with the best things of many gifted minds. The literary address before the societies was delivered by W. H. Geodale, Esq., of Baton Rouge, a very thoughtful and instructive production. His theme was: "Symmetrical Education"—a subject which at this time needs to be impressed upon the attention of educators as well as upon the convictions of the people generally.

On commencement day the graduate, J. W. Chambers, had to do double duty—giving us an excellent speech at the opening and the valedictory afterwards. There being but one graduate this year, this circumstance suggested the topic of President Andrews' baccalaureate: the advantages of self-reliance, self-help, of being alone in working out the problems of life, and in the achievement of success. The address was well conceived, happily illustrated, and all its points were forcibly presented. The exercises were brought to a close by a robust speech from Bishop Keener, president of the Board of Trustees. It was to the people, on the state of the college, the condition of the country, and the general outlook. He emphasized the importance of patronizing our own schools, as opposed to sending abroad or to State institutions, gave advice to farmers to make their own hay and corn, and to raise stock, and insisted that the South has a bright and promising future before it.

A feature of the commencement exercises was the excellence of the music. We have not had occasion to say much about the music heretofore. This year it was a most delightful part of the entertainment. Cornet, violin, harp and flute have seldom done a better service. Besides being a refreshment to the audience, the music was an inspiration to the speakers.

John W. Chambers, a young man preparing for the ministry, graduated, and received the degree of Batchelor of Arts. A. R Holcombe and T. C. Gordon received the degree of Master of Arts in course. The honorary degree of Master of Arts was conferred upon John Burruss Magruder, of Baton Rouge, La., and the degree of Doctor of Divinity upon Rev. C. W. Carter, of the Louisiana Conference.

The state of the college was, as usual, thoroughly examined into by the Board of Trustees, and the administration of the faculty heartily approved. The examinations were thorough, and the grade of scholarship higher than in other years. No partiality is shown, and, to pass, the student must come up to the required standard. The deportment of the students has been remarkably good, and the religious influences among them are causes of special gratification. Among the students this session there have been nine young preachers, four preacher's sons, and in all seventeen who have had free tuition. The college is certainly doing a great and beneficent work in this line, and it has a right to appeal to our people for aid on this ground. The faculty are laborious, self-sacrificing men, and are entitled to the support of all who have at heart the cause of religion and education.

There is no healthier location for a college in the South than Jackson. It was free from yellow fever last year when so many places in the country were visited by the terrible scourge. The expense is as low as at any school we know of. Tuition in the Preparatory Department, $45; in the college classes, $65. Board in families, including everything, from $15 to $20 a month, and students furnishing their own rooms in the college buildings, $12 a month, including everything. With facilities like these at hand, hundreds of our Southern boys ought to enter Centenary in October. For religious and moral training, for health, for economy, and for thorough and careful instruction in the important branches of a collegiate course, Centenary can be safely chosen as the place to send our young men.

Commencement Exercises of the Southern University, Greensboro, Ala.

The commencement sermon was preached by Rev. F. R. Hill, June 29. The discourse was short, pithy, at times rhetorical, and, best of all, full of gospel truth.

Monday morning a large audience assembled in the college chapel to hear the "prize declamations." A lively interest had been excited among the friends of the thirteen contestants. After hearing their declamations we concluded that their friends had a well-grounded hope that their favorite would carry off one of the two prizes to be awarded. But, alas! for human hopes! Even noble hearts were to be disappointed. But, never mind it, young gentlemen. You did not take these prizes. There are before you others of far greater value, which pluck and perseverance will certainly win.

The first prize was awarded to Creyon B. Walker, of Eufaula, and the second to Samuel D. Tisdale, of Sepulga. A special prize was given to W. A. McCann, of Newbern, by some of the audience, in whose judgment he should have been the victor. Dr. Lewis had thoroughly drilled these young gentlemen in the art of elocution, and if they will "rise higher and take fire" some of them may make Patrick Henrys yet.

The final exhibition of the Belles-Lettres Society came off on Monday evening. Four speakers delivered original orations. W. P. Hurt and W. A. McCann showed their genius in speech-making as well as their skill in the art of declamation. S. D. Tisdale discoursed lovingly on "Courtship," to the delight of all, unless, perchance, we except the matrimonially inclined sixteen-year-old boy. J. M. Spurlock delivered, in a forcible manner, an argumentative speech on the "Evils of Carrying Concealed Weapons." This was practical and timely, and was listened to with unusual interest.

From the profusion of flowers and bouquets which the speakers received, we judge that the fair sex of Greensboro were delighted with the efforts of the young orators.

Tuesday morning Hon. B. M. Hury delivered the annual address before the Alumni Society, and Samuel W. Goode, Esq., before the Literary Societies. Mr Hury graduated here nineteen years ago—the first graduate of the Southern University. His address was touching and practical—a just tribute from the first alumnus to his Alma Mater. Mr. Goode sustained his reputation as one of the first orators of Alabama. His oration though containing much "classical lore," was full of practical thought. His rhetorical strokes were very fine, though rather profuse, and his wit superb.

Tuesday evening, as we entered the chapel, we were greeted with the neatest and prettiest programme for the evening we have seen for years. The clariosophics presented as their orators for the evening N. L. Whitfield, Creyon B Walker, J. M. Kendall and E. W. de Graffenried. The subjects of these young gentlemen were well chosen, their speeches well written, and impressively delivered.

Wednesday, commencement day, six young men delivered their graduating speeches and received their diplomas. J. W. Moore, T. A. Taylor and J. D. Yerby took the degree of A. B., and W. P. Hurt, L. D. Landrum and E. B. Ward that of B. P. One thing in the speeches of the class impressed us: they were plain, practical, sensible. They said but little about the "departed glory of Greece and Rome," or the "sweet music of the forest songsters," or the "blazing splendor of the bespangled heavens" which so frequently form the staple of a graduating speech.

These young men go out from these halls of sanctified learning with the impress and benediction of godly men. May they ever be true to their Alma Mater, and not disappoint the high expectations cherished by their many friends.

Dr. Lewis, in his happiest manner, delivered the baccalaureate. It was a perfect gem, the best address of the kind it has ever been our pleasure to hear.

Dr. A. S Andrews, president of the Board of Trustees, announced that the board had conferred the following honorary degrees: L. L. D. on Bishop John C. Keener and Senator John T. Morgan; D. D. on Rev. John S. Moore and Oliver R Blue, of the Alabama Conference, and A. M. on J. W. DuBose, of Livingston, Ala.

The exercises from the sermon on Sunday to the baccalaureate on Wednesday were excellent—the best, I am told, for several years. But one thing was lacking to make the occasion altogether a pleasant one—the presence of Dr Smith, who is dangerously ill at Birmingham, perhaps dying at this writing.

The institution will continue under the same faculty, the announcement of which was received with hearty and prolonged applause. There were more visitors than usual from a distance. The college is becoming better known, and its claims more faithfully and persistently presented. The financial agent, Rev. W. Powers, is doing much in this way as well as in securing material aid for the university. But he cannot do all that must be done. Let the students urge the claims of this school. Let the present patrons continue their patronage, and get their neighbors to send their sons. Let each alumnus secure at least one pupil. Let all the preachers of the Alabama Conference inform their charges that we have a church institution to sustain, that we have the best college building in west Alabama, I believe in the State; that we have at the Southern University as full and as competent a faculty as can be found at any similar institution—a faculty of faithful and consecrated men; that all who send their sons here will place them under the care of men, whose constant aim will be to improve the morals and gentlemanly deportment of their pupils; that they can educate their sons at Greensboro as cheap as at institutions which offer free tuition.

Let the students and patrons, and alumni and preachers, and friends of the institution, do these things, and a new era of prosperity will dawn upon our school. There is no good reason why any Methodist should patronize other institutions. We can and must sustain a school that will meet all the reasonable wants of a cultivated people.

H. M. MOSS.

—Bishop Keener returned from the commencement of Centenary College last Thursday. After the Seashore camp meeting, and some District Conferences, he expects to leave about the tenth of August for the West, Colorado, California, Oregon.

—We fell in with Dr. C. K. Marshall last week on board the Steamboat Whisper. The doctor was on his way to Baton Rouge, where he was to preach on Sunday, the sixth, and to lecture for the benefit of our church on the Monday night following. We were glad to find him as fresh and hale as at any time during the past twenty years.

—Rev. Dr. Tudor preached twice in New Orleans on Sunday, June 29. His friends were all rejoiced to see and hear him. Our trip to Jackson deprived us of a privilege which we should have greatly appreciated.

—We are having pleasant summer weather in New Orleans, and the city was never healthier. There is no yellow fever here, and no indications that any is likely to appear this season. The city is remarkably free from every kind of fever. The port is vigilantly quarantined, and more than usual care is given to the sanitary condition of the streets. An unacclimated person is as safe in New Orleans at this time as he would be in Boston or Montreal.

—The crop prospects throughout the country are generally good. The corn crop of north Louisiana and of some other sections has been cut off by drouth, but the cotton everywhere is said to be doing well. The first bale of new cotton reached Galveston, July 1—the earliest on record. The sugar-cane is reported as doing finely, the stubble is inferior, but the plant cane is remarkably good. Besides the probability of a bountiful harvest, the health of the country throughout the Southwest is exceptionally excellent.

—About the exodus we hear but little. A good many of the Kansas emigrants have returned; a few are still going. We should not be surprised if the movement settled down into a gradual and continuous emigration of the negroes. Families, squads and individuals will probably go from time to time. There will also be a returning tide. We hear many people in the country speaking of it as the "blessed exodus." This, we believe, is coming to be the conviction of the whole people of the South. The immediate effects may be injurious to large planters; there will be less cotton and sugar made, but attention will be turned to stock, to manufactures, and to a diversified agriculture. There will be an end of race conflicts, socially and politically, and after the negro goes there will be peace, and after awhile prosperity. The Northern philanthropists and politicians ought to take their share of the negro, and we hope they may get him to their hearts' content.

Death of R. W. Rayne.

The death of this old and well-known citizen of New Orleans is announced by telegraph just as we are making up our forms for the press. He died suddenly at Ocean Springs Monday night, July 7. He left his residence in the city for his summer home at Ocean Springs on Saturday morning last. Several years ago he lost his sight, and had been in infirm health at times for a good while, but all the time continued the oversight of a large business. He was a man of affairs, of excellent business capacity and prosperous. We do not know when he came to New Orleans, but probably as long as forty years ago. He was a local elder in our church, and a fine expounder of the word of God—one of the most scriptural preachers that we ever heard. When we first knew him, nearly thirty years ago, he preached frequently, and continued to do so, until failing health within the last few years compelled him to desist. Not more than three months ago an appointment was assigned him in the suburbs of the city at his own request, but he was never able to meet it. Bro. Rayne was a native of England, and he was rooted and grounded in Wesleyan Methodism. Always greatly absorbed in business, he loved his church and his Master's work. The handsome Methodist Church on St. Charles Avenue was built through his efforts and means, and will long remain as the memorial of his devotion to Christ. He had a charitable spirit, a kindly disposition, and his hand was open to help the distressed. We loved him well and long, and it is with heartfelt sorrow that we record the death of this good man. We believe he was seventy years old at the time of his death. His death is a loss to our community, to the church, and an unspeakable bereavement to his family. To the bereaved we tender our heartfelt sympathies.

Christian Intelligencer.

—The ecclesiastical conscience breeds strifes, quarrels, controversies, and even bloody wars. It makes its scruples of human infirmity outweigh pounds of divine wisdom. It gorgles mint, anise and cummin, but neglects justice, mercy and truth. It is void of charity, and counts every dissident from its petty standard to be worse than a heathen man or publican. It has kindled the flames around martyrs, locked the dungeon upon innocence, and with infernal cruelty this depraved and selfish conscience has applied the rack and the thumb screw to make converts to the truth.

It is a mournful fact that as yet so many good men are yet held in bondage to ordinances, to precepts and to merely notions which limit them more completely than the law of life which is in Christ. They pull around in the treadmill of sectarian peculiarities, and think they are serving God while they are mental slaves of rules superimposed by human authority. These earth-made chains are indeed heavy, but multitudes still prefer them to the yoke which is easy and the burden which is light.

The Christian conscience warms in the flames of love, bows beneath the one supreme authority, and what liberty it claims for itself it concedes readily to others. The ecclesiastical conscience on the other hand sets up flickering lights over a miasmatic marsh, and erects a guide board on which bigotry has painted in big black letters: "This is the way, walk ye in it."

Georgia Advocate.

—A colored man by the name of James Ellis, formerly a slave of Mrs. Virginia A. Wisham, and a successful blacksmith, in Americus, Ga., upon hearing that his old mistress was in destitute circumstances—without even a shelter—went before an officer and executed a deed to a small farm in Macon county in favor of his former mistress, thus giving her a home in her old age without fee or reward. So says the American Republican. This is magnanimous—worthy of all praise—but there are many instances of the kind in Georgia which have never been recorded. We know of a similar case in Wilkes, the county of our nativity. An old maiden lady, Miss Grimsley, when we heard from her last, was living in the house with two of her former slaves, and these colored people were taking the most tender care of her. There is an affection existing between the races South which our Northern and Eastern brethren are hard to see and understand. There are mean white men and mean negroes in Georgia, and in many instances negroes have been fearfully mistreated by mean white men, and white men have been equally mistreated by mean negroes; but it is a sad mistake to conclude from hence that the two races at the South are deadly enemies, and the whites being the stronger, are constantly seeking opportunity to oppress and defraud the colored man. This is not true. As a general rule, when left to themselves, free from the intermeddling of designing men, the races live side by side in perfect harmony, pursuing their common interest unmolested. We wish we could be left alone. It would be better for all.

Zion's Herald.

—There is a wonderful difference between ability and availability. Many a minister, without conscious self-conceit, is conscious of his ability—natural and cultivated. He knows he can both write and preach better than certain other ministers who are unaccountably popular. He is a gentleman in his manners, and is thus recognized by men of all denominations in the vicinity of his public labors. But strangely enough, his services are not eagerly sought after by the churches. Inferior men, of certain sensational and magnetic abilities, are preferred before him. He cannot condescend to the means that seem to secure the popularity and success of these men. He does not believe in cant, in effusive exercises and demonstrative performances. He sees sadly enough his congregation diminishing rather than growing, the churches somewhat discouraged where he labors, and he becomes himself thoroughly disgusted with this condition of things. He is inclined to believe that somebody is intentionally injuring him; that he has not a fair chance; that the stationing power of the church voluntarily keeps him from the positions he ought to fill; and that undoubtedly some other religious body would better appreciate his talents. It is entirely probable that they would. We have known changes under these circumstances, to be happy all round, and a preacher that found himself out of his orbit, in one denomination, to revolve in peaceful harmony upon the plane of another organization. But still, in every church, there will be seen this broad distinction between ability and availability. The former will oftentimes fail to impress the masses, while the latter sweeps everything before it. Happy is he who is both able and available; but God has a place for every one; the great secret of life is to find it and be satisfied with it.

Christian Intelligencer.

—In some circles in Europe the government of the French Republic is regarded with special interest on account of the Jewish descent of some of the men holding leading positions. Messrs. Gambetta, Jules Simon and Jules Favie are said to have a good share of Jewish blood in their veins, if not of pure Jewish extraction. The self-possession, calmness and deliberation of these gentlemen has surprised everybody, and won the admiration of all except those they have defeated. Yet should we be surprised at composure and caution in a Jew, when we remember the long and severe trials through which he has passed, and which he has almost invariably turned to his advantage? Still it is a very suggestive fact that the administration of French affairs has fallen so naturally into the hands of the children of Judah.

Under the generous toleration and the principles of humanity established by Protestantism the Jew is steadily rising in influence and importance. No Christian can regard this fact, characteristic of our times, with any other feeling than one of genuine satisfaction. It is also exceedingly pleasant to notice the noble qualities more and more exhibited by the ancient people as the distance is increased between them and the prejudice, the social ostracism, and the fearful persecutions to which they were subjected not long ago. A treatment for which the papacy is largely responsible.

Two weeks ago we noticed the critical illness of Dr. Alexander Clark, editor of the Methodist Recorder of Pittsburg and a leading minister of the Methodist Protestant Church. It is with deep regret that we learn that he died at Atlanta, Ga., July 6. The following dispatch gives all the information received:

PITTSBURG July 7.—Rev. Dr Alexander Clark, editor of the Methodist Recorder of this city, the organ of the Methodist Church, died last evening at the residence of Gov Colquitt, at Atlanta, Ga., where he had been lying ill for more than two weeks. Dr. Clark went to North Carolina to deliver an address at a college commencement, and on his way back visited Atlanta, where he was taken sick. He was a brilliant writer, leader in his church, and was born in Jefferson county, O March 10, 1811. He was mostly self-educated. He began life by the publication of the School Day Visitor, setting type himself. This was afterward consolidated with the St. Nicholas." He was the author of several books which met with popular favor. His friends here generally regard his death as the result of overwork. He leaves a family at Woodsville, O.

Dr. Clark was one of the fraternal representatives of his church at our General Conference at Atlanta in May, 1878. He had a genial and truly fraternal spirit, and as an editor he was always candid and kind. He had a keen and sprightly mind, ready in resources, and, whilst firm and strong, he was loving and considerate. In him a great and good man has fallen and one for whom every branch of Methodism will mourn.

Rev. John A. Ellis, presiding elder of Seashore district, Mississippi Conference, writing a private note to the editor, from Perry county, July 1, says:

It is wonderful the fine corn that is growing on this pine land, since the people are giving attention more to their farms, the log business having been interrupted. But for the drouth—terminated now, happily, by pleasant showers—the corn I see would equal Tennessee crops. Surely there is a better future for this region. Corn, oats, peas, potatoes, rice, sugar cane, sheep, cattle, hogs and fogs, besides the variety of fruits and vegetables, easily grown. These are sufficient wealth. And if the Bishop will reduce the Seashore district to reasonable bounds, so that better attention may be bestowed upon the field, the yield to Christ and the church will be more satisfactory.

From Moss Point to this Enon quarterly meeting, just held, is through the county sixty-five miles. I go next to Ellisville, fifty miles, and then sixty odd miles toward home for another meeting, thence fifty-odd miles to Moss Point, just in time for the Seashore camp-meeting. And this is just a specimen. But it is the Lord's work, and all is well.

Rev. Dr. Tudor dedicated the new church at Searcy, Ark., June 22. A correspondent of the Western Methodist, giving an account of the occasion, says:

It was gratifying not only to the people of Searcy, and to their happy pastor, but to all, and especially Arkansas Methodist ministers, to hear D. Tudor say he had heard of the nice building, but highly appreciated the honor of participating in these services; but the magnificence of the structure, the elegance of its finish and furnishing, the completeness of the whole, as a house of worship, was beyond his expectations—he had no idea Arkansas Methodists had such an architectural beauty, such a thorough edifice as he now saw around him.

The house has cost near eight thousand dollars, which speaks in high praise of the Christian liberality of that section of Arkansas Methodism, and of the untiring energy, determined will and constant hope of Brother Dye, who has but a few months more to serve that people, this being his fourth year at Searcy.

In another column will be found an excellent report of the commencement of the Southern University, at Greensboro, Ala. This institution is evidently growing in public favor, and the indications of a prosperous future are evident. We call attention to this report, and especially to what is said in it concerning the obligations of Methodists to patronize their own schools. Those receiving honorary degrees are worthy. Drs. Blue and Moore will accept our congratulations, and also Bishop Keener and Senator Morgan.

While on a recent visit to Florida, we made inquiries concerning the whereabouts of Dr. L. D. Heston, and were pleased to learn that he was succeeding finely in the cultivation of semi tropical fruits on Indian river, and was highly esteemed by his neighbors. He keeps up family prayer, is exemplary in his life, courteous and considerate, and has so lived as to gain the confidence of all who live about him.—H., in Southern Methodist.

The Louisiana Constitutional Convention has passed an ordinance recognizing the State debt at its face value, and fixing the interest at three per cent. for the first fifteen years, and at four per cent. thereafter. An ordinance fixing the State capital at Baton Rouge has also been adopted. The ordinance prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors on the Sabbath day was passed on Thursday July 3.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.—Miss Pearl A. Parsons sends her contribution of $1 for China mission for June. The dollar contributed by her for May was also duly received and forwarded to Dr. Wilson, Missionary Secretary.

From Rev. J. L. Wright, contribution from Trenton, La., for Rev. J. W. Picot, French missionary, $3 50. From a "Friend of Missions," Jefferson county, Miss., for Rev. J. W. Picot, $1.

MISTAKE CORRECTED.—The Crystal Springs camp meeting begins July 31, and not July 24, as previously announced. The error grew out of an oversight or mistake on the part of the committee. Thursday, July 31, is the time. Let all take due notice, and correct the mistake.

The degree of Doctor of Divinity was recently conferred upon Rev. J. C. Hartzell, editor of the Southwestern Christian Advocate by the Illinois Wesleyan University.

See camp meeting notices on the eighth page. Read them carefully, and attend all you can.

THE SUNRISE KINGDOM; or Life and Scenes in Japan, and Woman's Work for Woman There. By Mrs. Julia D. Carrothers. Philadelphia: Presbyterian Board of Publication.

The author, Mrs. Carrothers, was connected with the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Presbyterian Church, and spent seven years as a missionary in Japan. The volume before us contains a large amount of information concerning Japan, and is specially instructive and entertaining in its account of Protestant missions in that country. The author's experiences and observations are related with a freshness and vigor of style which will not fail to interest. We commend the volume as well worth reading. It is a 12 mo. 408 pages, beautifully bound and illustrated.

SOUL-THIRST AND OTHER SERMONS. By Rev. Francis Wilshura, Second edition. New York: N. Tibbals & Sons. 1879.

We had occasion to notice this work when the first edition was issued. There are ten sermons in the volume, and all are good. Some of the best thoughts of the day is in them. The author's style is somewhat ornate, and abounds in apt illustrations. In handling such topics as the divinity of Christ, faith, the resurrection, and future punishment, he walks in the old orthodox paths. A good book, and worth buying. 12 mo. 218 pages, bound in cloth. For sale by La Hope & Wilkins, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

Our Sunday-school periodicals from Nashville for July are late in reaching us. They are in their usual neat and attractive dress and well filled with interesting articles. The Sunday-School Quarterly containing lessons for the third quarter is among the publications of the present month.

THE air of perfection, cleanliness and home-like comfort which is so apparent at the American House, Boston, is one of the characteristic features of that well-regulated establishment. It will pay you to give him a call, and see the beautiful work manship he prepares for his customers. Jefferson road is the proper place. See advertisement on the sixth page and give him a call. Country orders solicited.

TUTT'S PILLS.—These pills are indorsed by physicians, clergymen and the afflicted everywhere. They are a corrective for all the different diseases, as seen in his advertisement on the eighth page. SAFES.—Since all the savings banks in the city have closed their doors and their safes, the next thing in order is to buy a money chest, so that when your money is in it you can rest satisfied that your small or big savings is under your own eye, and not in institutions that nobody knows anything about but the presidents. Our old friend, A. Roy, No. 27 Canal street, agent for Diebold Safe and Lock Company, will be happy to make your acquaintance, and show you a safe place for your wealth, and at prices that will suit all kinds of money bags.

EQUITABLE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.—The officers of this fine institution have so managed their affairs that by an official statement the Equitable is shown to have a larger actual amount of surplus than any other company in the country. Policies are made unforfeitable, and none for double after three years' payments have been made. So that if the insured is unable to pay longer he will receive a paid up policy for three years, upon which, after his death, his heirs or assignees receive their proper legacy promptly. Messrs. Williams & Woods, of this city, are the general agents, and we recommend them and their company to all needing and wishing for life assurance.

WE have received from Messrs. Boericke & Tafel, homœopathic pharmacists, a pamphlet giving the history of the origin, progress, and end of the yellow fever in the Mississippi valley last summer, by Dr. Ernest Hardenstein, of Vicksburg, Miss. This gentleman was one of the most successful physicians in the treatment of the disease. His losses were not much over three per cent. The price of this valuable book is only fifty cents. For sale at 413 Canal street.

CHICAGO, ST. LOUIS AND NEW ORLEANS RAILROAD.—In our repeated trips to the Eastern cities we have travelled over nearly all the lines of railroad connecting the South with the commercial cities of the East and North, and we are in fact compelled to say that we have never enjoyed more real comfort on any line than the above. We have observed the character and conduct of the agents and employees of this line with great pleasure. In the last two and a half years the track has been relaid, a distance of four hundred miles with steel, and the rolling stock are now as good as those on the line of any road in the country, notably Wabash Valley and Milan. The table has been fixed at a cost of $1,000, and is spread before the finest railway hotel this side of the Mississippi river. There is only one change to New York, and that is at the breakfast station at Columbus, Ohio. Passengers are now landed in St. Louis the second night out, and one day saved to Chicago. When the management has done so much for the people of the cities where the road is called after we think that our own people should show them what their labors and efforts have been appreciated by taking tickets via St. Charles. The popular general passenger and ticket agent, has aided materially to the present success of this line. He is considered by the railroad fraternity to have reached the pinnacle of passenger agent. We congratulate he road in having such a gentleman as one of their officers.

INDIGESTION.

The main cause of the complaint is indigestion, and there is failure in one or more of these much-to-be-valued agents, a good health will not follow. It differs to it, in that the stomach, purifies the blood, and keeps the liver and kidneys active, to carry off all the foul humors and waste matter of the system. See other column.

THE reason why medical practitioners do not prescribe Dr. E. Wilbor's Cod Liver Oil and Lime, which contains the full medicinal value of the pure Cod Liver Oil, is because they cannot control the quality. Dr. Wilbor's Cod Liver Oil and Lime is prepared from fresh selected livers, at the seashore, and is always uniform in quality and strength. IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT

IN

Life Assurance!

The Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States makes the following announcement to the public:

The dissatisfaction which prevails throughout the community with regard to onerous conditions contained in life assurance contracts and the judicial decisions based thereon, together with the public indorsement of the liberal usages of this society as shown by its largely increased business, has led the management seriously to consider whether the contract could not be simplified and certain conditions existing therein which have been the subject of much criticism and misconception.

After a careful examination of the experience of some of the best companies in Great Britain, who have shown a greater liberality than has been customary in this country, this society feels justified in adopting a form of contract in which the following important concessions are made to policy holders throughout the United States:

1. Policies will be made incontestable after three years from their date.

2. Each ordinary policy will provide for a definite surrender-value or paid-up-assurance, in case the policy is forfeited after three years from its date.

3. Each Tontine policy will contain a definite surrender-value in cash in case of withdrawal at the end of the Tontine period.

4. The contract will be concisely and clearly expressed, containing only such provisions as are necessary to protect the policy holders.

5. The above concessions will hereafter enure to the benefit of all policies already issued and in force after three years from their dates respectively.

BEET SUGAR PRODUCTION.—This departure of farm industry is beginning to excite considerable interest both in the United States and Canada. The subject has been up for discussion at farmers' meetings the past winter, both in the States and in Canada. This has aroused a spirit of inquiry among farmers as to the economy of sugar-beet husbandry.

A German chemist discovered, in 1747, that sugar could be made of beet juice. In 1792 another German chemist succeeded in making sugar from beets on a small scale, and soon after several factories were started. Napoleon, in 1812, wrote up this subject, and the first treatise on making sugar from beets was published. So satisfactory was this branch of economy of making sugar in the country, that several of the continental governments fostered it.

Napoleon the First did much to introduce beet-root sugar into France, especially during 1812, when in the blockade of the French ports prevented a foreign supply of cane sugar. The Minister of Agriculture had put at his disposal 8,000,000 francs, and problem of his department of agriculture. At the close of the blockade the production of beet-root sugar ceased, and it fell into disuse. It was revived again, and since, down to 1872, when the production of the French ports prevented a foreign supply of cane sugar. The Minister of Agriculture had put at his disposal 8,000,000 francs, and problem of his department of agriculture. At the close of the blockade the production of beet-root sugar ceased, and it fell into disuse. It was revived again, and since, down to 1872, when the production of the [illegible]

—Prof. Moebius, of Kiel, has examined the so-called organic nature of Eozoon, the supposed fossil Foraminifer of the limestones and serpentines of Laurentian age. His attention was drawn to the subject during his recent trip to Mauritius, when he discovered a massive Carpenteria, supposed by some to be Eozoon. In his memoir, which is fully illustrated, the form and size of Eozoon, as recognized by Dawson and Carpenter, and their comparison of its structure with that of certain Foraminifera, are given in some detail; also the shape, size, and arrangement of the chamber-canals, "cement lines," etc.; the "tubuli" or "nummuline layers," and the "canals of canals" are discussed, and the structure of Eozoon, as a whole, compared with fossil Foraminifera. Moebius, who is an excellent observer and a naturalist of much general ability, having recently been elected rector of the University of Kiel, gives his zoological reasons, and they are weighty ones, for rejecting the organic nature of this substance. These are the absence of any primary or central chamber, the apparently capricious distribution of both the tubuline layer and the "canals," the impossibility of representing Eozoon as a whole by any drawing of one natural specimen, and the consequent necessity of using diagrammatic figures to illustrate the reconstructed body.

WHENCE DOES THE DEW COME.—The general belief is that the dew arises from the air at night by absorption and condensation, to some extent, as to the effects most often ascribed, and that in times of drouth the moisture of the air for evaporation of dew also plants will be otherwise wanting. Another possible explanation is that the vapor which arises from the surface is condensed by coming in contact with the colder air. The phenomenon of so-called "dew-falls" is due, it is said, to the supposed fact that soil and plants are colder than the air at night, and so condense the moisture in the form of "dew" on the leaf pickets. In illustration to prove the theory but, as we have seen, the contrary is the case, and the reverse of those with a hard rain, which are full warmer than the air at night, while the latter is colder. Further investigations were made in the study of this question. A Dr. Cox, writing upon cottonwood, which will wilt and, after a growing grass, the next morning the grass was loaded with dew, but not that appeared on the box, and the temperature of the soil was one and one-half degrees. This experiment was repeated many times with the same results. Then a board was placed in the box, in the morning the board was dry, but the under side was thickly studded with drops of water also.

NATURE'S WASTE PRODUCTS.—Concerning the process of nature which man will probably never be established, Dr. Soames, the English scientist, speaks as follows: "Man dresses in a few seconds. When, like me, I was in Switzerland ago, I viewed the great Falls of Niagara, I was particularly struck with the extraordinary amount of force which is lost as far as the use of purposes of man are concerned. One hundred millions of tons of water fall there every hour from a vertical height of one hundred and fifty feet, which is equal to a force of 8,000,000 horse power, or in other words, to perform the work of one million men. To put it in another form, we have the force of 2,000,000 tons of coal, carefully burned in steam engines, to perform the same amount of work. Almost all the power used in the United States is derived from the burning of coal, which requires the consumption of 100,000,000 tons of coal annually. Now, all this power, or its equivalent, is wasted, and is allowed to run to waste. Why should we not utilize it? Why should we not make it do our work? Why should we not make it do our work? Why should we not make it do our work

The moral and spiritual influence of Christianity can flow normally into the State only through the hearts of individual citizens, not by any organic or official method, nor the purity thus introduced will express itself, not by any attempt to incorporate a Christian creed into the constitution, nor in any patronage of the church, nor by the slightest departure from its secular functions, but in the fluer quality of the justice it administers and represents, in a stricter fidelity to its obligations, and in the more faithful and impartial performance of its own special duties.—Sunday Afternoon.

FARADAY'S LOST CUP.—There is a story told of a workman of the great chemist Faraday. One day he knocked into a jar of acid a little silver cup. It disappeared, was eaten up by the acid, and couldn't be found. One said he could find it; another said it was held in solution, and there was no possibility of finding it. The great chemist came in and put some chemical into the jar, and in a moment every particle of the silver was precipitated to the bottom. He lifted it out a shapeless mass, sent it to the silversmith, and the cup was restored.

By the last accounts from Zanzibar we learn that Mr. Stanley is making a series of short explorations of the rivers debouching on the east coast of Africa, near Zanzibar. He has inspected again the Wami, and apparently satisfied himself that the river is unnavigable, and not likely to be the grand thrivial highway he hitherto had supported it to be. The general opinion is that his ultimate destination is the Congo.—Athenæum.

DISCOVERY BY which hair can be forced to grow on the smoothest heads. The papers all over the country contain notices of the remarkable virtues of Mrs. Hyatt's Hair Restorer, and life-like scores of living witnesses in St. Louis who take pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of the Restorer. Mrs. Hyatt's principle is the most reasonable, because she proceeds on the well-based supposition that the Hair germ never dies while life exists in the person, and that it is only necessary to stimulate the germ to produce a satisfactory growth. LIFTED UP.

I sat beside my window one stormy winter day,
And watched the light white snow-flakes flutter past;
And I saw, though each one wandered its silent, parate way,
They all sank down upon the ground at last.

"So men must lie down too," I said,
When life is past."

From out the self same window, when soft spring days were come,
I watched the fair, white clouds that sailed on shine;
Could those bright, pearly wonders far up in heaven's high dome
Be the cold wintry snow-banks that I knew?

"So men one day shall rise again,"
I whispered, "too."

Sunday Afternoon.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

ST. LOUIS, July 8.—The weather to-day has been intensely hot, the mercury ranging from 96 to 99 degrees in the shade. Numerous cases of sunstroke occurred, but none fatal.

LEXINGTON, VA., July 8. The annual convention of the Baltimore Conference Sunday School Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, met here at nine o'clock this morning.

The president, T. J. Magruder, of Baltimore called the body to order. A large number of delegates and visitors were present from every portion of the conference. Rev. A. W. Wilson, missionary secretary of the Church, South, addressed the convention this afternoon. The convention is the largest ever held.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 8. The Arctic exploring vessel Jeannette sailed at the bottom at 4 o'clock this afternoon and has remained down the bay, by the entire yacht squadron and many steamers, all carried with excursionists. The vessels slowly moved, whilst salutes were fired by the vessels and batteries. The Jeannette will be towed to sea by the revenue cutter Reliance, and will proceed from Port Reliance. She is commanded by Lieutenant-Commander Emory A. Hyde, with Lieutenant Danenhower.

MEMPHIS, July 9. Frank Maury died to-night at 10 o'clock of congestive chills, after a week's sickness. An autopsy was held to-day. A post mortem examination failed to reveal the cause of death. The leading physicians of the city, including Dr. E. W. Mitchell, the city medical officer of the Board of Health, and Dr. G. W. Thornton, President City Board of Health, reported the fever as typhoid, and had decided to yellow fever. All physicians in attendance concurred. Considerable excitement prevails.

MEMPHIS, July 10. Young Carnegie home this evening. The public to-day has gradually subsided, and although investigation reveals the following condition of affairs: There are only two persons in the whole city prostrated with fever—Judge Ray and his son. Two deaths have occurred—Frank Miltranton, as telegraphed last night, and a son of Judge Ray, as telegraphed at noon.

MEMPHIS, July 11.—No new cases or deaths to report. Many who in entire leaving the city have concluded to remain and await developments. So far as can be ascertained the following cities and towns have quarantined against Memphis: New Orleans, Vicksburg, Little Rock, Pine Bluff, Norfolk, Gaylord and Holly Springs. At a mass meeting of the citizens of Brownsville, Tenn., held to-day, it was unanimously resolved not to interfere with the running of trains on the L. and N. R. R.

In response to numerous telegrams received as to the condition of affairs in Memphis, Dr. Mitchell, member of the National Board of Health, sent the following:

"There has been but four cases, in two families, neither of whom reside within one mile of any railroad depot or river landing. All precautions have been taken to prevent its spreading. No danger from passenger or baggage or trains leaving Memphis now. When there is danger I will promptly inform the public."

AUSTIN, July 12.—The Governor-to-day issued a proclamation quarantining the State against Memphis and other points which may become infected. He appointed health officers at all exposed points on the State line.

MEMPHIS, July 13.—Judge Ray died to-night, at 9 o'clock, and was buried almost immediately afterwards in the Elmwood Cemetery under the auspices of the Masonic Fraternity, of which he was a member. His son lies in a critical condition.

CHARLESTON, S. C., July 13.—A heavy rain and thunder storm lowered the temperature over 20 degrees. Ten white men and five negroes died from sunstroke yesterday.

MEMPHIS, July 14.—The following was telegraphed to-day to every station agent on the lines of the four railroads leading from this city: No new cases since the morning of the 10th inst. The fever is confined to six sporadic cases. Memphians are returning; persons from adjacent towns are coming in. Twice the usual number of passengers came by the Brownsville accommodation train this morning.

D. H. COLLINS, M. D.,
Secretary of the Board of Health.

LOWELL, July 14.—The Tennessee colonists organized formally to-night. About 100 persons have signified their intention of emigrating from this city and Haverhill, to Manchester, Coffee county, Tenn. Twenty of this number will start to-morrow, and the rest will follow in the fall. Colonies are also forming in other parts of New England.

WASHINGTON, July 14.—The National Board of Health has issued a circular urging upon all municipal authorities and sanitary organizations in the Southern States the necessity of securing the utmost possible cleanliness in cities and towns, where the fever has been, or is apprehended, the cases of fever recently observed must be regarded as due to causes surviving from last year, and not to fevers imported from other countries. It follows, therefore, that as diseases may appear in other places visited by last year's epidemic, and that there is danger of its spread to the North and East. The circular recommends the most careful inspection by competent persons of all parts of the cities and towns, and the adoption of measures to remove and destroy all decaying animal and vegetable matter at once. The National Board will furnish such information as may be called for upon application.

FOREIGN.

SIMLA, July 8.—Serious disturbances have broken out below the town of Bolcana, Upper Burmah.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 8.—The Gazette denies that there is to be a Russian war. W. H. Parkey, appointed consul to Bokhara, and not the Indian army numbered 500,000.

ROME, July 9.—The Italie says: The contributions to St. Peter's pence for the first three weeks of the present year, during the present year having increased to 60,000, compared with the corresponding period of 1878.

LONDON, July 9.—A dispatch from St. Petersburg to the News, says: Dissenters from the Orthodox Church, chiefly converted by the sect, are to have entire liberty of worship. This affects 12 millions of Russian subjects.

LONDON, July 10. Official arrangements have been completed for the reception of the grenadiers of the Prince Imperial on Friday, and their conveyance to Chiselhurst escorted by the Royal Horse Artillery. The whole distance will be traversed at a walk—pace. The procession reaching Camden House at about 8 o'clock.

The whole Woolwich garrison will proceed specially to Chiselhurst to participate in the funeral. Bells will be tolled as the corpse leaves Woolwich. On arriving at Camden House the coffin will be carried into the hall where the body of the late Emperor lay in state, by officers of the artillery.

The hall will all be draped in white. The corpse will remain until 11 o'clock, during which time mass will be performed over it in the presence of a select party by Father Goddard, chaplain to the Empress, when the officers will replace it on the gun carriage and a procession be formed consisting of first class cadets, military, Academy with reversed arms, in united band of artillery, and then the coffin. The mourners are expected to include the Prince of Wales, Duke of Connaught and Duke of Cambridge, and numerous French notabilities, such as M. Rouher.

LONDON, July 12.—The remains of the Prince Imperial, escorted by the Royal Horse Artillery, arrived at Chiselhurst at 9 o'clock last night. Immense crowds of people witnessed the arrival of the procession.

LONDON, July 12.—The funeral cortege commenced moving three minutes before 11 o'clock this morning. The princely pallbearers were in uniform. An immense wreath, bestowed by Queen Victoria, was carried on the coffin, which was invisible, because of the mass of flowers in which it was buried.

Prince Jerome Bonaparte and his son followed next after the coffin.

The British Ministry was represented by the Hon. Frederick Stanley and Sir Michael Hicks Beach. The procession was about three quarters of a mile long. The rear was brought up by the second military band. There were present deputations of French military students and workmen from Paris, Lille, Tiercoing and other centres of French industry.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 13.—Advices from Orenburg, to the 28th of June, confirm the report of the preparations making by the Chinese to march on Kuldja. Illtreatment of the Russian merchants on the frontier continues.

FIELD NOTES.

ALABAMA.

MORRIS, ALA., June 30.—The spiritual condition of this charge, New Castle circuit, is hopeful. We have had some difficulty in the way of church "rule," but we have about gotten them all adjusted, and the church is beginning to move off in the right direction, and we hope that we shall very soon see the entire membership of this charge revived. Our Sunday-school interest is good. We have four Sunday-schools, all in good working order. I hope I shall be able to give you good reports during the year from this charge. Pray for us.

Yours fraternally, J. A. WILKINS, P. C.

TRUSSA CIRCUIT, ALA., July 3.—At our last Quarterly Conference we had a season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Our presiding elder, M. L. Wilkes, preached some of his grand, simple and doctrinal sermons. We have had seven accessions to the church and are trying to keep up class and prayer-meetings. The wheat crop is splendid. Cotton prospects are good. Corn is suffering for want of rain.

Your brother, WM. WHEELESS.

BIG CREEK, ALA., July 5.—Have just returned from District Conference. The sessions were pleasant. Reports from the work encouraging. We celebrated the two-hundred-and-fourth with an impromptu picnic. The attendance was large. Some think, three hundred. Addresses by Judge Yelverton, Elkanah (the writer of this). The attention was good for such circumstances. After dinner we repaired to the church, and had preaching. The ladies feeling prevailed.

G. G. SMITH.

TUSKALOOSA, ALA., July 5.—For the past three weeks, as usual at this season, our people have been in a continuous excitement. Commencement exercises have been on hand. Strangers, from all parts of the State, have been in the city. We were much disappointed in not having Rev. A. A. Steel to preach the baccalaureate sermon for the University of Alabama. He was sick. We were forced to act as substitute. Trustees of this university conferred upon Rev. Anson West the degree of D. D., Prof. Mas Jones, Tuskegee, LL. D.

FRANK BRANDON.

GREENSBORO, ALA., July 9.—Probably you have heard ere this of the death of our beloved and honored brother, Dr. L. M. Smith. He died at Birmingham, on the morning of the fourth instant. His last testimony was: "We have overcome the world, the flesh and the devil. All is right." Adieu every day I will triumph for an eternity or two.

Yours fraternally, W. M. LEWIS, JR.

EUFAULA, ALA., July 5.—Our Third Quarterly Conference has just closed, and we had a most refreshing time. Bro. J. B. Stevenson, our presiding elder, was present, looked after the interest of the church, things are now far behind where they ought to be, we had good preaching, and we feel that we have entertained the Divine Spirit (was present).

R. B. EVANS.

WETUMPKA, ALA., July 10.—The Wetumpka District Conference will be held on the 26th and 27th. The church members have increased twenty-five hundred since February, 1878. Three churches have been raised, and eight have a new organ. Advocates are well read here. Fifteen or twenty physicians, New Orleans, and more than a dozen of the Sisters of Charity are taken. Our books are lying out in the country. Six deaths during the month of June. Mrs. Mary Massey and Mary Goodwin, pupils of the Institute among us. Signs of improvement appear.

C. R. WILLIAMSON.

MORGAN, ALA., July 12.—A first session of our circuit school here began with June and closed with. This was very gratifying to all concerned. I am expending my year's labor building a parsonage in town and a church in the country, six miles. Weather hot and rain is sweet. Thanking God and you, I am, yours,

W. F. GAYN.

MISSISSIPPI.

WESTVILLE, Miss., July 7.—Westville circuit is composed of eight appointments, and is 120 miles in the conference. The kingdom of God is advancing. We have six Sabbath-schools, four weekly prayer-meetings, and one class-meeting in active operation. We closed a meeting at Fernonia Church on the 4th ult., which resulted in twenty-two conversions and twenty-five accessions to the church. The Lord be praised for His goodness.

M. C. CALLAWAY, P. C.

VICKSBURG, Miss., July 7.—Benton, in this county, has for years past been the worst whisky hole in this part of the country. Its evil influence has been great and very sensibly felt. Less than a year ago some of the Murphey temperance men from here undertook to plant a society there. The effort was signally successful. A few substantial citizens of Benton took hold of it with a will. Every doggery has been stamped out, and the life of the whole community is sternly set against renewal of license. The change in tone and moral atmosphere is most remarkable, and shows what a few men can do.

E. CARREY.

HOLMESVILLE, Miss., July 9.—Nine additions to the church in Liberty, Amite circuit, last Sunday, all by letter and transfer. Spiritually on the increase. Congregations large and attentive. Outlook encouraging. Crop prospects tolerably good. Partial showers passing through the country. Some get plenty of rain, some but little; some are hopeful, some despondent. But little money in the country; preacher gets his share, I suppose; no right to complain; people are poor; some live hard; preacher loves his flock, and believes he is appreciated by his people.

H. F. LEWIS.

RIPLEY, Miss., July 10.—This is my second year at Ripley and Falkner station. Prospects much better for a revival here than at this time last year. Congregations are very large and attentive. Temperance meetings are kept up throughout our county. The only. There is not a saloon in the county. Crops are fine, and the people liberal. We believe a general blessing is overdue and near us. May it come.

E. G. RAMSEY.

FAYETTE, Miss., July 11.—We are suffering for rain. Corn is seriously injured. Cotton is doing very well. Spiritually we are hopeful. But few accessions to the church this year. Congregations are good and attentive. Sunday-school interest is elevating. Financial condition not flattering. Only about twenty-five per cent. of assessments generally paid up to date. We hope to collect all obligations by the close of the year. Protracted meetings begin soon, at which time we hope for a revival over the circuit.

Yours truly, J. P. HARGROVE.

LOUISIANA.

NATCHITOCHES CIRCUIT, La., July 5.—We are having a very fine weekly prayer-meeting in my neighborhood; have had twelve; attendance good; second one ending, resulted in two conversions, one black-liver complaint and two accessions to the church. Had a good time at Friendship last Sunday and Sunday-fifth Sunday, at eleven we had about 200 hearers. The meeting resulted in six accessions to the church and a good feeling generally. The west is very dry, but rain near by this evening.

W. M. BLOCKER.

INDIAN VILLAGE, LA., July 5.—We are moving up slowly, trying to improve in a solid, lasting way; congregations good and generally attentive; no signs of revival; we are hoping and praying; Sabbath-school getting better; yesterday we had a Sabbath-school gathering at Oak Grove; attendance was good; the children were examined, and did well. J. C. Jones is superintendent. Crops much injured by drought.

R. T. PADGETT.

BATON ROUGE, LA., July 8.—The newly frescoed auditorium of our church here was filled Sunday morning and night with delighted audiences, to listen to Rev. Dr. C. K. Marshall delivered his lecture on "Theologia and Fundamental Basis of all Religions" to a very large audience. I need only say that the efforts of Dr. Marshall were such as only he is capable of making. We have realized much help by his coming; the lecture greatly increased our repair fund; has helped us in every way. May God bless him.

J. T. S.

LAKE PROVIDENCE, La., July 9.—This is the first day of quarterly meeting at this place. God's blessing is upon us. The results not to be seen; such a work to grow here for a quarter of a century. Eighteen have applied for membership in the church of Christ. Twenty have professed to have obtained pardon. There seem many penitents. The devil is also at work. Two men were killed on the street to-day, and one dangerously wounded; is supposed.

R. F. W. NEVILLE.

LAKE PROVIDENCE, La., July 12.—I have just closed a protracted meeting at Lake Providence, resulting in nearly three score applications for membership, and a great many conversions. I am to-day in the midst of a revival at this place, and every day we have additions to the church. The membership is already very weak and strengthened. Bros. E. F. Alexander, the presiding elder of this district, and Rev. McDuffie, of Mississippi College, were with us and did much of the preaching which was in the spirit of the Master. Crops good. Weather intensely hot.

MISCELLANEOUS.

HARRISBURG, ARK., July 5.—Our quarterly meeting, for Capitol circuit, was held at Capitol, on the 3d, 4th and 5th inst. Through the efficient labors of our presiding elder, Rev. A. C. Millsaps, Sabbath-school Institute was held, and after the sermon on Saturday the book-stand was filled with Sabbath-school literature, and a large order at every work. Finances rather low, but generally satisfactory.

T. H. LOCKE, P. C.

P. S.—Crops in this section very gloomy at present. We have had no rain for weeks and a drought. Cotton is looking very well.

PALESTINE, TEXAS, July 7.—I commenced to-day two meetings at Shiloh and Mount Gilead, in Anderson county, within the bounds of my circuit. A young lady, by baptism, and a gentleman, by drowning in a cistern. Thus we go where they had not chosen us the more excellent way. Have a fine sale and, we trust, profitable district Conference at Jacksonville. The editor of the Texas Christian Advocate was with us and did good service. The venerable Dr. McKee was present, and participated in the business. Revivals have begun. Crops in north Texas good.

COMMENCEMENT.

The commencement exercises closed on Wednesday, June 25. The attendance was unusually large. There was quite a revival among the preachers of this district, in that direction, no less than ten were present. Rev. Robert Randle preached the commencement sermon, which was spoken of in highest terms.

The examination was most satisfactory, reflecting credit upon the president, the faculty and students. The specimens of art, which were exhibited in the studio by Miss Hall, daily attracted a large audience of admirers.

On Monday and Tuesday nights a large audience assembled in the hall, and were entertained by a musical concert. The pieces selected evinced taste and adaptability, and were finely executed, each receiving well-merited applause.

Wednesday was the high day, a feast of all things commencing with a rich and well-seasoned address, and ending in a sumptuous feast of plump turkeys, etc. Long before the hour for opening the exercises had arrived many visitors had assembled, and by ten A. M. the spacious hall was well filled.

Among the ministers seated upon the rostrum we noticed with pleasure the presence of the venerable Dr. Tidwell, the honored founder of the college, though sorry was not without feelings of sadness to cause of his infirm health.

After the opening prayer Rev. Joel T. Davis was introduced to the audience and graduating class, who addressing especially the latter preached with great power and pathos to impart most important lessons for future life, illustrated by their past selected essays. The arrangement and delivery were masterly. It had been published that there would be eight graduates, but three being absent but five were present to receive diplomas.

Miss Taylor delivered the Latin salutatory and Miss Bettie Fields the valedictory. The addresses were all excellent, and universally commended. The presentation of diplomas, followed by a brief farewell address to the young ladies by the president and the benediction by Rev. J. D. Slayton, closed those most interesting exercises.

Great credit is due to Prof. Armstrong for the manner in which he has discharged the onerous duties devolved upon him. In spite of conflicting difficulties, scarcity of money, etc., he has labored on faithfully, so that the college has succeeded the present year far above the expectations of the most sanguine. This ought to be a matter of thankfulness and gratification to every member of the Conference, whether ecclesiastic or lay. The number of matriculations is the largest it has been for several years past. Such a Christian institution is a powerful auxiliary to the church of God, and deserves the hearty support of every Methodist and lover of sanctified learning within the bounds of the Louisiana Conference. With its healthful locality, its beautiful situation, its faculty of well qualified teachers, there is no reason why Mansfield Female College should not be equal to the best college in the land. It may not be out of place to insert here the resolution adopted by our late Annual Conferences.

Resolved, That we are grateful to Know of the prosperity of Mansfield Female College, and most heartily commend it to the patronage of our people."

Any information will be furnished on application to the president, Rev. James Armstrong, A. M.

We understand that the music department will be presided over by a Virginia lady of eminent ability in both vocal and instrumental music. Success to Centenary. The whole church ought to be proud of such a noble institution, and rally generously to its support.

The Methodist Press, under the efficient management of Profs. Mitchell and Carruthers, will continue its encouraging usefulness, affording the best facilities for the education of boys.

VISITOR.

SUMMERFIELD, ALA., July 5, '79.

Collegiate Institute, Baton Rouge.

One has much to ask to attend the closing exercises of the Collegiate Institute. Specially can this be said about the last exhibition, where young gentlemen from eight to fifteen years of age, clothed in neat and tasteful attire, and many of them as fine looking as they give us brave words of far reaching hopes and our own fathers, were celebrating the fourth of July splendid fashion, speaking, as it does, in eye and ear and gesture. The day of is a very time where, for a little while the dust and toil of the desert are forgotten, and we can listen to the fluttering of the waters, and sit beneath the cool shade of the trees.

For a time, so long the memory of man holds out to the contrary, Prof. Magruder has been guiding the youth of this and the adjoining States, and here I see the work in its fullest sense—a sailing forth of all the faculties, mental, moral and spiritual. We never saw more of the "Magruder boys" as they all love to call themselves in their after life than on the night you have that happy mingling of mind and heart, that "confesse Christe" demeanor, so kindly, quietly yet persistently impressed and taught by the life, counsel and guidance, enrolling and skill of that Christian gentleman, the principal of the Baton Rouge College Institute. Long may he be spared to the profession for which he has given the gathered and successful labor of nearly half a century, and may each succeeding school year be as fruitful and full and more so than the one just closed.

By the by, his many friends and admirers will be glad to know that Centenary College has recently conferred the honorary degree of Master of Arts on Prof. J. R. Magruder, the son and assistant of the Nestor of education in this State, and will feel that in this honoring him the college has honored herself.

Mobile District, Alabama Conference.

MR. EDITOR:—By the favor of God, manifested in His providence, I have gone around the Mobile District this year, and am on my way in making the third round. We are doing well in our great work of preaching the gospel to our fellowmen. All the preachers are doing their work as well as they are able, and the people are encouraging and sustaining them. Some, with commendable zeal, some of the preachers are very successful in the ministry, and some of the charges are very prosperous. There is good cheer and so far as I can see we shall be able to make a very favorable report to the Conference at the end of the year.

Camp-meetings will be held during the present and August, September and October, commencing the last of July. These are anticipated in the midst of my third round with certain joyfulness.

The Conference at Mobile was closed. It was the third by the Conference. It was the third by the Conference. It was the third by the Conference

AFTER SERVICE.

Within—our spirits rose on wings;
Uplifted by the organ's voice;
Unrammeled by the fretted roof
We soared and cried "Rejoice!"

"Rejoice, the air is fair and bright,
We see no sorrow, want or shame,
Our lives are filled with blessedness,
Of sin we know but name."

Within—were light and warmth and grace,
And daintly robes and faces fair,
Unchained from grosser things of earth,
We dwelt in charming air.

Within—all good seemed possible,
For Loving Love had vanished Fear,
And kindly optimists we grew
In that blithe atmosphere.

Without—ah me! how raged the storm
Of snow and wind and blindfit sleet;
As forth we went the organ strains
Came floating in the street.

Without—were cold and dark and crime,
And hunger's sad, reproachful moan.
"If we have given fair unto these,"—
We catch the organ's tone.

For daintly robes but filthy rags,
And faces worn and pinched and old—
Perchance a mother kissed them once,
Ere souls for bread were sold.

Now, who shall cast at them a stone,
Ill-starred souls alone—what they?
Nay! who shall reach a hand to help
The outcast rise again?

And shall we be content with thanks
For bumping cup, whate'er betide
To other lives, our count our care
Who may be left outside?

Else shall our service yield us naught,
Though soaring on cherubic wings,
Who shares his crust or boundless store
In God's great temple sings!

Rev. Barnabas Pipkin.

MR. EDITOR: The family and numerous friends of Rev. Barnabas Pipkin, late of the Mississippi Conference, are pleased with the half-page memoir given in the minutes of our late session so far as it goes, but they do not feel satisfied that this great luminary of the church should sink into oblivion with only that short notice of his long, laborious and successful ministerial life; and I have been importuned for months, as his oldest surviving colleague, to give the church a more extended history of his eventful life, which was closed with a most tranquil and happy death.

After a few preliminaries about his parentage and early life, I shall not trouble the reader much with dates and names of circuits and districts, as my object is to exhibit him in his Christian and ministerial character, as I knew him personally near fifty-five years. His parents were Stephen Pipkin and Amelia Thompson, both natives of North Carolina; his father of English and his mother of Welsh descent. His father served in the Revolutionary War, under the leadership of Gen. Francis Marion. This venerable couple ultimately died in Conecuh county, Ala.; the father at the age of eighty-three years, and the mother at eighty-five. They must have been good Christians and good Methodists, judging the tree by the fruit. They gave three sons to the Methodist ministry—Barnabas to the itinerancy, and Lewis and Richard to the local ranks—all good and true men, remarkable for their firmness and fidelity as Methodist Christians and ministers.

Barnabas Pipkin was born in Wayne county, N. C., February 27, 1795, and moved with his parents to Darlington district, South Carolina, about the beginning of the present century, where they remained until the fall of 1810, and then removed to Pulaski county, Ga., and from thence, in 1818, to Conecuh county, Ala. Just before the family left South Carolina Barnabas, being now about fifteen years old, offered himself to the church at Young's camp ground, in Sumpter district, South Carolina, as a seeker of salvation from sin, and soon after the settlement of the family in Pulaski county, Ga., he was happily "born of the Spirit" at a meeting held at Regan's church. His conversion was clear and satisfactory, and he began at once to take a joyous interest in all the duties of religion, and to all the social meetings of the church. In the class and prayer meetings which were the training schools of the church in those days he soon began to exercise in oral prayer and exhortation, which culminated in his being licensed to preach, and recommended for admission into the South Carolina Conference, which then included the State of Georgia. His presiding elder, Joseph Tarpley, being absent, his license and recommendation were signed by Hartwell Spain as preacher in charge of Ocmulgee circuit. He was admitted on trial at Camden, S. C., in the last days of December, 1818, and after traveling two years on large circuits in that Conference—the first as the junior of John Heward, on Sandy River circuit, and the second as preacher in charge of Union, about the head waters of French Broad river, embracing portions of both North and South Carolina—he was received into full connection, ordained deacon, and, with Zachariah Williams, volunteered to come as a missionary to the Mississippi Conference. Our Conference then included all of Alabama south of the Tennessee river, and all of Mississippi and Louisiana, and had only eighteen traveling preachers and four thousand one hundred and forty-seven members. At our previous Conference two circuits of no very definite limits, called Tuscaloosa and Marion, in north Alabama, had been left to be supplied. To these the missionaries were directed, and, uniting the two into a seven-weeks' circuit, labored there in 1821. From the time he came to us as a volunteer missionary, until his death, he continued a member of our Conference without a break. His circuits and districts in the prime of his manhood were large in territory, and required a great outlay of time and labor to meet their claims on his pastoral oversight. It is not necessary to follow him through all his pastoral charges. At the time of his death he lacked only a few months of having been in the ministry sixty years. In that time he labored on circuits, either as effective or supernumerary, twenty-four years; on districts twenty years, and was on the superannuated roll sixteen years, during which time he often did good service in the pulpit.

But now let us look at the Christian and minister as he appeared to us during his long pilgrimage. Barnabas started right. The first great question with him was to get religion, and know he had it. Having this matter settled satisfactorily when about fifteen years old, he soon became a thorough Methodist in experience, doctrine and practice, and ever after remained perfectly satisfied with his church relations and ministerial orders. His entire reliability in all the relations of life was his most prominent characteristic. No one who knew him expected to see him violate any rule of his church, or any ministerial vow he had made. He was ever prompt at the place of duty, and zealous and active in the discharge of all his obligations. No one well acquainted with him had the least fear that he would do anything or leave anything undone that would discredit his Christian character, or in any way conflict with the interests of Christ's kingdom. Neither the church or Conference ever had any trouble with him. His character as a Methodist Christian and minister stood unimpeached from beginning to end. After he had been in Mississippi several years he became more than ever interested on the subject of entire sanctification, and after studying our standard authors on that doctrine he unreservedly embraced the Wesleyan view of the subject, not because it was Wesleyan, but because he believed Mr. Wesley had fully revived the scriptural doctrine of salvation from all sin, and entire holiness of heart. He became an earnest seeker of that state of grace until one day, in a church meeting, where the subject was prayerfully up among God's people, he fell prostrate under the power of the Spirit, and then and there felt that "the blood of Jesus cleansed him from all sin;" and he arose and went on his way rejoicing in that "perfect love that casteth out all fear." As a minister, he was well versed in all our old standards of doctrines and church polity, and was a very safe counselor for his younger brethren. In the pulpit, he was very natural in his annunciation and gestures. His sermons were all of his own composing, and seemed to grow out of what he considered the immediate wants of his hearers. His language was Wesleyan; his style was sententious, didactic and hortatory; his delivery was clear, regular and somewhat rapid; his tone of voice was a loud, earnest, declamatory tone, but I never heard him scream; his sermons were remarkably free from everything superfluous, and rich in good, practical thoughts. Until his voice became enfeebled by age, and the loss of his teeth, he was one of the sweet and effective singers in Israel. He never turned aside from the duties of his holy calling to engage in any secular business, except, when at home, to superintend his well-ordered farm, that he might have wherewith to support his family in credit, and educate his children for usefulness in the world. He was never an aspirant for high position in the church. His ruling desire was simply to be an acceptable and useful traveling elder. If he was kept on districts twenty years, it was because his colaborers thought him worthy and well qualified for the work. 1828 was one of the eventful years of his life. After serving as a delegate in the General Conference at Pittsburg, Pa., in the month of May, soon after his return, in the month of June, he was married—Dr. Winans officiating—to Miss Martha Elizabeth Hanna, a lady every way worthy, and well qualified to be the wife of an itinerant preacher. I wish I had space just here to write a memoir of this most excellent Christian lady. I believe if God calls some men to be itinerant preachers, He providentially calls and qualifies some of the daughters of the church to be their wives, for they seem to enter as fully into the spirit of the work as their husbands. This was eminently the case with Mrs. Pipkin. Only half the history of our itinerancy is given when we write the memoirs of the preachers. Some one qualified ought to write up the history of their self-sacrificing, heroic wives, giving their proper names and places of abode. I think it was about 1846 that Mrs. Pipkin closed a life of consecration to God by a triumphant death. About this date, also, Bro. Pipkin, on account of personal and family affliction, was placed on the supernumerary list, and in that relation was connected with St. Helena circuit eleven years. Some ministers are said to wear out by remaining too long in one place, but this was not the case with Barnabas Pipkin. His residence, for fifty years or more, was on the same place in St. Helena parish, and by his uniform fidelity in all things he retained the confidence and affections of those who knew him best, to the last. The community lovingly desired his pulpit services as long as he was able to preach. At a suitable time after the death of his first wife he married Mrs. Rachel Bradford, who also, I believe, preceded him a short time to the grave, leaving two sons, by her first marriage, in the ministry, who are now members of our Conference. But I must close these reminiscences of one of the most consistent Christian ministers I ever knew. The language of the psalmist is peculiarly applicable to his history: "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright; for the end of that man is peace."

His final descent to the tomb was sublime and full of comfort to himself and friends. Feeling that his work on earth was done, and his long pilgrimage about to end, he calmly adjusted himself to the closing scene, and, after giving full assurance of his final triumph, and bidding his children and friends an affectionate adieu, he crossed the valley, and found himself at home with God and kindred spirits.

His death occurred May 11, 1878, making his age over eighty-three years.

NATCHITOCHES STATION, LOUISIANA.

MR. EDITOR: I am thankful to be able to announce through your columns that after a severe spell of sickness lasting two months, thirty-eight days of which time I was confined continuously to my bed, and ate nothing at all, only as for medicine, that I am on my feet again, and improving every day. I have gained about twenty pounds since I began to mend, and now weigh ninety-nine pounds. I shall travel during the summer for my health, first going to the sea shore at Ocean Springs, and then North, returning to my beloved charge at Natchitoches on the first of September. I take this occasion of returning my sincere thanks to my numerous friends who have made such diligent inquiry concerning my health while prostrated on my bed of sickness. I felt all the while that my brethren of the ministry were offering up fervent prayers for my recovery, and this enabled me to bear with more patience the severe pains that shocked my whole system.

I wish to say to the many friends from whom I have received letters that I cannot answer them separately, as my sight was much impaired during my illness, and I have considerable difficulty now in seeing how to pen these lines.

I wish to mention particularly the kindness of Bros. Keener, Liverman and Cassity, for their close attention to me; each one remained at the parsonage about one week, and nursed me, and sang and prayed for me. I am not sure, but I shouted one morning while Bro. and Sister Keener were singing a song, just previous to morning prayers. I shall not attempt to mention the kindness of the members of my church toward me, as I could not do them justice. Suffice it to say, that they made me feel like St. Paul did toward the Galatians, that "if it had been possible (or necessary) they would have plucked out their own eyes and given them to me." My physicians also were as attentive to me as if I had been a brother.

I was taken ill a month previous to the dedication of my church, and consequently did not have the pleasure of seeing it when finished inside. I was greatly disturbed in mind about the completion of my church in time for the dedication, when the Lord sent Bro. Christian Keener up one week in advance to nurse me, and complete the building. He pulled off his coat and went to work in good earnest with the carpenters, arranging the seats, altar, chandeliers, organ, etc., and got everything ready in time.

J. B. Walker, D. D., was to have dedicated our church, but, failing to reach Natchitoches in time, the duty fell on Bro. Keener. I did not hear his sermons, but was assured by our most eminent lawyers, and by our Judges and others fully capable of judging, that the sermon was perfectly splendid, full of valuable information, and delivered with much feeling. I shall always feel grateful to Bro. Christian Keener for his timely assistance.

Bro. Walker arrived on Sunday evening, and remained with us two days, preaching and laboring with our people with his accustomed energy and success.

Just before leaving home my faithful brother and steward, J. P. Campbell, led me over to the church, and I declare it seemed to me to be the prettiest sight I ever beheld; and for this you will make allowances, as I could not see very well, and was further blinded with tears, as I remembered that every plank, every stick of timber, had gone up in answer to prayer. Bro. Campbell led me up to my pulpit; there I knelt in prayer, while he retired to the front of the church, and I believe I am safe in saying that I never got so near to God before in my life. I think that was the sweetest season of prayer I ever had. Oh! that I may have many more on that beautiful pulpit.

On the day of dedication I am told there were about 450 persons in attendance, which was by far the largest congregation of Protestants that ever assembled in our town.

Our church is now finished, all except the center tower and the Sunday school room. When these are completed the grounds, house and furniture will be well worth $5,000. Methodism is now on a sound footing in Natchitoches, with a splendid church building, a devoted membership of sixty-three members, a well-regulated Sabbath-school of sixty scholars, and teachers, and but a small debt against them. Let prayers ascend from all parts of our Conference for this new and important station. Your brother in Christ,

THOMAS J. MUDD.

BROOKHAVEN DISTRICT CONFERENCE, MISSISSIPPI.

The Brookhaven District Conference convened in Crystal Springs, Miss., June 26-28.

It was held by the presiding elder, Rev. W. E. M. Linfield, D. D. This has been, perhaps, the most interesting District Conference that was ever held in the district. There was a large attendance, both lay and clerical. This district embraces eight circuits, three stations and one mission, and includes within its bounds Whitworth College.

The reports as to the spiritual condition of the churches, attendance upon the ordinances, social meetings, pastoral visitation, etc., were made by the pastors. Those as to the Sunday-school work, method of instruction, discipline, etc., were made by the superintendents, if present. Those as to ministerial support, by the stewards. These reports, on the whole, were favorable, except as to finances. The assessments are about the same as the past year, and only about one-third collected; in some instances more; in some less. Yet, with the prospects of good crops ahead, all are hopeful of better collections in the future.

The reports from the Sunday-schools were encouraging. Our literature is generally used, many of the schools being supplied with Magazines, Lessons Quarterlies, etc. There are some very good schools outside of the town. This institution of the church is growing in interest and usefulness.

Rev. H. F. Johnson, D. D., president of Whitworth College, made a statement in reference to the present condition of the college, showing what had been done during the past year in the erection of new buildings. He stated that although a large brick dormitory had been erected, yet there was at present no encumbrance on the property. A report from the Board of Trustees was also read. Dr. Johnson has expended almost his entire earnings in making improvements on the college. He held a twenty years' lease upon it, expiring in 1890. This he has relinquished, and surrendered to the trustees unconditionally. And, while he asks nothing, yet the trustees propose to refund a portion of the large amount expended by him.

The preaching during the session of the Conference was instructive and edifying. The delegates elected to the Annual Conference are: J. H. Thompson, D. McRee, Jesse Thompson and R. P. Willing. Alternates—Dr. J. O. Hutchins, R. C. Bethea.

R. P. WILLING, Sec.

MR. EDITOR: On the twenty-seventh and twenty-eighth of June the District Conference of Winona district, North Mississippi Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was held in the town of Durant, Holmes county, Miss., Bro. K. A. Jones, P. E., was in the chair.

While many laymen elect were absent, and a few pastors, it was a most business-like and interesting occasion. Prominence was given to religious exercises. Of I may mention this as one of the best District Conferences I have ever attended. The Durant Methodists have a tastefully-built and comfortable brick church. It was well filled at every service. Several joined the church, and one was converted on Saturday night—a little girl about twelve years old. The people of Durant are a hospitable people.

Rev. R. P. Mitchell protracts the meeting through the week. I had liked to have forgotten to say that I heard of "hard times" once or more times while up there. The NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE stands high with this Conference.

Yours fraternally,

CANTON, June 30, '79. R. D. NORSWORTHY.

MRS. MAGGIE E. BROADNAX only daughter of John and Rachel F. Ellis, was born in Perry county, Ala., the first day of April, 1844; graduated at the Marion Female Seminary; was married to J. W. Broadnax February 25, 1864, and died in Eufaula, Ala., September 17, 1878.

Being an only child she was the cherished idol of fond parents, who lavished upon her all that heart could wish of affection, promise, beautiful in person, and amiable and sweet in disposition, with manners gentle and refined, and cultivated intellect, she won all hearts to herself, and was acknowledged a universal favorite in every circle in which she moved. We have known but few persons who possessed so many lovely traits of character, and whose lives shed around them more joy and sunshine than did hers. Whether around the hearth-stone, indulging in childish glee, the merry school girl absorbed in the acquisition of knowledge, the accomplished young lady, whose fascinating charms rendered her a general favorite, or facing the stern realities of life as wife and mother, she was the same sweet spirited, loving Maggie. Having been reared by pious parents, her mind was early impressed with the importance of a change of heart, and in the rosy dawn of youth, ere her young life had become contaminated with the world's vices, she gave herself to her Saviour, united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at New Providence, and ever after lived a consistent Christian, and died in the hope of a joyous immortality.

Her eldest son preceded her to the spirit land; an infant daughter quickly followed her to the grave, and four children and numerous relatives and friends are left to mourn her early death.

M. E. CANON.

MISS ELIZABETH N. HUTSON, of Kemper county, Miss., was born December 13, 1823, and died May 12, 879. "One of the kindest sisters," says her brother, "that man ever had; one of the most sincere Christian mourners of modern times." A minister of nine counties, "I should have said," for thirty-five years, he adds, "I think she has not expressed a doubt of her acceptance with God."

In the year 18 9, of Livingston, Ala., she professed religion and joined the Methodist Church. A subject of consumption for many years, the worst of the last she suffered much. She was patient in suffering and, in the face of death, tranquil and triumphant. At one time, calling for water, a sweet potato was handed her. She applied it to her lips and, returning it, said, "The next drink I take will be from the spring that never fails. I am going to where crowns." She was visited by ministers and members of her own and other churches. All held her in high esteem as a wider Christian. A few days before death, at her request the Lord's Supper was administered to her. Not to join the glorified, it was a happiness to this saint to commune once more in the Holy Eucharist, with the people of God on earth. Presbyterians and Methodists joined in the solemn and touching services, "one on the verge of heaven." With her brother, McM. Hudson, Miss Lizzie kept house at the old home stead. For four years I was accustomed, in passing to sleep with them for a night and to rest at noon. Beautiful to behold was the Father's rhetoric, each to the other, of this maiden sister and an heroic brother. Pure as is a child about said as heaven, it was a benediction to angels upon earth to be there. I was always revived in heart, as well as refreshed in body. Chief Sister Lizzie in mothering humanity, in all things Christian, was a true spirit. In Her Majesty God was glorified and immortality blessed. Meet for the inheritance of the saints in light, she has entered into rest.

JOHN A. ELLIS.

BRO. STEPHEN MOODY was born May 27, 1830, and died at his home, in Hancock county, Miss., May 30, 1878. The subject of this notice was a younger brother of the late lamented Theophilus Moody of the Ninth Alabama Conference. He was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1867, and lived a consistent life until death. He was a joyful, earnest, practical man, that had the confidence and esteem of all his acquaintances. His last illness was consumption and consequently protracted, which gave him sufficient time to contemplate his departure. And although the ties of home were strong with him, for he said that dear wife sang sweetly and everything looked bright and beautiful about his earthly home, yet with death in view, and the love of the dear objects of his earthly home in his heart, he felt that he was going to a far brighter and far more lovely home in heaven. He was very much afflicted by the death of his brother, and thoughts of him, constantly recalled his image by night and by day. But while he wept bitterly for his departed brother, he was comforted in the prospect of an early reunion beyond the grave. He leaves a widow, two sons and five daughters. May they be comforted in the Beloved.

ALLIE E., daughter of B. D. and F. A. Coolbaugh, of Copiah county, Miss., died May 16, 1879, aged sixteen years, ten months and twenty-two days.

Miss Allie was in many respects a noble young lady. Her many excellent graces endeared her to all who knew her. As a child she was dutiful and obedient, as a sister she was kind and affectionate. Although she had been brought up in the church, surrounded by Christian influences, yet she had never experienced the change of heart, or new birth, without which Christ says "ye cannot see the Kingdom of God."

But while standing upon the brink of death's cold river, our hearts were made glad by seeing the radiant smile of joy playing over her face, and to hear the words come from her, "I am satisfied now; I am not afraid to die now. I will soon be at home over there." Then bidding an affectionate adieu to her parents, brothers, sisters and friends, and sending words of exhortation to her absent kindred and friends, she quietly fell asleep in Jesus, to awake in the Christian's home in glory.

MRS. CELESTE JANE GRAY, wife of Wm. E. Gray, was born February 2, 1836, and died with yellow fever in Pearlington, Miss., September 10, 1878, at a few minutes to twelve o'clock P. M. She united with the Carondelet Street Church, New Orleans, at a watch night meeting in 1865, under the ministry of Rev. Dr. J. B. Walker, and remained a member of that church until the day of her death.

She was sincere and strong in her friendship, as many can testify. In the early years of her girlhood and womanhood, she was marked with that tender and sympathetic heart that ever caused her to be careful and devoted to the sick, and ready to offer condolence to the bereaved. But she herself had long been a victim of the sickle. She was a most devoted mother and affectionate wife and faithful wife, ever ready to make sacrifices for those whom she loved. She was one of the founders of the Pearlington Sunday-school. Among the last words were these: "I am ready," And she passed away in the triumph of faith.

MRS. VIRGINIA WOODS, daughter of Rev. John L. and Mrs. Dolcinda Scruggs, died April 22, 879, at the residence of her father, Rev. W. B. Johnson. She was born November 1832; united with the Methodist Church in the twelfth year of her age, under the ministry of Dr. B. M. Drake, and continued a member of the same until her death. She was the mother of one child, a son, who has preceded her to the glory land, where her dear father, brothers, sisters and many other relations are gathered. Her feeble mother, who is nearly [illegible] survives her. "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted," and the fond husband, bereaved daughter [illegible] through long, suffering and better in the end. Many of God's brightest jewels are placed in frail settings. It was so in regard to our departed sister. She suffered much, but in the midst of her affliction she was cheerful, calm and resigned.

In life she won the respect and love of all by who she was known, and in death has left the legacy of a pure and spotless character, and an example of Christian virtue worthy of imitation.

THURSDAY, JULY 17, 1879.

THE BEST WAY.

In the little inn by the roadside,
Weather-stained, old and gray,
Three travelers, meeting, lingered
At the close of a summer's day.

Bearded and bronzed with travel,
What wondrous tales they told,
Of snow-capped hills, of deserts,
Of mines of sparkling gold!

Soft through the twilight shadows
Floated the sound of a bell,
Into their talk and laughter,
Like a quiet "Amen" it fell.

They paused a moment to listen—
Then one, with complacent air:
"The bell of yon Methodist chapel,
And this is their meeting for prayer.

"They mean well, these Methodist brothers—
But then—well, of course, I must say
That a strict adherent of Calvin
Finds all Arminians astray.

"And then, too, their love-feasts, their shoutings,
And all their wild talk of 'free grace'—
I think I won't go to this meeting,
Though a home I'm never out of my place."

Spake then another, half smiling:
"These are petty distinctions at best.
You agree in your senseless custom
Of sprinkling, who matters the rest?"

Immersion—the third one broke silence—
"Ah, secure in the only true fold
A church man must sage with real pity
On sects that will wrangle and scold.

"I am a disciple apostolic,
A bishop our glory to crown,
What think that on Methodists, Baptists,
And all other sects, we look down?"

Rose from his corner a stranger,
And soft was his tremulous tone:
"My friends, by God's grace, I'm a Christian,
I glory in that name alone.

"Let us praise Him who loved and who saves us."
Then silently rose the three others,
And into the Methodist chapel
Locked arm in arm, like brothers.

Have Final Causes Disappeared?

BY S. L. WILSON, D. D.

But the professor tells us that, so far as science is concerned, "final causes have, one by one, disappeared from every thicket that has been thoroughly explored." We believe the statement to be manifestly untrue. Taking final causes within the course of Nature as proofs of God, and we believe the common sense of mankind affirms, with Horace Bushnell: "That all things around us are mind-molded is as certain as that there are things at all." The man who says the eye is not made to see with is on a par with the anti-geologist who says that the fossil remains of animals are mere spontaneous sports of Nature, which never had life. You cannot refute him. If he has not the mental spring to grasp the plain truth, there is no help for it. If the ear, in primordial correlation with the tongue and vocal organs, in primordial anthipation of articulate speech impregnate with thought, and theine in view of human society, advancement and history, is not a thicket where final cause still displays itself, then the fossil mammoth is only one of old earth's nightmare dreams hardened into stone.

And there is, too, many a special "thicket," even within Nature's courses, from which we suspect that, by dictate of universal common sense, God has not been expelled by science. Is not the molding of every human face performed by an immediate, intelligent power, so that it possesses the expression of a true humanity and yet the special expression of individuality? Can science, Darwinian or not, explain how this specialty in universality is attained by any blind, natural, definite, molding power? Can science tell us how a tree, a maple for instance, can, apart from all intelligence, so shape its form, and put forth its branches, leaves and fruit, as to remain in species a maple, and yet stay unlike any other one maple? Or in psychology, can any one show that a Divine Spirit cannot touch the springs of the will, shed special clearness upon the intellect, kindle the emotions, or regenerate the soul? Or in physiology, can science affirm that an immediate intelligent power does not shape the human form, measure out its symmetries, and put into its organism at will the strength of a powerful manhood? We have read a great many pages of Spencer, Tyndall and Haeckel, about "heredity," and the analogy of crystallization and corn-kernel to the human body, and the laws of similarity and variation in animal descent; and we are entirely sure that you have but to fix these reasoners down to specific points, and you will find that ultimate specializations can be explained only upon an underlying intellective, intentional basis. There is not only a "thicket," but a broad plain, an immense cosmos, from which the Almighty declines to be expelled. Yet here the scientific professor, mounted on his infallible tripod, puts on, perhaps, a tone of modesty, and replies: "Hint science knows no such underlying intelligence." We reply: If science is contident to know that force exists because she sees motion, why can she not see that intelligence exists when she sees the apparency of intelligently-directed motion—that is, motion directed to clear intelligential results? We apprehend this unknowing is the fault not of science, but of the scientist. And our respected professor may be well assured that the public mind will not be controlled by tripods; but will look for itself at facts and principles, and for itself will judge science and scientists. These professional announciators, under atheistical predispositions for the purpose of a sensation, will have their day and their reaction; and in the light of that reaction God will hold His undisturbed throne upon the mind of man.

Perhaps the pages of science herself present, also, some special thickets from which God has not been expelled. Campbell, in his reply to Hume on miracles, adduced the necessity of man's creation as an undeniable proof of miracle. In varied form his argument still remains. For, as deeply as excavating geology has found man, she has found him a complete man. Geologically he springs into sudden existence a full-grown humanity. And, by the geologic record, race after race of lower beings and of plants starts up with an epochal instantaneousness. How does science know that there was no God in all these sudden, unheralded inaugurations? Has "final cause disappeared" from this "thicket?" Again, there was an azoic period, subsequent to which life commenced. Whence, then, was life? Here is still a much "explored" but uncleared "thicket." In his earlier day Darwin thought that originally God may have breathed life into a few primordial particles. A miracle! Has he furnished any better solution since?

We may now adduce some "thickets" of a non-scientific but historical character, from which it is not easy to expel a superphysical presence or deny an interruption in the chain of physical causations. Want of space limits us to an instance or two.

Our first historical "thicket" is the phenomena in the Wesley family of rappings and other manifestations, from no corporeally human source, for months continued. They were examined under all conceivable theories, by the most skillful investigators, and set all theories at defiance which did not admit their superphysical character. The invisible agents of those phenomena acted with intelligent reference to the treatment they received. They had a palpable influence in producing that supernaturalism in the character of John Wesley by which he became the apostle of the eighteenth century. They are unquestioned historical facts; facts irreconcilable with the theory of "the mechanical course of Nature," as excluding all supernatural interference. There are, therefore, intelligent beings, invisible to man, who do, probably under certain permitting conditions, to us unknown, interpose in mundane affairs.

Swedenborg was one night in Gottingen, sitting in a social company. Suddenly he arose, went out the door, and, after a while returning, announced to the company that a great fire was raging in Stockholm, Sweden, describing with particularity its extent. Three days afterward the news arrived confirming in every respect the statement of Swedenborg. The relator of this narrative is the philosopher Kant, who declared that there is no doubt of its truth. No science can either annihilate that fact or explain it on any theory of an uninterruptible course of lower physical nature.

Our third "thicket" may seem of more doubtful character, and we adduce it only to suggest a solemn pause to skepticism. It is the historical fact of the awful thunders from heaven that saluted the declaration of the papal responsibility by the Vatican Council. It is thus related by the correspondent of the New York Tribune. He is describing the scene of the final vote on the infallibility question:

"The names of the fathers were called over, and Placet after Placet (vote after vote) succeeded, ad nauseam. But what a storm burst over the church at this moment! The lightning flashed and the thunder pealed as we have not heard it this season before. Every Placet seemed to be announced by a flash and terminated by a clap of thunder. Through the cupolas the lightning entered, licking, as it were, the very columns of the Baldachino over the tomb of St. Peter and lighting up large spaces on the pavement. Sure, God was there; but whether approving or disapproving what was going on no mortal can yet say. Enough that it was a remarkable coincidence, and so it struck the minds of all who were present. And thus the roll was called for one hour and a half, with this solemn accompaniment; and then the result of the voting was taken to the Pope. The moment had arrived when he was to declare himself invested with the attributes of God; nay, a God upon earth. Looking from a distance into the hall, which was obscured by the tempest, nothing was visible but the golden miter of the Pope, and so thick was the darkness that a servitor was compelled to bring a lighted candle and hold it by his side to enable him to read the decree by which he deified himself."

The next day after this blasphemous performance Louis Napoleon, as son of the church, commenced war in behalf of the infallible supremacy against Protestant Germany; and in less than three months took place the battle of Sedan, the prostration of France, the entrance of King Victor into Rome, and the downfall of the papal secular kingdom, which had stood over since the days of Charlemagne. Such a combination of events may make the skeptic pause, and wonder whether the divine purpose may not, after all, be sometimes "scrutable." Such a view infringes no principle of science. It questions not the intrinsic immutability of Nature's laws. It forgets not that thunder is electricity, and that rain is condensed vapor. Not the less may thunder be God's voice to man, and the pouring storms and the black darkness the tokens of His wrath. God can use them all for the crisis, and all Nature's course be otherwise left unmarred; just as the air, cleft by the arrow, instantly closes its wound and retains no scar. We submit that special Providence is no contradiction to the intrinsic uniformity of Nature's laws.

We have given but a few such facts, simply from want of room. We can give abundance of them, of such a nature as to defy all adverse criticism. Not only in the books, but in our daily newspapers of the highest respectability, facts showing super-mundane interference in mundane sequences are narrated with perfect explicitness by the most intelligent witnesses, published at the time and place with the broadest notoriety, uncontradicted by any party and unexplained by any scientific professor. When we are told that science "cannot know" these facts, we reply that science can be as obstinate an ignoramus as she pleases; but she cannot expect that all history and the common sense of mankind will be ignoramus in her company.—Extract from a review in the "Methodist Quarterly" of Prof. Newcomb's "The Course of Nature."

Religious Intelligence.

—Mr. Missionary Brown reports a steady growth of a moral influence over the savage natives of New Britain since he chastised them so soundly for their cannibalism. A teacher has been established in the village of Talili, who instigated the murder and cannibalism against the teachers. Mr. Brown has been to see Talili several times, and the chief has been at the station. Mr. Brown considers Talili a man of far more force of character than the general run of the natives, and believes that if he were truly converted he would be a great power. Old Buillai, the greatest chief on the northern coast of Great Britain, and the man who is believed to have caused the murder of Jamison, has been down to see Mr. Brown and enjoyed his visit. He brought a pig, and received a good red shirt, which he said would be nice and warm when he was sick.

—The Primitive Methodist Missionary Society received last year, so far as is reported, $107,075, besides what was contributed by the home missions for their own benefit, amounting to about $54,000 more, and spent $5,000 more than that sum. It has built eighteen new chapels, established forty new places for service and formed eighteen new Sunday schools at the home stations, and has enjoyed an increase of 501 members in all. It has, at home and abroad, 233 stations and 338 missionaries and Colonial ministers. Its missionary operations have been very much extended, both at home and abroad, since 1870. Its only proper foreign missions are in the Island of Fernando Po, where its missionaries have been ordered away by the Spanish authorities and at Aliwal Africa, North.

THE LATE BISHOP GOBAT.—The Christian publishes from the letter of a correspondent the following particulars with respect to the recent death of Bishop Gobat, of Jerusalem: I have just had a letter from Mrs. Wolters, telling about her father's death. She says: "It was not death, it was going home; as a child rejoices to go home to its parents, so he rejoiced to go to his Father. We were all round his bed. The Master called, and the servant was ready to enter into the joy of his Lord. * * * It was so beautiful that he could say, when asked whether Jesus was with him in the dark valley, 'Yes, but it is not dark.' He was laid the same day under an olive tree in the midst of the English burial-ground, according to his own desire that he should be buried not apart beside the missionaries and a former bishop, but in the midst of his people. A great multitude of Jews, Moslems, Greeks and Romanists attended the funeral as well as the Protestants of Jerusalem.

SCOTCH COMMUNICANTS.—In the Nonconformist of Friday there is an elaborate examination of the recent returns relating to the number of communicants in the Established Church of Scotland. It is said that the present return differs from the former one, in simply containing still more incredible statements. Scotch journals exposing its character are quoted, and illustrations are given of parishes in several Presbyteries where the communicants, if the return is to be credited, number more than a third, and in other instances more than a half, of the population. In one case they must include every inhabitant of the parish above five years of age. Statistics of the Highland parishes are also given where the communicants of the establishment number only two or three out of the populations of several hundreds of thousands. The attention of the House of Commons is to be called to the character of this return.

—The Bishop of Ely, England, preaching at the triennial festival of the Ely Diocesan Choral Society last week, said: "You may hear it said that the Church of England is a religious society set up by Parliament and endowed by Parliament about three hundred years ago, at the time of the Reformation. Your visit to this cathedral should give you an answer to such falsehoods. You have worshiped to day in a church which was founded six centuries before the first Parliament was called together, and for which the utmost that Parliament has done has been to suffer it to exist and to hold still a portion of the property which in ancient days religious persons out of their own good will gave unto it." In explaining what a cathedral was, the bishop said it was to the whole diocese what the parish church was to the parish.

—Sir Arthur Gordon, the governor of Fiji, addressed the Wesleyan Missionary meeting in Exeter Hall, and bore noble testimony to the grand work effected there through missionary agency. He stated that there were 1,500 day-schools in Fiji, and in every house family worship is conducted. Out of a population of 120,000, more than 102,000 are regular attendants at Wesleyan Churches. All the remaining 18,000 are not heathen, but members of other Christian Churches. Eight hundred churches have been built.

—The American United Presbyterian Church counts this year 80,692 members and 65,467 children in Sunday-schools. It has prosperous missions among the freemen at Knoxville, Tenn., and Chase City, Va. The Freedmen's College at Knoxville had last year 136 students, and the branch school in East Knoxville, 70. The school at Chase City enrolled 243 pupils. A mission formerly conducted at Vicksburg, Miss., was to have been re-opened, but this was prevented by the breaking out of the yellow fever.

—The Rev. Dr. Mullens, of the London Missionary Society, is undertaking a journey, primarily in the interest of the missions, to Eastern Africa. After performing some essential duties in connection with the organization of the mission at Ujiji, he will turn his attention to more purely geographical work, and, it is expected, will add considerably to our knowledge of the lake region.

—The mission to the Friendly Islands has ceased to be a charge, and has become a contributor to the treasury of the Wesleyan Society to the amount of from £1,000 to £2,000 a year—a larger sum of money, probably, than had ever been seen in the entire group before the introduction of Christianity.

—The Church in India will soon become self-supporting. There are now four hundred native preachers, many of whom receive their support in whole or in part from the native church. The contributions last year averaged more than one dollar per member. These poor Christians rebuke us by their liberality.

—The two French missionary expeditions to Ujiji and the Victoria Nyanza have reached their destinations successfully. The Abbe Debaize, the French explorer, paid by the French government, who has been till recently so successful, appears to have been deserted by his porters and is said to be reduced to great straits.

—The New York Tribune says the contributions of Protestant Christians in the United States to foreign missions do not exceed $2,000,000 annually, which is estimated to be about fifty cents a year for each communicant. The amount given by the various denominations is as follows: Methodist, $342,000; Congregationalist, $457,000; Presbyterian (North, South and United), $562,000; Baptist, $242,000; Episcopalian, $90,000; Reformed, $55,000—making a total of $1,748,000, which is increased to about $2,000,000 by the sums expended by the Bible and Tract societies.

—The experiment of publishing a daily Protestant paper in France has failed, and the journal has been discontinued. The immediate cause of the trouble is said to have been a bad business contract which the paper entered into at the beginning. The editorial conduct, moreover, does not seem to have been satisfactory and the sales of the paper fell off at an alarming rate.

—The Christian Vernacular Education Society for India employs in connection with the Bible and Tract societies ninety colporteurs, has 7,000 children in its schools, printed last year 620,981 copies of publications, school books, magazines and interesting works, and has circulated since its establishment 7,135,171 copies. It was organized twenty-one years ago by the association of members of several denominations.

—The Methodist preachers of Baltimore have determined to lend no countenance to camp meetings that allow the passage of Sunday trains to and from their grounds. At one grove meeting all the gates will be closed over the Sabbath, and at another after ten o'clock A. M.; a short opportunity being granted rural visitors for reaching the grounds.

—At the annual meeting of the Woman's Board of Missions, it was announced that an anonymous friend had offered $25,000 to cover the amount pledged by the Board for the Armenian College, at Harpoot, Turkey.

—Of the 849,870 population of Victoria, Australia, 300,000 are adherents of the Church of England; 202,641 of that of Rome; 134,126 of the Presbyterian body; 111,897 of the Wesleyan; 62,317 of other Protestant sects; 4,323 are Jews and 20,807 pagans. The aborigines number only 1,067 and are fast dying out.

—The Zenana Mission Society celebrated its anniversary with a breakfast in the large hall of the Cannon Street Hotel, London. It was stated that during the year a home for mission work had been built at Delhi, India, at a cost of $5,000, and that an average of 1,700 women had been daily taught in the various zenanas.

—Mr. Spurgeon's pastors' college contains 100 students. At the present time there are seventy-five applicants for twenty vacancies. Four hundred and twenty-eight students have been sent out from the college during the past fourteen years, and they baptized 36,000 persons. The object of this college is to produce preachers rather than scholars.

—The British Wesleyan Home Missionary Society reported, at the May Anniversary in London, total receipts for the year, £35,361; total expenditure, £31,675. The total receipts of the British Wesleyan Foreign Missionary Society was £133,333; expenditures £157,217.

—Rev. Dr. Burchard, who recently resigned from the Thirteenth Street Presbyterian Church, of New York City, after a pastorate of forty years has been presented with a purse of $15,000 by members of the congregation.

—The British and Foreign Bible Society reports that no less than 351,000 Bibles were circulated in Germany last year—a gain of 20,000. Nearly 500,000 copies of the scriptures were distributed among the Russian forces in Turkey.

—The offerings for the Wesleyan Methodist Thanksgiving fund reached last month the figure of $836,817, and were expected to amount to $850,000 before Conference.

—The Church of St. Roch, Paris, near which Napoleon Bonaparte quelled the sections by batteries of grapeshot, and so ended the French revolution, is about to be pulled down to make room for a new street.

—At the Religious Assembly in the Yosemite Valley, ten denominations had representation; and also more than twenty States and Territories.

—America has one-sixteenth the heathen population of the globe, and yet more than half the missionaries to the heathen are sent from America.

LITTLE THINGS.

BY J. R. ROBINSON.

"Though little I bring,"
Said the tiny spring,
As it burst from the mighty hill,
"'Tis pleasant to know,
Wherever I flow,
The pastures grow greener still."

And the drops of rain
As they fall on the plain,
When parched by the summer heat,
Refresh the sweet flowers
Which drooped by the hours,
And hung their heads at our feet.

Though the drops are small,
Yet taking them all,
Each one doing all that it can
To fulfill the design
Of its Maker divine,
What lessons they give unto man!

May we strive to fulfill,
As His righteous will,
Who formed the whole earth by His word!
Creator Divine!
We would ever be Thine,
And serve Thee, our God and our Lord.

It Comes from Above.

In France there was once a poor boy who was called "Little Peter." He was an orphan, and begged his bread from door to door. He sang very prettily, and people seldom sent him away empty-handed. He had the singular custom of saying on every occasion, "It comes from above." When his father was on his death bed—if indeed he had a bed, for he was very poor—he said to his son: "My dear Peter, you will now be left alone, and many troubles you will have in the world; but always remember that all comes from above, then you will find it easy to bear everything with patience."

Little Peter understood him, and in order not to forget the words, he often thought them aloud. When he knocked at a door, and the people asked, "Who is there?" he would answer, "Alms for little Peter," or he would say—

"Alms for little Peter, who Without Father or mother lies,
To my home beyond the sea
I have nothing here to buy."

They need no further information, and would give him something at the window or the door. He acknowledged every gift with the words, "It comes from above."

As little Peter grew up, he used to consider what the expression meant. He was intelligent enough to see that sin could not come from God; yet, as we must believe that God rules the world, we may well say of everything that happens, "It comes from above."

This faith of little Peter frequently turned out for his benefit. Once as he was passing through the town, a sudden wind blew off a roof-tile which fell on his shoulder, and struck him to the ground. His first words were, "It comes from above." The by-standers laughed, and thought he must be out of his wits, for of course the tile could not fall from below; but they did not understand him. A minute after, the wind tore off an entire roof in the same street, which crushed three men to death. Had little Peter gone on, he would probably have been at that moment just where the roof fell. Thus, you see, the tile did indeed fall from above—not from the roof simply, but from heaven itself.

Another time a gentleman employed him to carry a letter to a neighboring town, bidding him make all haste. On the way he tried to spring over a ditch, but it was so wide, that he fell in, and was nearly drowned. The letter was lost in the mud, and could not be recovered. When little Peter got out again, he exclaimed, "It comes from above!" The gentleman was angry when little Peter told him of the mishap, and drove him out of doors. "It comes from above," said Peter, as he stood on the steps. The next day the gentleman sent for him. "See here," said he, "there are two ducats for you, for tumbling into the ditch. Circumstances have so changed, on a sudden, that it would have been a misfortune to me had the letter gone safely."

I could tell much more about Peter. When he had become a large boy he was still called "Little Peter." An Englishman, who came into town, having heard his story, sent for him, in order to bestow on him some charity. When "Little Peter" entered the room, the Englishman said, "What think you, Peter, why have I sent for you?" "It comes from above," replied Peter. This answer greatly pleased the Englishman. After musing a while, he said, "You are right; I will take you into my service, and provide well for you. Will you agree to that?" "It comes from above," answered Peter; "why should I not?" So the Englishman took him away. We were all sorry that he came no more to sing his pretty verse under our windows. But he had become weary of begging, and, as he had learned no trade, we were glad that he was at length provided for. Long afterwards we heard that when the rich Englishman died he bequeathed a large sum of money to "Little Peter," and he became a wealthy man in Birmingham. But he still said of every occurrence, "It comes from above."—New York Observer.

Faithful Sandie.

Dean Stanley in the course of a recent sermon to children in Westminster Abbey, told a touching story of an Edinburgh street boy. Two gentlemen were standing at the door of a hotel one very cold day, when a little boy with a thin blue face, his feet bare and red with the cold, and with nothing to cover him but a bundle of rags, came and said: "Please sir, buy some matches."

"No, don't want any," the gentleman said. "But they are only a penny a box," the poor little fellow pleaded. "Yes, but you see we don't want a box," the gentleman said again. "Then I will gie ye twa boxes for a penny," the boy said at last, and so to get rid of him, the gentleman who tells the story says, "I bought a box; but then I found I had no change, so I said, 'I will buy a box to-morrow.' 'O, do buy them, please,' the boy pleaded again; 'I will run and get ye the change, for I am verra hungry.' So I gave him the shilling and he started away. I waited for him but no boy came. Then I thought I had lost my shilling; still there was that in the boy's face I trusted and I did not like to think bad of him. Late in the evening I was told a boy wanted to see me; when he was brought in I found it was a smaller brother of the boy that got my shilling; but, if possible, still more ragged and poor and thin. He stood a moment diving into his rags as if he was seeking something, and then said: 'Are you the gentleman that bought the matches fra Sandie?' 'Yes.' 'Weel, then, here's fourpence out o' yer shilling; Sandie cannot come, he is very ill; a cart ran over him and knocked him down, and he lost his bonnet and his matches and your sevenpence and both his legs are broken, and the doctor says he'll die, and that's a'.' And then putting the fourpence on the table, the poor child broke down into great sobs." The two little things lived alone, their father and mother being dead. Poor Sandie was lying on a bundle of shavings. He said: "I got the change, sir, and was coming back, and then the horse knocked me down, and both my legs were broken; and oh, Renby! little Renby! I am sure I am dying, and who will take care of you when I am gone? What will ye do, Renby?" The kind-hearted gentleman took the lad's hand and said he would always take care of Renby. Poor Sandie had just enough strength to look up as if to thank his protector, and then the light went out of his blue eyes forever.—N. Y. Tribune.

JUDGED.—A few months ago John S. Morton was sentenced in Philadelphia to ten years' imprisonment in the eastern penitentiary. As he left the court room, his friends—for the most part fashionable, and wealthy men—surrounded the judge, clamorously demanding that he should be driven to jail in a carriage instead of the prison van. This little incident and the story of the prisoner are worthy the attention of young men beginning commercial life.

One short year ago Morton was a leading citizen of Philadelphia; not a leader of the fashion of Tweed or Fisk, but a refined, cultured gentleman the descendant of a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and of a long line of judges and honorables, energetic in business. He was one of the foremost projectors of the Centennial Exposition, was president of the great permanent exhibiton, and his name was brought before the people as a candidate for governor of Pennsylvania.

He had everything which could give a man a solid, honorable footing in the world; but unfortunately he fell into the society of a clique of fashionable people, of the sort who would think the riding to prison in a van a worse disgrace than the crime which drove him there. In haste to gain money and to vie in splendor with these friends, Morton was lead to dabble in stocks, then to gamble in them, and finally, in order to make up his losses, to issue fraudulent stock in a railway company of which he was president, to the amount of two millions of dollars.

Now, boys who read such stories as these are apt to think of themselves as of an entirely different order of human beings from these gigantic swindlers; yet the shop-boy who sells a lot of damaged goods to an unwary customer, or the lad who cheats in a game of marbles, are each in their degree guilty as was Morton, and about on the same broad highway. Deception and fraud permeates every part of our commercial system, and they generally meet a temporary success. The shop-man who cheats in his master's interest usually is promoted. Just as Morton with his ill gotten gains was able to live like a prince, but retribution is sure, even in this world. The tricky clerk is known, and avoided as a tricky merchant, and John S. Morton, with shaved head and convict's dress, will meet old age in a prison cell.—Youth's Companion.

A STORY ABOUT CRABS.—The ancients tell a very instructive fable about the crabs, who once deliberated in a council what to do, in order to amend their backward walk. "It is a shame for us," said the speaker, addressing the assembly, "to walk contrary to all other animals. Whenever a man is unfortunate in his business, at once they say, 'He walks like the crab.' We must suffer this no longer. As regards ourselves, we are too old to change our habit; but let us make it a law that every parent shall train his young one, by all ways and means, never to walk otherwise than forward. Our descendants will then gradually amend the disgraceful oddity of our species." The law proposed was unanimously adopted, and the meeting dissolved. "It is now time," said the old crab to his young one, "that you learn to walk." "How must I do it?" inquired the youngster. "Lift up your feet, one after the other, and put them straight ahead, and pay attention not to walk in any other way, was the parent's reply. "Father, walk ahead and show me," was the youngster's demand. The old one began to walk in his old fashion; the young one followed him at once in like manner. "Hold!" cried the old one, in anger. "Did I not tell you to walk straight ahead; why don't you obey me?" "I cannot do differently from your example," the little one meekly replied. To be brief, the old crab could effect nothing to the purpose by all his explanations and threats; and this is the reason why all the crabs still walk backwards.

LONGEVITY.—There are now residing in St. Martin, Scilly Isles, several men between eighty and ninety years of age, who daily go out to work on their farms.

Immediate Results.

There are reasons in the peril of souls, and in the power of the gospel to save, for aiming at the immediate conversion of the people. The accepted time, the day of salvation, is now. But, in the midst of what appears to be present results, we must not forget that some one has sown the seed before us, and that we may be only reapers. Of the conversions which we count up at a meeting nearly every one has a history connected with early parental influences, with Sunday-school training, and with the impressions of many sermons heard through a course of years. Those antecedents belong to the results which we regard as immediate, and have been a necessary link in ringing the soul to Christ as the last appeal made. We have only gathered the ripened fruit when it was ready to fall. We have thrust our sickle into the wheat that has been sown and cultivated by other hands. Large immediate results are made the more possible by this fact. We enter into other men's labors in the case of almost every soul that is brought to repentance and enrolled with the visible church.

There should be care to keep up the sowing as well as the reaping. The immediate awakening and conversion of souls should do this. Be the aim. Incentives to a prompt decision and choice should be presented, but the element of instruction and of edification must not be ignored. As we go along the ground should be prepared and the seed sown, so that those who follow shall be greeted with an ampler harvest. The training and discipling of the converted are just as necessary as their awakening. The effects of this work are gradual, the progress slow, and statistics do not readily show what has been done. The results may be immediate, but they are not immediately perceptible. It is to be desired that the work in our Sunday-schools should be marked at once, and continually by the conversion of the children; but, in fact, it is largely a preparatory work, in which Bible truth is instilled, and in which are laid the foundations of an intelligent and useful Christian career. The endeavor should be to bring the children savingly to Christ, and a deeper earnestness and spirituality should pervade our Sunday-schools, but we need not be surprised that the sowing of good seed is the main and the present result. The Sunday-school is the forerunner to prepare the way of the Lord.

There is a great deal of this preparatory work to be done. Measures that bear only indirectly upon the final and supreme end may yet be of the very highest importance. Missions among the heathen, especially in China and India, were at work many years before there were any conversions. Languages had to be learned, the Bible translated, and schools established, before the preaching of the gospel could effectively do its work. This, besides exhibiting the general principle, illustrates the many slow and indirect agencies that bear upon the conversion of souls at our home church doors. What we call immediate interests are the combined results of many and often very remote influences. Back of our revival work, and yet vitally connected with it, are the interests of education, of church literature, and of a decent church architecture. Our people, to be a worthy branch of the church of Christ, need to be imbued with the true spirit of missions, and they need to be elevated to a higher conception of the grace of giving. Such questions as these belong to the very life of our church, and they are vital to a sound and healthy type of religious experience. By giving attention to them during the season of our largest religious gatherings, and of greatest special activities, the immediate results will not be less, while the more remote will be wonderfully increased.

Sermons on missions, on education, or religious reading may not lead to the immediate conversion of any, but, in the long run, they may bring about the salvation of thousands. There are many subjects that ought to be the frequent topics of preaching, and which are not the best adapted to induce penitents to come to the altar, or to join the church. Family government, family prayer, temperance and righteous living may not have the kind of pathos in them to move sinners to immediate action, but such sermons yield their fruit after awhile. There is a time and a place for all these things, and there may be times and places when they should not be intruded. We protest, however, against a partial preaching of the gospel that always excludes them, and against that impatience of them, and that clamor for immediate results which would altogether exclude them from those occasions when the people who most need to hear about them are present. With many the camp-meeting and protracted meeting season is made a period of religious dissipation, and a round of personal excitement. Can we not make it a time for the strengthening of the foundations and pillars of Methodism in giving life and breadth to our great church interests, at the same time that the immediate results in conversions shall not be less?

Immediate results grow out of soil previously tilled, and there are interests lying at the bottom of our religious prosperity which are essential, though not directly, to the spiritual welfare of the seekers at the altar. Can we not aim at and have a revival that shall not only refresh believers and save sinners, but one that shall invigorate and breathe new life into all the institutions of the church? Along with other blessed fruits which are manifest at the moment, can not there be an improvement in family religion, in missions, in the grace of giving, and in all the permanent and material interests of Methodism? There is no waste in giving thought and prayer to these subjects, nor are they of less moment than the awakening of souls. They rather go together, and make up the whole counsel of God—a complete and symmetrical gospel.

Begin to Prepare.

It is not too soon for parents to begin to think about sending their children to school, and to make choice of the institutions to be patronized by them. We have published reports from several of our best Methodist colleges, and others will follow. Our advertising columns usually contain the cards of our own schools, and of others. It is always well to send for catalogues, and for such information as may be desired.

The importance of sending to our own schools is obvious. While a well-conducted State institution may be of great value to the country, it can never duly meet the demand upon us to surround our children with the best religious influences. Religious character and sound conversion are of more vital necessity than the discipline of the mind. We should not hesitate to send where all of these ends are most likely to be secured.

Somewhat in the way of the highest literary advantages may be wisely foregone in order that the best moral and religious culture may be assured. Without good moral principles, and habits of virtue and temperance, education is a doubtful blessing. A boy that comes back from college or university with skeptical notions, unsettled religious convictions, and with evil habits rivetted upon him is ten-fold more surely worse off than if he had been kept at home. There is, however, no necessity for sacrificing these questions to mental training to the religious. We have Methodist institutions in the South in which a good education can be obtained, and in which, at the same time, the student is likely to be thoroughly imbued with Christian principle. These schools are educating our young ministers, and are contributing largely to the influence strength and intelligence of our people. It is our evident duty to patronize them, and in every possible way to help to build them up. Circumstances may sometimes require us to send our children into another climate, or to send them to other than our own schools, but very strong reasons are needed to justify such a course.

Our colleges, even with tuition fees, are not more expensive than the Southern University or Centenary College. Certainly our girls can be sent to better schools, to more comfortable homes, and more economical than those at Tuskegee, Summerfield, Meridian, Brookhaven and Mansfield. But if our own schools were somewhat more expensive than others, it is still our duty, where it all practicable, to patronize them. They are worth more to us, and, as Methodists and as Christians, we should be willing to pay something for the advantages they afford. In matters of education and in literature, is it not a wise investment to pay something extra for the Methodism that is in them? What sort of a Christian, and what sort of a Methodist is he who is looking out simply for the cheapest school, or the cheapest book or paper, without regard to its religious character? We ought so to love our church and prize her institutions as to exclude the competition from without. There should be a most hearty willingness to pay more for education at our own schools, because it is worth more. While we insist upon this principle, we do not concede that there are more economical schools than those under the control of our church.

They need patronage, and our people can fill their halls if they will. The purpose of this article is to call early attention to this subject. Limited means may prevent many parents from sending their sons and daughters away from home, but all should remember that a good Christian education is the best gift they can bestow upon their children. Present sacrifices, made to this end, will be richly repaid in the future; and, though now incapable of fully appreciating its value, your children will in after-life bless your memory for the education you enabled them to acquire.

The individual welfare, and that of the church and country, greatly depend upon the education of our children. A properly educated womanhood, and a liberally educated manhood, are of first importance to the South. We have the schools within our own bounds. They are doing a noble work in spite of inadequate patronage and lack of endowment. First of all, we can help them, and do the best thing for our children by patronizing them; and, beyond this, there are those who by contributing endowment funds can be the instruments of a perpetual blessing to this and coming generations.

—The Louisiana State Convention, in the ordinance on general provisions, adopted on Wednesday last, has the following article on lotteries:

ART. 20. The General Assembly shall have authority to grant lottery charters or privileges, provided each charter or privilege shall pay not less than $10 000 per annum in money into the treasury of the State, and provided that all charters shall cease and expire on the first of January, 1895, from which time all lotteries are prohibited in the State.

The $10 000 per annum now provided by law to be paid by the Louisiana State Lottery Company, according to the provisions of its charter granted the year 1868, shall belong to the Charity Hospital of New Orleans, and the charter of said company is recognized as a contract binding on the State for the period therein specified, except its monopoly clause, which is hereby abrogated, and all laws contrary to the provisions of this article are hereby declared null and void, provided said company shall file a written renunciation of all its monopoly features in the office of the Secretary of State within sixty days after the ratification of this constitution.

Of the additional sums raised by licenses on lotteries, the hospital at Sovereport shall receive $10 000 annually, and the remaining sum shall be divided each year among the several parishes in the State for the benefit of the schools.

From this article it will be seen that all lotteries are prohibited after January 1, 1895. Until that time there may be many, as the Louisiana Lottery Company is divested of its exclusive privileges as a monopoly. So it seems we are to have lotteries without stint for the next fifteen years. Probably when this time is up the Constitution will be amended, so as to continue this legalized gambling indefinitely.

—The article prohibiting the sale of spirituous liquors on Sunday we regret to say, was reconsidered on the same day, and the following substitute was adopted:

The regulation of the sale of alcoholic and spirituous liquors is declared a police regulation, and the General Assembly may enact laws regulating its sale and use.

We are called on the motion to adopt the substitute and it prevailed by a vote of 63 to 58.

We shall be glad to publish the names of those who voted on this substitute. The article, as adopted, amounts to nothing, and it is a sharp kick down on the part of the Convention. The Liquor Sellers' Association did not labor in vain to change the vote of the Convention. The whisky power is evidently triumphant. Lotteries and groggeries will now spread over our State more thickly than ever.

An English wit once suggested, as the only way to cure Ireland of rebellions, that the Emerald Isle be sunk into the Atlantic for twenty-four hours. We have often wondered whether Louisiana could be made a creditable member of the Union by any less heroic treatment. We have had lately two distinct classes of reminders that the State is badly populated. First, we may mention an eruption of Louisiana-lying in Washington politics. The guileless honorarity of these people who swear on both sides of any question, is very provoking and discouraging to hope of Louisiana. Second, we may mention that the attempts, probably successful, to cut and slash the debt of the State—if it is plainer, to repudiate more or less of it—has added to our despairing feeling that Louisiana needs a new population very badly. We do not like to say such things, but this case is one demanding severity. There are many good people there; but if things go on a few years more as they have been going, impatient folks will wish these good people to stand out of the way of a shower of brimstone. As a small item, we may also mention that while Memphis and other towns have cleaned house to repel yellow fever, New Orleans is reported to be as dirty as ever.

The above is a choice extract from the New York Methodist. We are no better than we ought to be in Louisiana, but it will be found that the liars are mostly imported from the North, either white carpet-baggers or negro Radicals, who have been corrupted by association with their Northern political friends. The debt, so far as it has been settled at this writing, has not been repudiated, and we hope it will not be. The most of it represents the plunder and spoils of the Northern men, who for many long and sad years ruled in our State. If ever a people had a good reason to repudiate we have, but we hope the debt, though largely fraudulent, will be paid.

As compared with Memphis, our city is not particularly dirty. The yellow fever has broken out there, while in New Orleans we have been exceptionally healthy, so far.

Finally, the New York pot is about as black as the Louisiana kettle.

—We notice that there is a considerable emigration movement from New England to Tennessee. These poor people must be bulldozed and badly treated up there. The condition of the factory operatives and laboring people calls for Southern sympathy. It is a long time since they have been free to vote as they please. The constitutional amendments, it may be, are disregarded, or do not apply to their case. Something ought to be done for the oppressed of Massachusetts and Connecticut.

—We have read nearly everything that has appeared, pro and con, about the Brinkly affair, and our deliberate opinion is that there is not the shadow of ground for the charges of ill treatment and murder which the New Orleans Bishops and many of the New York Methodist editors have made. We have met with nothing nearer the truth than the following from the Christian Union:

The persecution of Messrs. Todd and Pearce for preaching the gospel to the blacks in Arkansas appears, from subsequent investigation, to be a myth. The two men were arrested by a local marshal on suspicion that one of them was a runaway Methodist Episcopal preacher from Missouri, who was accused of murder, and for whose arrest a reward had been offered. Mr. Todd, scared by his own imaginations, undertook to run from the officer, and was halted by a shot from his pistol, as any other runaway might be under similar circumstances. Mr. Todd's subsequent story of masked men and blood-hounds appears to be traceable to an excited and frightened imagination. There is a little chance for newspaper discussion left; but these are the facts as they were elicited by a coroner's jury, the foreman of which was a Northern man and a Republican, and we see no reason to doubt the conclusion of the jury—that the whole story grew out of a blunder by a not very wise police officer, and a scare by a very timid preacher. He was killed by his own fright.

—There have been half a dozen cases of yellow fever in Memphis. No new cases for several days. Our news columns give the particulars. New Orleans at this writing was never healthier. Not a case of yellow fever so far. Probably at no time within the past forty years has the city been cleaner or in better sanitary condition. The hot wave that has recently swept over the West has not reached us. The weather is plenty hot for the season.

—Special attention is called to the advertisement of Southern University, Greensboro, Ala. The next session opens on the first Wednesday in October. Rev. J. Lewis, D. D., succeeds the lamented Dr. Smith as President. The college is in good hands, and justly is entitled to a large patronage.

From China.

Rev. J. W. Lambuth writes to Dr. Wilson from Yokohama, Japan, May 15. The letter is published in the Nashville Christian Advocate. We quote as follows:

My health has not been good for some months, but I am happy to say that the trip to Yokohama has been of great benefit to me, and I feel now much better. I hope next year to visit Amoy, if my life is spared. I am anxious first to see Brother Reid and Brother Reyal with their wives, in the field and at work, before I leave China. The work is in a most encouraging condition at present, and needs the presence of the foreign missionary. Our preachers are young in church-matters, and need the direction and support of the foreign missionary. There is a work of grace going on in the Soochow District of a most encouraging nature. Two of our native preachers have charge of it, and for the present are directing it alone, without the aid of any foreigner. The Lord is blessing this work, and the way seems to be opening up in a wonderful manner among the country people for the reception of the gospel. It is not in the city, but in country towns and villages. The reports we have from this part of the work gives us great joy and hope.

At our last quarterly-meeting in Soochow we took some action as to what is necessary for the enlargement of the work in the various districts. It was as follows:

In Shanghai District we need to rent another building for a chapel in the city of Shanghai, costing about $250. We need also a large church, costing about $4 000 or $5 000. It is much needed, and should be built without delay. In the Nantzlang District we need to have erected buildings for a girls' boarding-school, and rooms for Bible-women, the whole costing about $1 200; for land on which to erect the same, $200; for a native parsonage, $500. $1 900.

In the Kading District we do not at present need any extension of the work. In Taitsang District we need a church costing $300; land on which to build, $200; for a parsonage, $500; for a school, $50; $1 050.

For the city of Kiowsou we need two places for preaching, more than we have. For this it will be necessary to supply $100 per annum. For Soochow we need, in addition to the amount appropriated for Brother Parker's house, the sum of $1 500, to build a double house. For the school-house $1 500; for a church and parsonage, $1,500; and for additional chapels in the Soochow District, $100.

We want two additional married men this year, for 1879. Let the missionary come out a married man. It is better for a man not to come single, if he has any hope of being married. There are several reasons why they should come out married men. I once advocated men coming out single two or three years before they are married, but it is a great mistake. That is the general opinion of missionaries now in the field. Traveling expenses for man and wife to China are about $1 000; for their outfit $300; buying land and building house, $2,500. This last item is a very important one. Missionaries should have good houses to live in as soon as they can get them. Let them bring the money with them with which to build a house. It is not well to have them live in Chinese houses long, if they are expected to preserve their health. Send us two men every year until we shall have forty men. These men can be supported by their Conferences. We have fifteen million souls to labor with in this part of the province, and need the men. There are important cities within forty and fifty miles of us yet unoccupied, with a population of hundreds of thousands.

India Asks, "Who is Christ?"

This was the title of a lecture delivered a short time since in the Town Hall, Calcutta, by Baboo K. Chunder Sen. The Indian press has drawn marked attention to the matter; the Indian Daily News provided a supplement for the sole purpose of giving a full report of the lecture. It is said that there was a numerous audience, composed almost exclusively of natives, and that a few Europeans were present, including the Bishop and some clergymen. The lecturer began by saying, "Countrymen and friends, I desire to speak to you of Christ." He stated frankly that he was not a Christian, and expressed the opinion that none of the numerous sects into which the Church of Christ is divided would allow his creed to be identified with its own. He was, he said, deficient in Biblical knowledge, nor was he skilled in exegesis. Yet he must speak of Christ. His love of Christ constrained him to speak of Him, and his loyalty to Christ was his apology for doing so. If any other apology were needed, he would invite their attention to India's earnest and impassioned solicitations. "Most eagerly and earnestly she asks, 'Who is Christ?' Christian people in this country, and not a few critics, should take note of Mr. Sen's words when he asked, 'Are not Christian ideas and institutions taking their root on all sides in the soil of India?' 'Well may our fatherland sincerely and earnestly ask,' said he, 'Who is this Christ?' The following sentences are full of earnestness, strange as they may sound from the lips of a non-Christian. 'What rules India? What power is that that sways the destinies of India at the present moment?' You are mistaken if you think that it is the ability of Lord Lytton in the Cabinet, or the military genius of Sir Frederick Haines in the field, that rules India. It is not politics; it is not diplomacy that has laid a firm hold of the Indian heart. It is not the glittering bayonet nor the fiery cannon that has pieces us. No, none of these can hold India in subjection. Armies never conquered the heart of a nation. You cannot deny that your hearts have been touched, conquered and subjugated by a superior power. That power is Christ. Christ rules British India, and not the British Government. England has sent to us a tremendous moral force in the life and character of that mighty Prophet to conquer and hold this vast empire. None but Jesus! none but Jesus! ever deserved this height, this precious diadem, India; and Christ shall have it. If, then, India is encompassed on all sides by Christian literature, Christian civilization and a Christian government, she must naturally endeavor to satisfy herself as to the nature of this great power in the realm which is doing such wonders in our midst.'"—London Christian World.

Permanent Results.

The question, says the Boston Watchman, is often asked, after a revival, "Are the results permanent?" It is seldom put in reference to other forms of religious work, as it is deemed unnecessary. It is our impression, however, that we need to ask this question quite as often in reference to the labors of the church which attract less notice, and are supposed to be most solid because most gradual in their processes. This impression is confirmed by the following in reference to the Episcopal Church, for which we are indebted to a correspondent of the Churchman:

"Bishop Doane (Albany) and Bishop Scarborough (New Jersey) have recently asked, What becomes of the many confirmed from year to year, in their dioceses? In the last five years Bishop Scarborough has confirmed about 3 000 in this diocese, and only 600 remain as the net increase for the whole period. Hence it appears that only about one fifth as many as are confirmed go to increase the entire list from year to year. What their is the occasion of this startling result? Deaths and removals of communicants may possibly account for one-third of this apparent deficiency, but for perhaps two thirds of it, it is to be feared another cause must be admitted, viz; that well nigh half of the confirmed fail to receive permanent place on the list of communicants. It is not that they never come to the communion, for in looking over the parochial reports, nearly all the confirmed are reported as becoming communicants. Nearly all, say seven-eighths, communicate at least once after confirmation. Their coming another puzzle if they are added to the parish list at the time, when and how do they get off that list? If the question were only as to the number habitually communicating, it would not be so difficult; but it is keeping the list as reported from year to year, which one would suppose most embarrassing, but upon them, with very few exceptions only of rare—not merely occasional, but even protracted, absence. Certainly there is something in this case yet to be considered a mystery in the modern sense."

We should like to see this matter elucidated further. Our Methodist brethren make more of records than any other people. Our Episcopal brethren make less of them than any other. The latter, however, are supposed to touch a class not apt to decide great questions in a spirit of levity, but calm, considerate, sedate. The loss of probationers among the Methodists is very heavy. But, judging from the figures given by Bishop Scarborough, the loss of communicants among the Episcopalians may be far greater. It would seem that the system of revivals is safer than the opposite extreme.

We would speak with caution, bearing in mind the danger of generalizing from a narrow range of facts, the possibility that results from the two dioceses named may be quite exceptional, and the need of statistics from which a positive conclusion may be deduced.

The Ruins of the Rothschild Firm.

It may be said that the temporary interruption in the normal relationship, the loss of assets and skilled supervision, and the absence of that element of strong personal credit which the Rothschilds possessed, will be felt as to the conduct of business to what extent; so many interests as are entangled upon the operations, handling of negotiations, the bread of which have all along been held in the steady grasp of one clear-headed, resolute, self-possessed old man. But it must be remembered that a large portion of the business of this house consists of established connections of a valuable kind, as the trusted agents of governments, associations, or individuals at home, which, once secured, require for its maintenance only the exertion of that confidence originally secured and strengthened by years of loyal adhesion to engagements. There is another difficulty not to be lost sight of. Such operations, and their smooth working, is guaranteed by the discipline of experience, and routine, whose allegiance to the firm is never doubtful. Of an extensive and most lucrative kind of business, of which the Rothschilds have always enjoyed a liberal share, no interruption occurs by the "solution of continuity" involved in the death of a leading partner or official head, for, subject to the original impetus, long since given, the great machine works steadily on without hitch or pause. Again, the great transactions in which the New-court firm took a prominent part were not the products of one enterprising brain, but the outcome of the deliberations of many. The world is probably not wrong in supposing that when a loan was to be arranged for a State or a great company, or when a vast banking transaction involving the advance of millions sterling had to be settled, or a purchase or sale of the harvests of an entire Continent had to be manipulated, several heads were called into council, the shrewdest, most experienced, and coolest in the moneyed world, all bound together by a common interest, the sense of a common prestige, and the consciousness of a common responsibility. The death of Baron Lionel removes one councellor whose ripe wisdom was of inestimable value, but "Concordia" is still the charm to influence all the rest, and the welfare of each is the solicitude of all. No doubt there are other departments of the business transacted by these powerful firms that may seem likely to be affected by such an incident as the loss of the Lyonnais head. Popular rumor, which always exaggerates, and does not require malignant scandal to stimulate it to mortal excesses, always assumes that the great capitalists of the city are great speculators. The vulgar imagination pictures the chief of one of these houses sitting calmly in his chair and directing the operations of scores of agents on every Bourse at every minute of the day, convulsing the exchanges, making or unmaking the credit of any individual or nation, playing with millions sterling, but always emerging from the day's labor richer by countless thousands, and eager to resume play for even deeper stakes, and at a still heavier cost to others, next day. The exaggeration in such sketches borders upon total falsehood. The typical banker and capitalist or great merchant is a man who never gambles, and risks little or nothing in vulgar speculation, but whose fortune is built by the profits derived from an infinite of small transactions or bargains, which represent straightforward work for others and honest service.—London Daily Telegraph.

DEATH OF DR. LUTHER M. SMITH.—Dr. Lewis informs us, by postal card, that this eminent divine and educator, at the time of his death chancellor of the Southern University, Greensboro, Ala., died at Birmingham, Ala., July 4—D. Smith was formerly connected with Emory College, Ga., and for several years past has presided over the Southern University. He was an instructive and forcible preacher, a ripe scholar, and an able administrator. He was a man of great delicacy and refinement of taste and feeling, and the embodiment of purity and integrity of character. His death will be generally deplored, and especially by the faculty, trustees, students and friends of the Southern University. We extend our sympathies to his bereaved family. Dr. Lewis promises to furnish an obituary notice soon.

Rev. J. F. Sellick, writing to the St. Louis Christian Advocate from Charles, Louisiana, says:

The railroad will soon open a beautiful country to those wishing to settle in a more salubrious climate for young. Sugar cane is a certain crop of sustaining profit, more effects than it now has. The land, cheap and fertile and with proper tillage, will bring ample supplies to all those who must subsist upon it harvests. Wheat will not [illegible] be grown with any success, but corn, rice and cotton. Vegetables of every kind grow admirably in this country. Figs grow well, while oranges and bananas in certain localities. Near the coast, other fruits common to you do not seem to do well. The climate will compare favorably of its dead air ages; people are not compelled to spend half they earn for wood and coal, and food for cattle and horses. These broad prairies, when once put into cultivation, and dotted with comfortable farm houses will be one of the prettiest, healthiest and most inviting in the gulf states. If any of your people would like to move farther south they would do well to visit it and make observations for themselves. The people already here would be glad to see industrious and thrifty farmers settle among them. They do not need politicians as they are supplied already.

Rev. Dr. P. O. Summers, writing to the Western Methodist from Abingdon, Va., June 24, says:

The commencement of Emory and Henry College last week passed off well. I regret that I could not be present to enjoy it. Bps. Wiley, Langley, Buchanan and others who are here, give a good report. A change has been made in the faculty. Dr. Wiley resigns the presidency, and Professor Buchanan (of the Vanderbilt Bible Chair) has been elected in his place. I have not heard whether he will accept the call. He is, you know, a son-in-law of Dr. Wiley, and was formerly associated with him at Emory and Henry. Dr. Wiley is to take the Chair of Mental and Moral Science. Professors Longley and Davis retire—their places are filled by Professors Sharp and Buchanan, of whom I hear a good account.

All pastors are earnestly requested to forward a list of the names of members of their charge or churches in their appointments, who are not subscribers to the ADVOCATE at as early a day as possible.

The publisher desires the names, to send sample copies of the paper, with a view to facilitate securing subscriptions.

Please give this matter prompt attention.

We regret to learn that Rev. J. J. Clark died at Brookhaven, July 11. Bro. Clark was local at the time of his death, but had been for many years a member of the Mississippi Conference. May God's grace support his bereaved wife and children in their great sorrow.

We are pained to learn, says the Georgia Methodist of July 1, of the death of Rev. A. Wright, of the South Georgia Conference. He has been a faithful and eminent minister of the gospel for many years.

The net decrease in membership of the British Wesleyan connection this year is 3,287.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Thoughts for the Month

The object in laying by cotton with little or no beds are two-fold: first, to prevent washing of the land—all know how liable clean, soil cotton land is to wash from August to April, and the higher the beds the greater the danger; because so much water accumulates between them. The other object is to expose as little surface as possible for evaporation to proceed from, and thus counteract the damaging droughts of July and August. As long as the limbs of cotton will permit, two furrows may be given each row; later, use a very wide sweep or shape slightly and run one furrow in the middle. The hoes should follow working at intervals of two to three weeks and clean out everything left by the plow. As the object of hoeing now, is not to secure the land but destroy weeds and grass, the hands should be required not to touch the ground—an egg where there is something to cut. If this rule is observed they can pass over ground very rapidly.

LATE PLOWING OF CORN.

Up to the time that corn "tasselS" or is preparing to tassel, it may be plowed with shovels or comparatively deep running plows, but after that period the cultivator should be exceedingly shallow. Even the advocates of deep plowing concede that much injury is done by cutting the roots after tassel appears. But the previous working should have been well directed, so that the late shallow plowings do not save the crop in good order. If in good condition light sweepings may sometimes be given with advantage after the corn "silkens" provided the land is rich and capable of making a good crop. If very poor it will not pay to plow it, often the expense will eat up the profits. If corn is laid by "giving time" for the land to become foul with other growth, it is best to sow down to peas at last plowing, one to one and a half bushels per acre. If some peas may be made, or some pea vine hay secured, or in failure of these, the land will certainly be benefitted.

PEAS (SOWN IN JULY).

It is not yet too late to sow down a portion of land in peas. Where you have forgotten to plant in drills and cultivate will be early peas, provided it early enough to be planted. It would be well to apply a top dressing of guano to the pea crop, as the benefit both of peas and land. South Carolina rock element, which would greatly increase the crop and lessen the exhaustion of land consequent upon the heavy crops taken from it in the season. Guano is a drain heavily on its fertilizing qualities and he has made large deposits.

SWEET POTATOES.

In the vines have reached, or covered the ground, they will not require much further plowing. As the vines cover their rooting at the middles, giving the sun a chance to destroy the pests of the plant, by killing grass or other weeds are present they should be removed by hand. The present season of the year is rather late now to plant slips, if not in good season. The Southern queen we have ever cultivated will make good sized potatoes, if started any time before the 15th of this month.

SWEET CORN

having reached a stage when it may be boiled for the table, the ears should now quite mature, that is form.

CERTAIN MILLET

may still be sown, but peas are preferable at this late period of the summer. For the former to succeed now, the soil must be unusually rich.

CROP NOTICES.

Continue to practice diligence in the ends of spreading branches, but not on all of them, as is done by many.

CULTIVATION.

If the rows are wide enough, may have a light sweeping, the hoes following and removing every spear of grass and every weed which may be present. After this, it will be able to take care of itself.

Look ahead now and perfect your plans for fall crops, turnips, oats, barley, rye, clover, etc., etc. Plow the land intended for them whenever rains permit, so as to get them in good tilth by seeding time.—Southern Cultivator.

KEEP PURE-BRED FOWLS.

Aside from the great satisfaction it affords, it is better to keep and breed pure-bred fowls than to breed and feed a lot of mongrels, which latter many do for fear of the expense of buying a few pure-bred fowls to start with. In determining which breed of fowls to get, make up your mind at the start that no other breed can possess all the desirable qualities you are in search of. If you want a breed for laying, get Leghorns or Hamburgs; if you wish a breed for weight, get some of the Brahmas or Cochins; and if you wish a breed principally for ornament, get the Polish; but give up the idea of getting a grand combination of all these qualities in one breed. Make up your mind what you wish in the way of fowls, and then select such breed as will suit your requirements best. Give them good clean quarters, supply them liberally with water, giving them regular care and attention, and you will never have cause to regret your investment in pure-bred fowls. When your neighbors see what fine fowls you have, they will naturally want some of them, or a setting of the eggs, and thus you have a demand created which will amply repay you at first not only in cash and satisfaction, but in the future. If you had bred nothing but mongrels, there would have been no demand, and then merely at market prices. A good trio of pure-bred fowls, of a most any kind, can now be bought at fair figures from reliable breeders in most sections of the country.—Moore's Rural.

RAISING TOMATOES.

We are going to cut the clover on a piece of land, and then plow under a good coat of manure. Intend to put on 3 or 4 bushels of ashes per acre, and then harrow over the land, and put on about 300 pounds per acre of guano in the rate of drills, manure, ashes, and guano. Intend to plow deep, and cover the seed with a hoe at uniform depth. Three quarters of a pound of seed is enough for an acre. The first week in June is the time we put in the Swedes; but have also put in tomatoes late as the middle. We have old stumps now on hand, and intend to put in one row of tomatoes between every two stumps. This crop will be fed to the hogs and cattle. The hogs like it well. A great deal to keep up the flow of milk in the cattle. The ground must be poor, I feel, and the manure we shall work the soil a great deal before planting, and then to them in plaster and cover them as fast as dropped. This will make a gain in the time of coming up, and get the plants started well, clear of the weeds, which will help in the care of them. Then plow up a little middle, turning two slim furrows together.—Rural New Yorker.

TOMATOES.

The variety known as Hathaway's Excelsior, or simply Hathaway, is highly appreciated in England for its fine Garden says that it is the best and most for culinary purposes, both while large red sort, almost as smooth and round as a ball. The same writer in speaking of raising plants in pots and boxes, says that soapsuds, or any mild sewage of that kind, proves most acceptable to the plants after they have started the pots and boxes with rain, and does also soot or guano-water, and this assistance is given, if plants like weak soapsuds.

We have known tomatoes successfully grown on this principle by filling barrels nearly full of soil, setting them in a warm place, and transplanting tomatoes into them. These were watered with the kitchen slops, and bore abundantly. The barrels being quite full, could be easily covered from spring frosts. It is better for the barrels not to be tight and to afford some drainage.

Rubber rings slipped over bottles in packing, ensures safety against breakage.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT
—IN—
Life Assurance!
The Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States makes the following announcement to the public:
The dissatisfaction which prevails throughout the community with regard to onerous conditions contained in life assurance contracts and the judicial decisions based thereon, together with the public indorsement of the liberal usages of this society, as shown by its largely increased business, has led the management seriously to consider whether the contract could not be simplified and certain conditions erased therefrom which have been the subject of much criticism and misconception.
After a careful examination of the experience of some of the best companies in Great Britain, who have shown a greater liberality than has been customary in this country, this society feels justified in adopting a form of contract in which the following important concessions are made to policy holders throughout the United States:
1. Policies will be made incontestible after three years from their date.
2. Each ordinary policy will provide for a definite surrender-value in paid-up-assurance, in case the policy is forfeited after three years from its date.
3. Each Tontine policy will contain a definite surrender-value in cash, in case of withdrawal at the end of the Tontine period.
4. The contract will be concisely and clearly expressed, containing only such provisions as are necessary to protect the policy-holders.
5. The above concessions will hereafter ensure to the benefit of all policies already issued and in force after three years from their dates respectively.

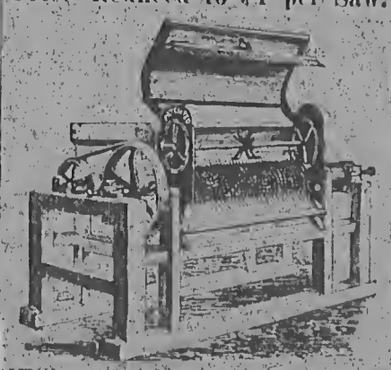
DANIEL PRATT'S IMPROVED
"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin,
PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.
Price Reduced to $4 per Saw.



THIS GIN has been in use for the past six seasons, and several recent improvements have been added. It obviates all friction at the end of the cotton box; prevents the roll from breaking, and gives a larger yield of lint from the same amount of seed than any other Gin in use. The Revolving Head lightens the draft and causes the Gin to run faster with less driving power, thus doing a great deal more work within the same time, while economizing steam or animal power, than any other Gin. The seed being ginned very easy, the length of the staple is increased, producing cotton, on this account, of a greater market value. This improved value, given by length of staple, with extra production of lint, added to increased amount of work done, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every bale ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

THE HELIOSTAT IN WAR.—Mr. H. Baden Pritchard contributes to Nature an interesting account of the use made of the heliostat by the English in their campaigns in Afghanistan and Zululand. It is claimed that this is the first application of the mirror as an implement of warfare. Heliostat stations, says Mr. Pritchard, are now established throughout the Khyber Pass, and General Sir Samuel Browne, at Jellalabad, has his orders passed up to him by flashes of light from Peshawur and. All Musjid, Lord Chelmsford has of late also been furnished with heliostats, in order to provide him with better means of communication along the Tugela. The plan of working is very simple. The mirror of the heliostat is placed so as to reflect the sun's image to a distant station, and when the instrument has once been set the clock-work arrangement suffices to maintain the mirror in its proper position. In this way the distant station in question always sees the dazzling ray reflected from the mirror, except when the latter is purposely obscured. The appearance of the bright spot or flash constitute the signals. There is no need for any superintendence when once the apparatus has been put in working order, and a train of signals in suffices for the day. The ordinary Morse alphabet supplies an intelligible code, and no one out of the line of signals can read or understand the message. As a substitute for the dot and dash, which go to make up the ordinary written Morse code, the light is shown for a short period followed by a long period signifies A, while B is represented by a long period followed by three short ones; in the case of C long, short, long, short signals are made in turn, and to form E, the letter most frequently used, the light is permitted to shine for one signal short period only. The intensity of these sunshine signals can scarcely be imagined by any one who has not seen the heliostat in working order, and the distance in which they might be made to travel, under suitable stations be provided, is practically unlimited. The appearance of non-appearance of the light can be noticed at ten or even twenty miles distance without the aid of telescope or of heliograss.

PROF. W. J. BEAL has an interesting note in the August number of the American Naturalist in regard to the sensitive lobes of the stigma in Orchidaria. A large number of plants in the orders Scrophulariaceæ, Bignoniaceæ, Gesneraceæ, Lentibulaceæ and others have similar stigmas; and in many cases—perhaps all—the lobes of the stigma have this sensitive power. The purpose of this motion is an interesting question. In some species of Mimulus it has been recorded as probably an arrangement for cross-fertilization; and Prof. Beal, in his paper, also regards the movement in Orchidaria as a suitable method for securing a cross-fertilization of the flowers. He shows that the lower lip of the stigma is much the larger, and, when touched, it bends up in a few seconds close against the upper lip of the corolla, just under an arch-like projection on existing in a flower for honey, an insect, as a honey-bee, can scarcely fail to hit the larger of the two stigmas, or lobes of the one stigmas. Further on pollen is received on the tongue or jaws of an insect. "None is likely to be left on the stigma of some flower, by the time the insect is ready to withdraw the side of the stigma which is ready to receive pollen is undergrowth." Prof. Beal does not give the number of seconds it took the bee to collect the honey from the flower, or the number of the "few" seconds it took the lobes to close. This has been found in the great activity in the theoretical reasoning in similar cases. An active bee seldom takes more than one second to finish a flower, and, with a good chance, will do two in that time, while in most cases it takes a great deal more than a few seconds to close the lobes so that it can get none of its own pollen from the returning bee. Testing a Trumpet Honeysuckle, while making this paragraph, the writer found forty-five seconds after the lobes were touched, they were not so completely closed that it was impossible to receive more pollen. A Trumpet Flower Bignonia radicans at our window was not more than half closed after thirty seconds had elapsed, though perhaps the humming-bird, which is the only many cross-fertilizer of this flower, bees boring the corolla and avoiding the stigma, may take more time than a bee would do for the work. At any rate, we see that time is an important element in the theory, and Professor Beal would render additional service to science by some stupid memory observations in this direction. In the same contribution to The Naturalist Professor Beal gives some observations on the stamens of Pyxidanthera, which are also highly interesting to students in this fascinating branch of botanical science.—Independent.

A process has been patented in Germany for retaining the aroma of ground coffee by pressing it into cakes in cast-iron molds. The cakes, like those of chocolate, are pressed by lines that they may be broken into such needed for use. The volume of the coffee is reduced to less than one third of the original bulk. Like chocolate, it is packed in tin-foil for preservation.

THE BEST REMEDY

For Diseases of the Throat and Lungs.

Diseases of the pulmonary organs are so prevalent and fatal, that a safe and reliable remedy for them is invaluable to every community. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL is such a remedy, and no other is so commonly meets the confidence of the public. It is a scientific combination of the medicinal principles and curative virtues of the finest drugs, chemically united, to insure the greatest possible efficiency and uniformity of results, which guides physicians as well as the public to use it with confidence. It is the most reliable remedy for diseases of the throat and lungs that science has produced. It strikes at the foundation of all pulmonary diseases, affording prompt and certain relief, and is adapted to patients of any age or either sex. Being very palatable, the youngest children take it without difficulty. In the treatment of ordinary Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Influenza, Clergyman's Sore Throat, Asthma, Croup, and Catarrh, the effects of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL are magical, and multitudes are annually preserved from serious illness by its timely and faithful use. It should be kept at hand in every household, for the protection it affords in sudden attacks. In Whooping-Cough and Consumption there is no other remedy so efficacious, soothing, and helpful.

The marvellous cures which AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL has effected all over the world are a sufficient guaranty that it will continue to produce the best results. An impartial trial will convince the most sceptical of its wonderful curative powers, as well as of its superiority over all other preparations for pulmonary complaints.

Eminent physicians in all parts of the country, knowing its composition, recommend AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL to invalids, and prescribe it in their practice. The test of half a century has proved its absolute certainty to cure all pulmonary complaints not already beyond the reach of human aid.

A universal catalogue of printed books is to be formed by a stupendous undertaking, but a considerable part of it is already accomplished in the manuscript catalogue of books in the British Museum, from 1787 to 1878, which represents about 2,000 volumes and contains between 2,000,000 and 3,000,000 entries. It is estimated that it will take two years to prepare this for the printer and five years to print it, and if completed and printed as a parliamentary paper, it would occupy about 2,000 pages, each containing 55 entries and cost about $700 for each of a thousand copies.

THE GENTLEMAN.—I beg your pardon, said with a smile and a touch of his hat, Harry Elmore had dashed down old man Aguinet against whom he accidentally stumbled, the cane which he had knocked from his hand. "I hope I did not hurt you. We were playing too roughly."

"Not a bit!" said the old man cheerily. "Boys will be boys, and it's best they should be. You didn't harm me."

"I'm glad to hear it," and lifting his hat again, Harry turned to join the playmates with whom he had been frolicking at the time of the accident.

"What do you raise your hat to that old fellow for?" asked his companion Charlie Gray. "He is only Giles, the tinkster."

"That makes no difference," said Harry. "The question is not whether he is a gentleman, but whether I am one; and no true gentleman will be less polite to a man because he wears a shabby coat, or hawks vegetables through the streets instead of sitting in a counting-house?" Which was right?

I beg at blessing not often enjoyed for a people to have men equal to every crisis in their history such as "the children of Issachar, that had understanding of the times to know what Israel ought to do."

24 R. A. JONES.

One of the puzzling problems of Lake Tanganyika would appear to be at last definitely settled. Lieut. Cameron, we know, asserted that it was drained by the Lukuga creek flowing to the westward; but this view was afterward combated by Mr. H. M. Stanley, who, however, admitted that the creek would probably one day form an outlet for the lake. This appears now to be the case, for Mr. E. C. Hore, the scientific member of the London Missionary Society's party recently established at Ujiji, reports that he has been informed by the Arabs there that during the last rains the waters of the lake rose so high that the grass, papyrus, reeds, etc., which clicked up the course of the Lukuga, were entirely swept away, and that the creek is now an overflowing river. One of these Arabs, indeed goes even further, and asserts that he went down the river to the Kemolando lake, which there is good reason to believe is not a lake at all but a broad part of the upper Lualaba river. News was received from Zanzibar, by last mail, that Mr. Keith Johnston, the leader of the Royal Geographical Society's East African Expedition, was contemplating a preliminary journey to Usambara, the country which is being opened out by the Universities' Mission. This journey will take about three weeks, and will give Mr. Johnston some idea of the nature of travelling in the interior of Africa.—Academy.

THE LATER PEACE.

BY PAUL H. HAYNE.

We have passed the noonday summit,
We have left the noonday heat,
And now the tall side slowly
I ascend our wearied feet!
Yet the evening airs are lightly,
And the evening shadows sweet.

Our Summer's late roses
Lay withered long ago;
And even the flowers of Autumn
Scarce keep their meek-toned glow.
Yet a pensive season woos us
Ere the time of storms and snow.

Like the tender twilight weather,
When the toil of day is done,
And we feel the loss of nobler
Our constant hearts have won—
When the vesper-pipes are plaintive,
Kissed by the dying sun.

So falls that tranquil sea on
Dear life as cold and sight,
Faith's silvery star rise bended
With memory's sunset light,
While life passes softly
Along the verge of rest.

—New York Tribune.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

MEMPHIS, July 15.—The city remains quiet. No new cases have been reported, and in a few days it is anticipated all quarantine restrictions how in force against Memphis will be removed. Norfolk, Va., took the initiative, and through cars will go to that city to night. The State board of health announces that the present quarantine regulations will be discontinued Monday if no new cases develop. Judge Ray's son is better this evening.

WASHINGTON, July 15.—A memorandum of the financial operations of the government has been issued from the treasury, showing that the reduction on the interest bearing debt from the highest, August 31, 1865, to July 1, 1879, amounted to $3,330,096,000, and the reduction in the annual interest charged, when the present funding operations are complete, August 31, 1865, will be $129,939,497.

The total debt has been reduced $29,221,—along and the reduction since March 1, 1877, is $57,153,—bonds required to be due the sum of July 14, 1870, to January 20, 1871, amounting to $1,500,000,000, on which the annual interest rate was $75,000,000. When the refunding operations are completed, amounting to $1,200,000,000, on which amount $11,200,000 arises from a thousand since March 1, 1877.

WASHINGTON, July 15.—Returns of the collections to the department of agriculture show the condition of June, which was [illegible] much, and is too July.

The figures indicating condition of cotton were the 15th figures are: North Carolina, [illegible]; South Carolina, 94, a loss of 1; Georgia, 96, a loss of 1; Florida, [illegible]; loss of 1; Alabama, no change; Mississippi, 92, a loss of 7; Louisiana, 91, a loss; Texas, 94, a gain of 1; Arkansas, 94, a gain of 6; Tennessee, 101, a gain of [illegible].

The universal complaint among [illegible] which [illegible] is the drought of June and July. The wheat, however, for the whole country is good. Reports of well worked and free from grass. Insects [illegible] not reported to a great extent.

ST. LOUIS, July 16.—At noon the thermometer stood at 97 degrees, and at four o'clock 96 degrees. Four cases of sunstroke were reported at the dispensary, but none proved fatal. Four other cases were reported and [illegible].

WASHINGTON, July 16.—Extreme heat is reported to-day in the Northern States. At Philadelphia the thermometer stood at 93, at Pittsburg after a shower, at New York it reached 102, at Baltimore, 101. In this city it stood at 102, at 2 p. m.

CINCINNATI, O., July 16.—The Evangelical Lutheran Synodical conference, of North America, met here to-day. The body is composed of one hundred and sixty ministers in the United States and Canada, about one hundred and fifty delegates were present. The conference will be in session six days.

MEMPHIS, July 16.—The only restrictions against Memphis freights now being enforced are on the Memphis and Little Rock and Mississippi Central railroads. All other roads have revoked their quarantine orders. Merchants report a rush of business, and a general feeling of hopefulness as to the future prospect. Physicians now say the yellow fever will recover. Dr. Herring, who was reported as having left the city, returned next day with his family and resumed the practice of his profession. No new cases reported for a week.

MEMPHIS, July 17.—Five new cases of fever were reported to the board of health this morning.

The cases consist of members of two families named Hester, residing under one roof, at Nos. 84 and 86 Clay street, in the southern portion of the city.

MEMPHIS, July 18.—Three new cases were reported to the board of health this afternoon. Mrs. B. Adams, at 74 Clay street; Mrs. Mollie Homerle, at 261 South street, and Miss Kate Watson, 281 South street. All reside in the immediate neighborhood of the Hester families. These make sixteen as the total number of cases reported since the ninth inst.

Fred. Eckers, whose case was reported this morning, died at one p. m., and was buried immediately afterwards. The total number of deaths from fever to date is seven, which includes the death reported this afternoon. Business is almost entirely suspended, especially among wholesale merchants. Large crowds of citizens are leaving on every train that departs from the city. The Manhattan and Emmet banks closed their doors to-day, leaving their officers and deposits to the care of the other banks. Detachments of the Chickasaw Guards and Bluff City Guards leave to night for Chickasaw, Tenn., where both companies will go into camp. Mrs. Robt Hester and one of her children are reported in a critical condition; the other members of the family are progressing favorably.

PHILADELPHIA, July 18.—The brig Shavat, of New York, arrived here this morning from Port De Paix, San Domingo, with nine men on board, seven of whom were sick with yellow fever. She had a terrible time of health, although the officers say the disease was raging at Port De Paix at the time of sailing, and she had had fever on board before. The board of health has rescinded all permits to visit and leave the quarantine station, and every precaution will be taken to prevent the spreading of the disease.

MEMPHIS, July 18.—Three new cases of yellow fever were reported to the board of health this morning. Louisa Land, Viola Godsey, two sisters, residing at 18 Bradford street, and Tom Kerrin, passenger agent of the Memphis and Carleston railroad. The illness of the Godsey sisters can be traced to infection from the Tobin family. The coming and sewerage attendant on Mrs Tobin's fatal case was pronounced yellow fever. These cases dispel the sporadic theory.

HIRAM ATHEY, son of Chief of Police Athey, is dying, although his case has not yet been reported to the board of health as yellow fever. The chief's residence is in the neighborhood of the Tobin dwelling, as is also Tom Kerrin's.

The report of the death of Fred. Eckers was premature. He is dying, but is in an extremely critical condition.

The weather is warm and sultry, with occasional showers.

The development of new cases has given fresh impetus to the exodus of citizens.

LOUIS HUMMEL, aged thirty-seven, residing on Bertrand's road, near Looney's mill, on the [illegible], has just been reported to the board of health as another new case.

MEMPHIS, July 19.—Another genuine stampede of citizens is in progress. The rush for railroad tickets this afternoon recalls the scenes of 1878. Thursday week when five thousand people left the city. The desire of all who can get so go at once, and there will be a jam on all trains leaving Memphis to-night.

The officers of the Hebrew Hospital Association to-day furnished one hundred Jewish families with the necessary funds to obtain the means of transportation to various cities. The city authorities are also sending all widows and children out of the city. Three new cases were reported to the board of health this afternoon: Mrs. Kornoelef and his two children, residing at No. 62 Clay street. These make seven as the total reported for to-day. There are several sick people in the neighborhood of Clay street, whose cases are of the most severe suspicious. Business is paralyzed and many retail grocers are closing their stores.

Fred. Eckers died this evening. Mrs. Robert Hester and Chief of Police Athey's son are both in a critical condition.

Mrs. Robert Hester died to-night at 11 o'clock. The remaining members of the family are progressing favorably.

Nearly all the small towns adjacent have enforced quarantine against this city.

WASHINGTON, July 19.—A telegram from Dr. Mitchel, at Memphis, received at the national board of health this night declares that the city is to be absolutely isolated. Applications for passes to leave the city are to be refused. Physicians are to be required to advise you after the establishment of tents

D. T. PORTER, President,
A. D. LANGSTAFF, Secretary.

ST. LOUIS, July 21.—James E. Yeaman, president of the Sanitary Council who struck work some time ago to relieve the necessities of the refugees arriving from the South, has given up the attempt for want of funds. The Refuge established by him closed Saturday night, and refugees arriving afterward had to camp out on the wharves and levees. He says effort will be made to inform the negroes in the South, who may be contemplating emigration, that they must not expect help in St. Louis.

NEW YORK, July 21.—A dispatch from Dr. R. W. Mitchell, member of the National Board of Health, now in Memphis, to J. S. Davis, of Memphis, now in this city, says: "Since nine o'clock yesterday morning nineteen cases of yellow fever have been reported, and seven deaths have occurred. Twenty-nine cases had been previously reported, and six deaths. The fever is spreading.

VICKSBURG, July 21.—A report is circulating at river towns below that there is yellow fever in Vicksburg. In reply the president of the Board of Health and the Health officers not only emphatically deny the correctness of the report, but state that the city is very healthy.

FOREIGN.

HAVANA, July 15.—The commission appointed by the national board of health of the United States, for the purpose of studying yellow fever symptoms, development and treatment in Havana, is prosecuting its work here assiduously. Much local interest is manifested in the work, and hopes of beneficent results are entertained. There were one hundred and seventeen deaths from yellow fever last week.

BRUSSELS, July 16.—Another placard threatening the King's life was found to-day posted on the walls of a church in this city.

LONDON, July 16.—Lord Cranbrook, secretary of state for India, speaking at the great Conservative gathering in Crystal Palace to-day, took a hopeful view of the future condition of trade, now so depressed. He defended the Afghan war because it had pacified a hitherto disturbed country. He said the fears believed Russia would fulfill all her engagements by the treaty of Berlin, and pleaded time for the porte to accomplish the reforms in Asiatic Turkey on account of her many difficulties.

LONDON, July 17.—A dispatch to the Post from Berlin says: The latest intelligence from Central Asia is to the effect that Chiva is preparing for war with Russia.

LONDON, July 17.—Correspondents at Peter Maritzburg say Wolsey will annex Gen. Colenso's command to Lord Chelmsford's. Port Durnford will be a base of supplies. Colenso is reported north of Umvolosi, which he crossed at once.

Complying with the requirement of Lord Chelmsford, he sent to the Zulu king the cattle demanded, and also an ivory tusk. The commander-in-chief's refusal to accept the tusk, which was the emblem of peace. Shortly after Wolsey immediately despatched it back, and sent messengers to Cetewayo, explaining the refusal of the tusk was a blunder, and asking that Dabulamanzi's cattle be sent to the frontier.

LONDON, July 18.—The Standard's Paris correspondent reports that Prince Jerome Napoleon will declare his intention of becoming a pretender to the imperial throne.

BRUSSELS, July 18.—A former clerical election agent, named Van Haeme, was arrested to-day while posting a placard threatening the life of the King. In consequence of a confession made by Van Haeme the police have made a descent on the Jesuit College.

LONDON, July 18.—Sir Michael Hicks Beach, colonial secretary, informed the house of commons, at the close of the sitting last night, that he had received a telegram dated Natal, June 30, announcing that the British forces were then within twelve miles of Ulundi, and the Zulu Marshal had received what was a message but [illegible] from Cetewayo, bearing a lock which was the sign of a message from the king, but the purport of the message does not appear. The following is the latest official information from the seat of war.

The balance of opinion seems to favor the belief of speedy peace and the submission of Cetewayo. One report, which lacks confirmation, however, even represents that King Cetewayo would come forward personally to treat for peace.

General Wolseley has instructed Colonel Lanyon not to recommence operations against Secocoeni and to retrench his expenditures.

HALIFAX N. S., July 19.—A corps of H. M. S. Bellerophon was buried to-day, having died from yellow fever contracted at Jamaica, while acting as a yacht to Capt. Wilmot Irvine.

ALBERTSTADT, July 19.—The senate to-day voted 148 to 146 on the bill relating to the installation of the communists in Paris, as amended by the deputies.

BRUSSELS, July 19.—The police have arrested the librarian of the Jesuit college, which is now under surveillance, in consequence of the confessions of Van Haeme, the former clerical agent, who was arrested for posting placards threatening the life of the King. The librarian is suspected of aiding Van Haeme to post the placards.

LONDON, July 20.—The Standard's Paris dispatch says: The Temps denies reports of a speech purporting to have been delivered by Prince Jerome Napoleon to a gathering of Bonapartists in Paris, and to have manifested his policy. The Gazette de France says: Prince Napoleon's policy is explained by the Globe's paper, in which confidence has been placed from the first.

LONDON, July 21.—The Standard's Paris dispatch says: The ministerial crisis has prolonged the period of mild harvest in France.

The Times' Vienna dispatch announces that the Turkish crisis is over, the Sultan having accepted the entire programme of the Grand Vizier.

CONSTANTINOPLE, July 21.—The Grand Vizier had a conference with the Sultan of three hours to-day, when fresh differences arose between them. The Grand Vizier is trying to induce the British and French Ambassadors to withdraw their notes with regard to the Khedive's powers.

FIELD NOTES.

ALABAMA.

MOUNT STERLING, ALA., July 17.—Last Saturday we commenced a meeting at Wamack Hill, and up to Wednesday night seventeen had joined the church. The meeting is still going on with a large number of penitents at the altar. A handsome subscription was raised to build a new church, and the brethren intend building forthwith. Crops are irregular. In some sections of the county a five weeks' drought has injured them seriously, in some places the prospect is good. Very truly yours,

W. H. WILD.

RUSSELLVILLE, ALA., July 15.—Our series of meetings just closed; fourteen conversions, nine additions to the church; sinners were made to tremble, saints to rejoice. Such a meeting has not been in our midst for years. At the quiet hour when night curtains herself and plies with stars, the stillness was broken by wheeless rumbling and footfalls of horses down turning out to bosse to hear the glad tidings. Bro. Parker, of Tuscumbia, preached nine interesting sermons, full of pathos and thought, and delivered in the Spirit of the Master. Bro. Stedham also rendered us efficient aid. Bro. Kirk, presiding elder, sequeled the exercises with a most interesting quarterly meeting, preaching excellent, scriptural sermons. This closed this happy occasion.

THOMAS F. DAVIS.

RUSSELLVILLE, ALA., July 15.—Town Creek, Spring Creek and Russellville have been blessed with good meetings recently. Bros. Melton, Nicholson and Davis are in fine spirits. There are more Advocates several from New Orleans; more Sunday-schools at work; more spirit of parsonage building; more attention paid to collections than usual. Health of the county pretty good. Crop prospects fine. God be praised.

W. R. KIRK.

FOREST HOME, ALA., July 16.—I am engaged in my legitimate Conference work as Sunday school agent and distributor of church literature. I feel grateful to my ministerial brethren for the kindness, aid and comfort given me. My success in sales have been very good, and would have been much greater but for the scarcity of money. Prospects of the church good. Revivals in many places, and we are looking for still greater triumphs. Yours truly,

J. M. SCOTT.

ALEXANDRIA, ALA., July 16.—Antiangaville circuit is a work of four appointments, on the Alabama river, between Montgomery and Selma. The spiritual state of the church will compare favorably with other charges on which they have had no revival. We are not free from demoralizing influences. Persons in the church occasionally. I expect to make "special efforts" soon, and take in a good many, to be reported at the first Quarterly Conference of next year as expelled, dropped or withdrawn. We have a good parsonage. Churches are being repaired. The preacher gets a little quarterage now and then.

NEIL GILES.

MORRIS, ALA., July 17.—The Lord is with us. The church is being spiritualized. Backsliders are being reclaimed. Sinners converted, and mourners are being converted. The church is in far better condition than it has been during the year, and is still rising on to higher plains of Christian perfection and Christian enjoyments. May God visit us during the year with a glorious revival. It is very dry needing rain. No season in nine weeks.

Yours truly,

JOHN T. WILKINS.

MISSISSIPPI.

KOSCIUSKO, MISS., July 11.—The Winona district conference was held at Doran, June 27, 29. Had a very interesting Conference enough we had no Bishop. The preaching was spiritual and pointed. Meeting protracted through the following week, resulting in about eighteen conversions, and as many additions to our church. This makes about seventy conversions in my charge, Kosciusko and Durant this year.

Yours,

R. P. MITCHELL.

BROOKHAVEN, MISS., July 11.—Rev. J. J. Cain, one of the Mississippi Annual Conference, died peacefully, of consumption, this morning at seven o'clock, at his residence in Brookhaven, Miss. A suitable obituary will be furnished for your columns.

Yours truly,

W. H. LEWIS.

BATESVILLE, MISS., July 15.—Our second quarterly meeting of Batesville circuit, North Mississippi Conference, was held last Wednesday; good meeting; had been protracted from Sunday before; six accessions to the church at Courtland; weather good; roads [illegible]; very warm and dry; seventy-three days without rain; crops will be short, but we expect a good harvest in the field of the Lord. Great excitement on account of yellow fever last week, but mostly subsided now.

J. RITCHEY.

SHADY GROVE, MISS., July 17.—Pleasant Conference bounces the lower part of Lauderdale and the upper part of Clarke county, Miss. I have organized or assisted churches; preached in other places; [illegible] members; four Sabbath-school's all doing well. Spiritual condition of the church happy. Crops prospects good for all the poor land; suffered some for rain, have plenty at this time. Financial condition very low. The stewards assessed for my support $125; paid to date, $48 75; having received but $102 last year; wife and self have to have our cows very thin this year, but it is all for the Lord. Hope for better times. Your brother in Christ,

THOS. F. STANSTONO.

CRYSTAL SPRINGS, MISS., July 18.—The Lord has blessed us with a gracious revival at Bertonton. We commenced the meeting last Sabbath and closed Thursday. The result was thirteen accessions by profession of faith and about ten backsliders reclaimed. The quarterly meeting was greatly revived. The next will meet next Saturday to hold second Sabbath meeting. Pray for us. We commence next Sabbath at Beauregard, Copiah county. Corn crop much injured by drought.

A. E. PEARSON.

MACON, MISS., July 18.—I have just returned from Crawford, where the Columbus District Conference, of the North Mississippi Conference, was held, and the Rev. S. M. Thames has closed one of the most successful meetings I ever knew of. With the help of Bro. J. W. Lowrance and others, Bro. Thames continued the religious exercises of the District Conference for ten days, and more than doubled the membership of his church. There were thirty-one added to the church, four by letter and twenty-seven by profession of faith. Most of these were grown persons, and of great worth to the church. Nine children were baptized during the meeting. Yours,

THOS. J. NEWELL.

LAUREL HILL, MISS., July 18.—The District Conference of the Meridian district met here (Lauderdale), June 27, Rev. R. J. Jones presided with his usual ability. Reports from the several charges were encouraging. Genuine revivals had taken place on several. The attendance on the Conference was the largest I have ever seen. This is the first ever held here, and the people enjoyed the visit of the brethren very much, and the members of the Conference were well pleased with the people of our little town and vicinity. We continued the meeting until Wednesday night, and received ten members into the church; valuable accessions.

D. A. LITTLE, P. C.

VICKSBURG, MISS., July 18.—Yellow fever appearing at Memphis has caused some uneasiness here, but our city is, as yet, perfectly healthy. An epidemic is impossible for lack of material. The long drought has greatly injured all agricultural interests. For weeks we have had no rain. Many of our congregation are off on their annual summer tour. The stewards make a better financial report than last year. We are hopeful.

C. H. GALLOWAY.

EAST PASCAGOULA, MISS., July 19.—On account of literary work I have been obliged to take a few weeks vacation, but shall return soon to the work with renewed zeal, trust, and stronger faith. We are building two churches, and will probably erect another before the close of the year. We have been greatly blessed in our own Christian experience, as we have labored among our people. We ask an interest in the prayers of the brethren generally.

R. L. FLOWERS, P. C.

LOUISIANA.

HOMER, LA., July 4.—The District Conference closed Saturday evening. The attendance was unusually large. The church was reconsecrated, five were added to it. Bro. Miller remained with us till Tuesday night. The meeting closed Wednesday night, having continued eight days. Wednesday was set apart to pray for rain. Thursday and Friday it came—the first season since April 23. We are thankful.

Yours truly,

J. S. PARKER.

NATCHITOCHES CIRCUIT, LA., July 9.—The Lord is greatly blessing the people on appointments of my work. Have just closed a meeting of one day and three nights at one of my appointments (Pine Grove with the success. Fourteen joined the church, and some sixteen or eighteen professed religion. We have received on the whole work, to this date, forty members. Good deal of sickness in this country. Crops generally not good. Have had a good rain in some places, and in other places scarcely any.

Yours,

B. M. BLACKER, P. C.

SUGAR TOWN CIRCUIT, July 9.—Since my last report the Lord has steadily carried on His saving work in our midst with increasing power. Last Sunday night I closed a meeting, which resulted in many conversions and thirty-one accessions. The baptismal service was one of extraordinary interest, twenty-six adults and twenty-two infants was the result. Family altars are becoming more common; Christians are leading in prayer at home and in the congregation. Our list of new converts and accessions for the year now number ninety-one.

W. W. HAIN, P. C.

MISCELLANEOUS.

HIWASSEE COLLEGE, July 11.—Great heat and drought have prevailed for a month or more. We are now having some rain. East Tennessee has made a full crops of wheat. Many refugees from Memphis have arrived the past week at our springs and hotels. No religious news will send you account of the District Conference at Murphey, N. C., next week.

Yours truly,

E. WAGNER.

Our French Mission.

MR. EDITOR:—After such a long silence from several of your readers, to an appeal made in behalf of the French mission, I feel it my duty to write again concerning the good work.

And first, I would remark as before of the disposal of contributions already sent in. In your number I asked, through your columns, for [illegible] in answer I received [illegible], so that I had a surplus $17 93 for Bibles and $5 10 for tracts, $23 03, leaving $16[illegible] in my hands. This is what I intend doing with the money.

Last Monday morning, upon returning from my Sunday's round at Lake des Cannes, I, accompanied by some of our new converts, stopped at the house of the brother who had given the land for a church. Some how it had been noised about that we were to have a meeting that morning. To my great surprise the first thing seen, on arriving at Bro. Pilie's, was a large gathering of people, and that at eight o'clock in the morning. How to get at my Board of Trustees was now the question. I had no time left to do than to seize the opportunity by the horns, and preach the gospel. I chose the very appropriate narrative of Cornelius, as scribbled with all his household, to hearken unto St. Peter, the holy apostle of the Holy Catholic Apostolical Church, unto which I assured them I belonged. Of course I showed as simply as possible how St. Peter, the Catholic apostle, refused to be adored, and quoted St. Paul at Lystra and St. John at Patmos. After the service I appointed five of the most experienced as trustees, and at their request appointed two Americans—one New Iberia, Bro. David Riggs and Bro. Henry Sabler, to aid them. They then elected their chairman and treasurer, making H. Sabler their secretary. They have collections, who will tramp the country for subscriptions. Several have promised speech, and, according to the old Wesleyan economy, they will take everything to help to build the church—fowls, eggs, butter, corn, fruit, etc. All that day I taught the French alphabet to the young men, at their own request, and that night preached again. Five more joined this time. Many would do so, were it not for fear of the priests and their relatives. Our one great hope is to the building of a church, which will serve at the same time as a school. Sixty children can be had at any time, even Roman Catholic parents will send theirs, and, of course, it is decidedly understood that no [illegible] instruction will be given also. Therefore I place the $10 97 alluded to above in the hands of the treasurer for the church, and will be very thankful if others will aid in this glorious undertaking. Will you please urge this through your columns, for it concerns the whole church.

I am thankful to say that at other points the signs are very promising, but more soon.

One incident, very pleasing to me, occurred on my last round. A lady, a new convert, brought me two beads, with cross attached, saying it was modest blood no longer. I keep it as a trophy, and should [illegible] wish for one I could send it to you, as others should.

Before closing this too long letter, one more item I wish to state. At our last District Conference, when the French Mission Committee brought up their report, one brother, a local preacher, was incredulous of it, and stated that the first half would break up the first French Methodist Society in Louisiana. I confirmed it to come on my return to Iberia Parish, and they, one and all, [illegible] with tears in their eyes, protested against such an [illegible]. However, I am happy to say that the same brother promised to help me, and, along with Bro. Manly, both have pledged their [illegible] Conference to [illegible] mission, as I expect to [illegible] likewise, for the iron is hot.

Yours truly,

W. J. THORP.

NEW IBERIA, LA., July [illegible].

Pensacola District.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR:—The camp meeting at Williams' Camp Ground was a time of refreshing. The attendance was large and the order good. The meeting which closed was the second camp meeting ever held there. The camp ground is located on the Pensacola Railroad, ten miles below Flomaton. The grounds are beautiful, and are well improved for the length of time they have been occupied. The success of the meeting this year will secure a large number of new tents. The camp ground is well located in its relative position to Milton, Pensacola, Warrington, Pollard and a large scope of country back in the interior. A large portion of the Pensacola district will feel the influence and reap the good results of the meeting just closed. The effect upon the members of the church will tell for the interest of the church. A special baptism of the Spirit rested upon the people at nearly every service. It rarely occurs that one hears more faithful preaching in the same length of time than was delivered during the five days' service suggested.

From the best information we could get there were about fifty or sixty conversions. The larger portion of these were persons who had joined the church from a sense of duty and as a means of grace, but had never realized a change of heart. One feature of the meeting was truly gratifying; viz: all the conversions were clear and bright, imparting a Christian experience that carried its own evidences and demonstrations in itself. I have never witnessed more satisfactory evidences of a genuine work of grace.

There was also a gracious work of grace poured out upon the church. But a number of the members went away without having their spiritual strength renewed. We trust that the most of them will yet awake and walk in the light of Christian experience.

The result of such a meeting upon the [illegible] churches in our towns and [illegible] for years to come. The camp meeting [illegible] the people in the [illegible] more than any [illegible] would [illegible] them. But there is a class in the church that would not like to be brought to the [illegible] experience as they now are in words. Another result of such meetings will be a [illegible] of Christian workers. We need all our [illegible] and many who have [illegible] work for Christ, but [illegible] do not know what or how to begin. At these camp meetings there are always a few [illegible] workers, and their example [illegible] others to begin, and finds an opportunity for [illegible] in such a manner [illegible].

I have [illegible] upon this [illegible] of [illegible] meetings. There [illegible] privilege of the [illegible] people. The boys are white to the harvest, and the fields are [illegible] ready to put in the sickle. May the harvest be abundant.

MR. EDITOR:—At the annual meeting of the Board of Trustees of Homer College, on the sixteenth ultimo, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted [illegible]:

THE SONG OF THE SAW.

BY MRS. L. CRARY SADLER.

Speaking of the Pearlington Saw Mill, our editor, in the ADVOCATE of June 19, says: "The song of the saw. Somebody ought to write it. There is both poetry and music in it."

Sing—Sing—Sing—
Yes, "sing the song of the saw
Sing—Sing—Sing,
Our Editor's word is law.
And he wants "somebody to write"
The "music of the song,"
And thinks the octaves could be made
Upon the logs so long.

So we'll Sing—Sing—Sing—
Do, Re, Mi, Fa, Sol, La—
To it "come on the Treble Clef,
This, this, is the song of the saw
Soprano, Tenor and Base,
We sing with a marvelous swing,
A Quartette here or a Solo there,
"Full of skill a-ring-a-ring."

We Sing—Sing—Sing,
From early morn till night,
We sing and saw and saw and sing,
And keep our faces bright;
We fight with slight foes,
But never are we afraid,
Of Ash or Pine or Cypress logs,
Or "sterner stuff" we're made.

And even Hickory we sing,
And "Grow our Bill of Fare,
If they serve "our needs" through and round
We saw and saw them "square."
With those "nasty" Knots
We feed "em like "fire,"
But the Boards and Planks and Scantlings neat,
Go to a place"

So we Sing—Sing—Sing,
As we saw—saw—saw,
Bird's eye, Knots, sing the while we work time,
Without any "pitch" to "set"
And this is "The Song of the Saw"
But now the song is near end,
I preach a lesson draw,
When stumbling "are in the way"
Sing away and saw.

Opelousas District Conference.

MR. EDITOR: Our Conference convened on the twenty-sixth of June, and adjourned on the twenty-eighth. All the pastors of the several charges were present, except Bros. Heath and Wynn. The attendance of the laymen was unusually large. Our deliberations were harmonious and profitable. The congregations at the religious services were attentive and serious.

It was ascertained that in most of the charges some degree of prosperity prevailed, and in special instances a marked improvement over that of the previous year. Most of the charges have no efficient financial plan for the support of the ministry. The Sabbath schools of long standing seem to have lost nothing in number of scholars and healthfulness, while in a few localities new ones have been organized. Our collections for home and foreign missions have not been large. These will be largely increased by the next session of our Annual Conference. Dr. Walker, Dr. Chevis, U. T. Blackshear and Bro. Vanslyke were elected delegates to our next Conference. A move was made among the laymen to establish a district camp ground between Opelousas and Washington, and a committee of thirteen was appointed to secure the land, and to make such other arrangements as will facilitate this object. If practicable, the committee expect to appoint one for the last of September or first of October. Mrs. Hays' female high school, located at Opelousas, was endorsed by the Conference and earnestly recommended to the patronage of our people throughout the district.

The French mission was carefully considered. We have a large French population within our bounds entirely destitute of the gospel, the word of God, and of schools for the education of their children. Last year Rev. J. D. Harper, our enterprising presiding elder, procured from Canada Rev. William J. Picot, a French speaking missionary, to labor in this destitute field. At the last session of our Conference Bro. Picot was received in elder's orders, and he was appointed to this difficult field in connection with New Iberia station. Bro. Picot has been engaged on his work since Conference. He is preaching almost continuously, and in many places with increasing prospects of success. He has had several conversions, and in one place has organized a society of twenty-seven members—the largest number taken into the church on any pastoral charge in the district, save one. It is due to the church to say that Bro. Picot has piety, judgment, education and tact for this work. He brings into this missionfield his experience in Hayti—a foreign mission under the fostering care of the Wesleyan Methodist. Thus far, he has succeeded beyond our most sanguine expectations. The presiding elder made application to the general mission board at its May meeting for an appropriation to this mission, but it either did not reach them in time, or else the board was compelled from a depleted treasury to pass it by in silence. This fact thrust upon our District Conference the necessity of providing for the support of Bro. Picot for the present year. In devising a plan to meet the emergencies of the case, we had to avoid any conflict with the established missionary plan of our church. Our plan is to organize a voluntary aid society in each charge wherever practicable, and for the pastor to appoint a collector, whose duty it shall be to collect funds for this mission. The pastor is to forward the amounts collected each month to the presiding elder, taking his receipt for the same. By this method we hope to be able to meet the claims thus resting upon us, until the general mission board shall take it under its care. This mission has equal claim with the German missions established in Louisiana and Texas. Any voluntary donations which our members may feel able to make will be gratefully received. Who will respond to this important work?

New Sermons Versus the Old.

ACTUAL EXPERIENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I have some sermons, not a syllable of which is written. Some I have very brief notes of; some full notes; some written in full. I practice in all ways. When I was sent to ——— I attempted to make a good impression by preaching my best sermons at the start. I ran on this line until about mid-summer, exhausting my entire stock. And now I felt for preacher and people. Every effort must be freshly minted. I could not hope that these hurriedly-thrown-together thoughts could bear comparison with those elaborately-wrought sermons of my more leisure hours, but it was the very best I could do, the pastorate demanded so much of my time. Late in the fall one of my members said to me: "You are improving very much in your preaching; in the first of the year most of your sermons were rather poor." About the only impression it made on my mind was: Your judgment is poor.

When I was sent to this place I thought I would change my tactics. I laid a plan to grow upon my people in pulpit power. I began to preach sermons newly prepared; they were not extra at all, but about the best I could do under the circumstances. I had it in my heart to drive in the pickets with this sharp-shooting, and then wheel into line some of my heavy artillery. On one occasion, early in the year, I had a fine congregation. I thought it would be a pity not to give them something good, so I mounted a siege piece. And it appeared to me that a Bishop could not have done much better.

The next day one of my stewards said to me: "I presume you were not satisfied with your effort last night." "Yes," I replied, "I was very well satisfied." He said he thought it the poorest thing I had yet given them. I could not help questioning his judgment. Soon after this I began to preach my best sermons—sermons old and tried. And I thought I preached with much liberty and ease.

One of my members, a young lady of excellent judgment, said to me half confidentially: "Should you be called upon to preach at the camp meeting, you must preach some of those sermons that you preached when you first came here."

Some time ago I was called upon to help a brother in a meeting. I selected about a dozen of my biggest sermons. But I thought I would take along something on the small order, as an entering wedge. I took, to begin with, the last sermon I had prepared, and I thought it rather common. The others are tried metal—have done good service half dozen years ago. About the time I was leaving several spoke to me in terms complimentary of the first sermon I preached, but not a word about the rest. Mr. Editor, there has been a bonfire of old sermons at this parsonage within the last few days. I think if I would stick close to my old sermons for a few years that the Bishop could hardly get a presiding elder to take me at any price. I think I would have to locate, take some nominal work, an agency, a fifth-wheel arrangement. For I am persuaded I would not be acceptable anywhere.

Tradition.

MR. EDITOR: Having on my travels as a Methodist preacher met with some intelligent people who were once members of some evangelical church, but who are now devotees of Romanism, my mind at once inquired for the origin or cause of this change, and the answer given in nearly every case hinged upon the purity and unchangeableness of the said church's doctrines. In a word, they believed her teachings to be immutable. Now, in an age of literature and experience, this seems very strange. Yes, but to use an old phrase, Truth in this instance is stranger than fiction. And it is only a repetition of the old story, passing a repugnance to the light of investigation. The mind's eye becomes dazzled by the phosphorous invented by arrogant ecclesiastics. Now can we, as rational creatures, afford to receive the bare assertion of any man or church without a proper amount of investigation? The head of the Romanish Church says: Yes, on spiritual things I am infallible, therefore you must believe. Yet, strange to say, the Apostle Paul—one who possessed the power to work miracles, and who made one of the "true succession links"—gives the church this advice: Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after "the tradition of men," after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ.—Colossians ii, 8.

Well, surely, the Bible has no need to hide its head under the all covering clouds of mere assertion. No, its language is ever: Come and let us reason together. But can this same tradition which has been canonized and often placed above the Bible stand the test of honest and impartial examination? Far from it. The workings of it are like the views of a kaleidoscope—"a thing of many forms and colors." One Pope teaching the doctrines of Arian, and his successor cursing him for doing so. Another announces from the sacred chair of Peter that whosoever assumes the title of Universal Bishop is a schismatic and an anti-Christ. But, what of that? Nothing, for his followers just touched the kaleidoscope of tradition with their anointed fingers, and, behold! we have a throne and a triple crowned spiritual king! What wonderful magicians these same Popes are, for by one pass of the hand they can annihilate the teachings of centuries. Omnipotent in their claims, and omnific in their works, all things to them are possible. The history of the past fully corroborates these truths. But why stretch out into the past, when the clear-shining Now envelops us as a shroud, having for its warp experience and its filing truth? From whence sprung the doctrine of the Pope's infallibility? Is it a child of the past or of the present? It was brought to life at the last Ecumenical Council, Pius the Ninth being its father. If you doubt this statement, turn to her own books published anterior to the proclamation of the said Council. Again, was it not taught publicly from her pulpits for centuries, that before any doctrine could become binding it should receive a majority of the legal voters' sanction present at the Council? If this was so, how can they account for the change? It will not do for them to say that these men had the right to transfer their portion of the Holy Spirit to the Pontiff. For by so doing they come in contact with the teachings of St. Paul, who plainly teaches that God gives His Holy Spirit to every man severally, as He will. And whenever that man receives His gift, who can take it from him? To whom can he give it? I know of but One who can take it from him, and that is the bestower—God. I know of but one way by which he can lose his right of exercising the functions of his office—that is, by sinning, because God cannot dwell where sin reigns. And if the man is left without the inward dwelling of the Holy Spirit, he is shorn of his authority. For God and the devil cannot eat at the same table. Again, Paul says, in his Epistle to the Corinthians, that it takes all the members to make one body or church. Yet the Pope claims to be not only "the head," but "all of it," asking no advice or help from any. But, enough for the present. If you will allow me the privilege, I will write a few more lines on this subject.

PATRICK GRAYS.

Camp Ground Secured.

MR. EDITOR: I wish to say, through the ADVOCATE, that the land on which we are to have our camp meeting—at Smith's Mills—has been secured by proper legal documents for a permanent camp ground. So there is no danger of "losing labor or time" by building there. Lumber can be laid down on the ground for $5 per thousand feet, to all who wish to build permanent or temporary tents.

We have already built a large arbor eighty feet square, and a good restaurant to take care of those who do not go there prepared to take care of themselves. Tents will go up next week, and the camp meeting will soon be on hand, and we invite, again, all who wish to secure a place to spend several weeks' healthful recreation, with the use of excellent mineral waters, and enjoy the benefit of a camp meeting, to come along and build your tents immediately, and move into them, or you can hire them built immediately at cheap rates.

Preachers are cordially invited to be on hand, if practicable, on the thirty first of July, the day the meeting begins. The camp ground is on the Mobile and Ohio railroad, four miles above State Line, in Wayne county, Miss. Reduced rates on trains.

WM. B. HINES.

WAYNESBORO, MISS., July 12, 1879.

Rev. Hilliard J. Hunter.

MR. EDITOR: I have just received a letter from Bro. B. F. Anderson, West Point, Ga., in relation to the death of Hilliard J. Hunter, whose obituary recently appeared in the ADVOCATE.

He died of congestion on December 24, 1878, and was buried at Harmony Church, Troup county, Ga. He had been in poor health for several years, but confined to his bed but a few days before he died. A few days before his death he called the family and his friends around his bed, and asked them for any "message they might wish to send their friends in heaven," saying "he was going soon, and would deliver them." He selected the following text for his funeral sermon: "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints" which was preached by the Rev. J. W. Lee, of the Georgia Conference. During his sickness he was constantly exclaiming: "Thank God, I'll soon be in glory."

The brother says: "Uncle Hunter was superintendent of the Sabbath-school near where he lived, and that but a short time before his death he had a protracted meeting at the church, during which meeting there were twenty-two conversions, and that most of the members of his Sabbath school, who were old enough, became members of the church. How characteristic of the man, though worn out, he died in harness, and verily his works do follow him. Truly yours,

JOHN R. KING.

Tribute to Rev. H. H. Montgomery.

MR. EDITOR: The within resolutions were drawn up by me, and adopted by the second Quarterly Conference of the Sharon circuit, in token of respect to the memory of Bro. H. H. Montgomery, our beloved pastor of the Sharon circuit:

Whereas, By the inscrutable will of our Heavenly Father our beloved brother and pastor has been removed from our midst by the hand of death; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we bow with meekness and humility before Him who is too wise to err, and too good to afflict for naught.

Resolved, That as an earnest, faithful and logical preacher, Sharon circuit has sustained a loss irreparable.

Resolved, That as a counselor, a theologian, and one versed in church polity, H. H. Montgomery had but few equals, and in his death the Methodist Episcopal Church, South has sustained a great loss.

Resolved, That we tender to his bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy, and pray that Heaven's blessings may rest upon them.

W. CALLOWAY.

From the Work.

ATLANTA, LOUISIANA.

MR. EDITOR: On Sunday night of the fourth Sabbath I closed a meeting at Dry Creek, which resulted in seven accessions, and, besides, the church—the whole membership—was powerfully built up. On Monday morning I left for my home in this place. As I passed through Spring Creek church I found, to my great joy, that Bro. Cooper has had gracious revival seasons all over his circuit, having taken it into the church.

On Saturday and Sunday last, assisted by Bros. Collier and Atwood, I held a meeting in this place, which will fall behind none in point of interest, as well as good accomplished. The Sabbath-school at this place is a living power. On Sabbath morning, according to previous arrangement, they had a procession. The attendance was very large. The red ribbons, songs and speeches by the different classes showed that no pains has been spared to make this school a great power in the hands of God in bringing up the children in the way they should go, and here, as elsewhere, more Sabbath school scholars are being taken out of their classes into the church than I have ever known. The sacramental service here on Sunday night will scarcely ever be forgotten by any present. Three were added to the church. Besides, Bro. Godfrey, P. C., had just closed a meeting here, which resulted in 10 accessions. This revival is more after the apostolic pattern than any I have ever witnessed, that is to say, "they continue steadfast in the apostle's doctrine (of the baptism of the Holy Ghost) and fellowship, and breaking of bread, and in prayers," and praising God, and having favor with all people. And, glory to God, the Lord does add souls to the church at every meeting. Holiness, by which I mean an inward and outward conformity to the law of Christ, is now the popular theme in the pulpit and out of it, and victory over sin now is sought as the rightful experience of all entirely consecrated souls. Oh! that this work may spread until it shall girdle the globe, and, rising in brightness, become blended with the glories on high, and earth, fully redeemed, become one vast adoring assembly.

TEMPERANCE.—Temperance people have cause to rejoice over a recent action of Congress. The House appointed a special committee of nine to which all petitions relating to the liquor traffic will be referred. The committee has also under consideration a commission to take testimony, and to investigate the subject of temperance in general. Such a commission ought certainly to be appointed, since accurate knowledge must be the basis of all useful action. Its investigations could not fail to disclose to the public the necessity of congressional action in different ways to restrain the evils which are so widespread and prevalent as to amount to a national scourge.—Advance.

Obituaries.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as "mourn their loss" etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

REV. JOHN KNOX WARD died at his home in Jackson county, Miss., June 9, 1879, in his sixty second year.

Bro. Ward was an humble, good man, who, though little known, was dear and cherished to all that knew him, and may we not confidently affirm, was loved and esteemed by Him who knew all hearts, as well as their secrets. He was for an effort of faith. It was his mission, to the poor, and to the rearing of a country where he had very limited educational advantages, and yet we cannot, as he was an illiterate man. He was but more intelligent than the circumstances of his life would warrant us in expecting to make him. He was a man of few books. The Bible and our standard theological works were in his text books, and he studied them well, closely and successfully. As a preacher he was earnest, clear, plain, simple in his style and forcible in his application. His sermons were thoughtful, and he was followed to the end and impressed many unregenerate on. As a Christian he did not exist a trophy to call attention to himself, but in his quiet, unobtrusive life told the story of his fidelity to Christ. When we, in the light of good sense, simple piety, earnest zeal, and abiding holiness as rendered by him, we have the desire of that the Psalmist says is to be a little lower than the angels, and that "is crowned with glory and honor." Converted in early life, and devoting all his beaming days, and mind, and strength to the Master's cause, he wielded an influence for Christ that will never be fully known until it is revealed in eternity. He spent his life in the work of ministry with the exception of one year, when he served in the army, and was chaplain of Mississippi Grand Bay Mission, Alabama Conference. He was ordained a deacon by Bishop Paine in Mobile, December 8, 1861. He was afterwards elected to elder's orders by the Mobile Conference, but declined ordination. He said after mature consideration he felt that as a local preacher, he could do more good. He was a local preacher, however, for many years, and was a good one also.

When he came to die he was ready. He said to the writer, when to the church he could not go for his bodily infirmities, that he had exhausted himself in his Master's work, and was willing to go. He appointed the funeral discourse, and then he left. That he was ready was manifest, for he left behind him the testimony of his Redeemer. As he approached the river of death he exclaimed, "I have the victory, I have the victory, I have the victory!" and then he was gone. He was buried in the presence of a large concourse of people, who had come to pay the last tribute of respect to the memory of the departed. He was a man of peace, and he died in peace. He was a man of prayer, and he died in prayer. He was a man of faith, and he died in faith. He was a man of hope, and he died in hope. He was a man of love, and he died in love. He was a man of God, and he died in God. He was a man of Christ, and he died in Christ. He was a man of the Spirit, and he died in the Spirit. He was a man of the Word, and he died in the Word. He was a man of the Church, and he died in the Church. He was a man of the world, and he died in the world. He was a man of the flesh, and he died in the flesh. He was a man of the soul, and he died in the soul. He was a man of the body, and he died in the body. He was a man of the mind, and he died in the mind. He was a man of the heart, and he died in the heart. He was a man of the will, and he died in the will. He was a man of the conscience, and he died in the conscience. He was a man of the memory, and he died in the memory. He was a man of the imagination, and he died in the imagination. He was a man of the reason, and he died in the reason. He was a man of the judgment, and he died in the judgment. He was a man of the understanding, and he died in the understanding. He was a man of the wisdom, and he died in the wisdom. He was a man of the knowledge, and he died in the knowledge. He was a man of the truth, and he died in the truth. He was a man of the light, and he died in the light. He was a man of the life, and he died in the life. He was a man of the death, and he died in the death. He was a man of the resurrection, and he died in the resurrection. He was a man of the glory, and he died in the glory. He was a man of the heaven, and he died in the heaven. He was a man of the God, and he died in the God. THE OLD MAN'S DREAM.

BY OLIVER W. HOLMES.

O, for one hour of youthful joy,
Give back my twentieth spring;
I'd rather laugh a bright-haired boy,
Than reign a gray-beard king.

Off with the wrinkled spoils of age,
Away with learning's crown;
Tear out life's wisdom-written page,
And dash its trophies down.

One moment let my life-blood stream
From boyhood's fount of flame;
Give me one giddy reeling dream,
Of life, all love and fame.

My listening angel heard the prayer,
And calmly smiling, said:
"If but one hour with thee I share,
Thy hasty wish hath sped.

But is there nothing in the track
To bid thee fondly stay,
While the swift seasons hurry back
To find the wished-for day?"

Ah, treacherous! of won ton kind,
Without thee what were life?
One bliss I cannot leave behind:
I'll take my precious wife.

The angel took a sapphire pen,
And wrote in rainbow dew,
The man would be a boy again,
And be a husband, too."

And is there nothing left unsaid,
Before the change appears?
Remember all the gifts have shed
With the revolving years."

"Yes: for memory would recall
My fond, paternal joys;
I could not bear to leave them all
I'll take—my girls—and boys."

The smiling angel dropped his pen—
"Why this will never do;
The dream would be a tedious one,
To make them young as you."

Again the enraptured visions rose,
And memory wrote the name,
And added one to make it close,
To please the grateful dames.

Which Way Shall We Look.

The eye is the index of the soul; and it should be a matter of holy propriety with us not to commit the contradiction of professing to "set our affections on things above," and, at the same time, of fixing our eyes upon the things of earth. Man was created with his face toward the sky. According to its derivation, the Greek word for "man" implies a countenance turned upward. And in his original, unfallen condition such was his condition. He was in communion with heaven, and his gaze was naturally directed thither. After sin entered, and death by sin, we find man with his "countenance fallen," and his face averted from God.

It is not strange, therefore, that the unregenerated man, with no partnership in the eternal life, should not be able to lift his eye higher than the tomb, with its dust and darkness, and that, as by an unconscious instinct, he should make death the goal toward which he looks forward. So true is this that we hear it asserted as a popular axiom in the world that "death is the only certainty." If the unconverted man has any fear about his soul it is in connection with death, and that to which death may open; if he has any vague hope of a better life it is through the gate of death that he looks to get a glimpse of it; if he hopes for annihilation, to end his trials and to drown his sorrows, it is death that he looks to bring him this "benign oblivion," this "eternal sleep." Thus death is emphatically the goal of the natural man, and the only object beyond life that can fasten and hold his gaze.

But after that we have been "begotten again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead," how all this is changed! Not only have we a new life, but a new outlook. Resurrection has taken the place of death, and we now hear a voice saying: "If ye, then, be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God" (Col. iii, 1.) The eye is lifted to the throne now simply because Christ, who is our life, is on the throne; instead of thinking of the grave, and looking for death, we now begin thinking of Him who is "the Resurrection and the Life," and "looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour, Jesus Christ."

So it is significant that in the first glimpse we get of the church in the Acts of the Apostles we find them gazing up into heaven," an attitude which was by no means rebuked by the "men in white apparel," as superficial readers have sometimes supposed, but encouraged and confirmed by a solemn reiteration of the oft-repeated promise of Christ: "This same Jesus, who is taken up from heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven." That first attitude of the church became the permanent attitude; through all the apostolic age we find that the disciples "looking steadfastly toward heaven"—in other words, Christ's living person on the throne became henceforth the object of faith; and His personal return in glory the object of hope.

How happens it, then, that the countenances of so many Christians have fallen again; and that they have taken off their eyes from the coming of Christ in glory, and fixed them upon the coming of death in shame and corruption? Does it not indicate a sad and blind return to carnal hopes and habits? We question not, of course, the blessedness into which death introduces the believer, since it is "to depart and be with Christ;" "to be absent from the body and to be present with the Lord." But the simple fact is that the New Testament nowhere sets death before us as the object of our hope and expectation, but the personal coming of Christ. As though God would mercifully hold our eyes off from contemplation of that last enemy, he has in the gospel completely filled the foreground of vision with promises and hopes and descriptions of the glorious appearing of the Lord Jesus.

Hence the exhortations to prepare for death, to be ready for the summons of the grave, which we so often hear, are foreign to the gospel, and tend to draw our eyes from that upward gaze which Christ's resurrection gave to them, and to fix them on what is humiliating and corruptible. The saying of Emerson is worthy of a more exalted meaning than he could have possibly attached to it—"Hitch your wagon to a star." Yes, Christian, fasten your life, your hope, your expectation, to "the bright and morning star," that, in waiting for its rising, you yourself may be raised into constant watchfulness and exalted joy.

Notice how this uplook is everywhere enjoined in Scripture; and how the personal appearing of Christ, and not death, is made the constant motive to faithful service and holy living! Are we exhorted to sanctification? This is the end of our striving: "And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Thess. v, 23.) Are we exhorted to Christian patience? This is the motive: "Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts; for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh" (James v, 8.) Are we enjoined to purity of life? This is the attitude: "Teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world; looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ" (Titus ii, 12-13.) Is the end of conversion set before us? This is the statement: "Ye turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God; and to wait for His Son from heaven" (1 Thess. i, 9.) Are we striving for the crown, and the rewards of discipleship? This is the eye to which we are to look for their realization: "A crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me in that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love His appearing" (2 Tim. iv, 8.) "Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be" (Rev. xxii, 12.) Are we commended for our fidelity? This is the ground: "So that ye come behind in no gift; waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ," (1 Cor. i, 7.)

Thus the promise of Christ's coming is made the pole-star of our hope, and the great inspiring motive to all Christian service. The Christian should not forget this. There is everything in this present evil world to draw our gaze earthward. The habit of the multitude is to look downward—not to look up; the seeker for gain, the devotee of pleasure, the delver for gold, all have their eyes toward the earth. It is not like these, O believer: "Look up and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh."—Rev. A. J. Gordon, D. D., in the Watchword.

Inquiring Saints.

I was asked the other day whether I had had any recent meetings for inquirers. I replied that I had not—that there were few inquiring sinners in the congregation; and I judged the reason to be that there were few inquiring saints. "Inquiring saints! that is a new phrase. We always supposed that inquiring belonged exclusively to sinners." But it is not so. Do we not read in Ezek. xxxvi, 37: "Thus saith the Lord God; I will yet for this be inquired of by the house of Israel to do it for them." By the house of Israel—that is, by his people. You see that God requires and expects his covenanted people to inquire.

It is true that saints do not make the same inquiry that sinners do. The latter ask what they must do to be saved, whereas the inquiry of Christians is: "Will thou not revive us again?" It is a blessed state of things when the people of God are inquiring. It is good for themselves, and it has a most benign influence on others. When the people of God inquire, presently the impenitent begin to inquire. That question, "Will thou not revive us?" is soon followed by the other, "What must I do to be saved?" Yes, when saints become anxious, it is not long ere sinners become anxious. The inquiry of three thousand on the day of Pentecost, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" was preceded by the inquiry of the one hundred and twenty, who "all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication." Generally, I suppose, that is the order. First saints inquire, and then sinners; and whenever, in any congregation, religious matters are in a languishing condition, one principal reason of it is that the saints are not inquiring. They do not attend their inquiry-meetings appointed for them.

The saints' inquiry meeting is the prayer meeting. To that Christians meet together to inquire of the Lord "to do it for them"—that is, to fulfill the promise about the new heart and the new spirit, of which he had been speaking. Now, when this meeting is crowded and interesting—when the inquiry among Christians is general, and earnest and importunate—the sinners' inquiry-meeting usually becomes crowded and interesting.

O, that I could make my voice to be heard by all the dear people of God on this subject! I would say, You wonder and lament that sinners do not inquire; but are you inquiring? You wonder that they do not feel; but do you feel? Can you expect a heart of stone to feel, when a heart of flesh does not? You are surprised that sinners can sleep. It is because you sleep alongside of them. Do you but awake, and bestir yourselves, and look up and cry to God, and you will see how soon they will begin to be roused, and to look about them, and to ask the meaning of your solicitude. O, that the saints would but inquire!—R., in the Christian.

If you make up your mind to serve Satan do not pretend to serve God; and if you serve God, serve Him with all your heart.

Religious Intelligence.

—Although the official record of the recent London yearly meeting of the Society of Friends, and the tabular statement of the number of members and adherents, will not for some weeks be issued, yet from semi-official sources there is information showing the chief business transacted. The meeting was largely attended by representatives from the various parts of the kingdom, and from the United States. From the tabular statement it appears that during last year there were admitted into the society 461 persons, and after deducting the losses by death, removal and other causes, an increase of 107 during the year was shown. In the number of adherents not in membership there is an increase of 197 during the year. The deaths of members were 235—the smallest death-rate for some years. During the meeting brief memoirs of deceased members of note were read, including those of Messrs. W. Ball, of Kendal, R. Fry, of Bristol, T. Whitwell and others. From lengthy discussions as to the state of the society it appears that in the large towns its numbers are increasing, but that in many agricultural districts they are declining; this falling off being variously attributed to the increasing influence of the country clergy, to the transference of friends from rural parts to the towns and from agriculture to commerce, as well as to the need for more varied organizations. The peace question, it appeared, had claimed considerable interest during the year. There had been over 150,000 copies of an appeal on war circulated gratuitously at home and abroad, and the standing committee of the society had memorialized the Cabinet on the Afghanistan war. A minute recording the protest of the body against the course pursued by our rulers with regard to the war now devastating South Africa was agreed to, and will shortly be published. A lengthy report from a committee which had visited one of the co-ordinate meetings in the United States was read, and it appeared from it that some difference of opinion in regard to practice had caused a slight separation in one of the branches of the society there, but this, it was hoped, would be removed. A series of subsidiary meetings in regard to the schools of the society and to its home and foreign mission work were held, and the general tenor of the reports from these was believed to be satisfactory. The school report showed that 1,000 children were being educated at the public schools. Although there were some who expressed the fear that in regard to minor points of belief the society was rather retrograding, yet the prevailing impression in the addresses was that of a feeling that showed but sure progress was being made by it, and that some of the tenets at once held almost exclusively are increasingly appreciated by various sections of the church; while, although the increase in its membership is comparatively small—about seven per cent. for the year—there is very greatly enlarged activity in its various organizations, and the mission stations in Madagascar, India and Syria have, on the whole, progressed satisfactorily.

THE BURIAL QUESTION IN BELGIUM.—The Brussels correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette writes: A new incident with regard to the burial question, which has agitated Belgium this long time, has occurred. The Jews, whose ceremonial law with regard to the necessity of a separate cemetery for themselves is strict, and who at Brussels would have been obliged to have their dead buried in the communal cemetery, had obtained the concession of a part of the communal cemetery at Nivelles from the communal council there for their own exclusive use. By a Royal decree, the decision of the communal council granting this concession has been annulled as contrary to section ten of the decree of the twenty-third of Prairial, Year XII., which permits concessions only in favor of private persons, of their relatives, or successors, but not to associations of persons professing the same religion or their administrations, such as the Jewish Consistory. The Jews will, therefore, have to submit to the existing law, which permits the consecration of each grave and the other religious rites according to the religion of the person to be buried in it, but not the reservation of part of the cemetery for the special use of a religious sect. The Catholics demand, as the Jews do, the partition of the cemetery according to the various religions creeds, the free thinkers to be put, as it is vulgarly called, into the dogs' holes—but they have to be satisfied with the existing law, though they continue to cry out against it as a great grievance.

PROTESTANTISM IN MEXICO.—The Rev. Dr. Chauncey Riley was consecrated Bishop of the "Church of Jesus," in Mexico, at Pittsburgh, June 21, by the Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church. This church is the only Protestant Church in Mexico, and was organized in 1857 by Aguilar, a former Roman Catholic priest, and Hernandez, a lay member of the same communion. Their purpose was to establish a church free from Romish superstitions and errors, and they took the Protestant Episcopal Church of this country as a model. They secured government protection, and in 1868 called the Rev. Dr. Riley to their assistance. He had been unconsciously preparing himself for the work by close study of Mexican affairs, and by pastoral duties in the Spanish Episcopal Church in this city. Dr. Riley accepted the call, and his zeal and energy gave the "Church of Jesus" such a powerful impulse that it has grown with wonderful rapidity under his management. It has now fifty-seven congregations, nine schools, 3,500 communicants and a large attendance of interested worshipers. Persecution has not been wanting to the new church, and several of its ministers have died for their faith, but its growth has been uninterrupted. In 1874 the church placed itself under the charge of the Protestant Episcopal bishops of this country, who have managed its affairs since that time by a committee of their body. By the consecration of Bishop Riley, it becomes an independent organization, and will doubtless carry on the work of Evangelization with increasing ardor and success.

THE OLD CATHOLIC CHURCH.—The fifth synod of the Christian Catholic Church of Switzerland (Old Catholic) was held at Solothurn, June 5. Bishop Herzog spoke at considerable length on the friendly attitude assumed by the Church of England at the Lambeth Conference, and resolutions were adopted by the synod thanking the Bishops of the English and American Churches who attended the Conference, and expressing belief that the Christian Catholic Church stands, in essentials, on the same foundation with the Anglo-American Church. The Swiss Catholics have fifty-six parishes and seventy-two priests in active work. Eleven students are preparing for its ministry, and 4,159 children are under its instruction in religious matters. Dr. Linder presided over a meeting of the Old Catholic Synod, at Vienna, June 5, which resolved to bring before the next synod the following propositions for reform: The laity to participate in church government, confession to be no longer compulsory, celibacy of priests not to be required, the vernacular to be used in all religious services, fasting to be voluntary, holidays to be dispensed with in many cases, prayers and masses to be free. It was also resolved to petition the Austrian Parliament for pecuniary assistance.

ENGLISH OPPOSITION TO SECTARIAN GRANTS.—The Central Nonconformist Committee of England have addressed a circular to the Nonconformist Churches of Great Britain, calling attention to the "University Education Bill" for Ireland now before Parliament. The bill purports to be an act "to make better provision for university education in Ireland," but the committee declare that its real object is to secure a million and a half pounds sterling for the support of colleges that will be almost exclusively Roman Catholic. This amount will be taken from funds accruing from the disestablishment of the Irish Church. No Nonconformist body, not even the Church of England, would dare to ask such a subsidy from the government. The committee of the Congregational Union and the General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland have resolved to petition against the bill, and meetings of all the leading Nonconformist denominations have passed strong resolutions against its adoption. It is doubtful if, in the face of so strong an expression of public sentiment, the bill can be carried through.

—The Synod of the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland met in the Free Assembly Hall, Edinburgh, on May 5. Rev. Dr. George Jeffrey, clerk of the Glasgow Presbytery, and a minister of forty years' standing, was chosen moderator by acclamation. The report on the general statistics of the church, stated that the total number of congregations was 511 and of members in full communion 175,036, being an increase of 10 congregations and about 1,500 members during the past year. The total income of the church for 1878 was £367,388 or £11,000 less than was received in 1877. During the session Rev. David Macrae, of Greenock, moved: "That in regard to the ultimate penalty of sin, the church does not hold herself bound to the interpretation of the Westminster Confession as to what the scriptures say on this subject." The motion although duly seconded, fell to the ground.

—A revival of great power has been in progress in the Fifteenth Street Presbyterian Church, in the city of Washington—the only Presbyterian church in that city for the use of the colored people. On the 11th of May ninety persons were admitted to the Church.

—Missionary effort would appear to have paid in Burmah. There are at the present time 350 Christian churches in that country, and nine-tenths of the work of evangelization being done is in the hands of native teachers.

—Mr. L. B. Armstrong, the British missionary at Barcelona, Spain, in a letter to Word and Work, says tersely: "Wherever in Spain the Gospel, God's Gospel, as he gave it, grand, glorious, free, is preached, there do souls accept it and are converted by it."

—Three centuries after the advent of Christ there were about 1,000,000 Christians, and at the end of the sixth century there were about double that number. The gain in the United States alone during the last twenty-five years is estimated to have equaled the result of all these centuries.

—Three bishops were consecrated for the Reformed Episcopal Church, in July, in Chicago; they were: Revs. J. A. Latane, O. E. Stevens and A. Richardson, the first two for the South and the third for England and Ireland.

—Bishop Scarborough, of New Jersey, has received from a friend of the Protestant Episcopal Church, who did not wish to be known, the sum of $8,000 to be appropriated to the endowment fund for aged and infirm clergy.

—M. de Pressense, in France, has been appointed a member of the commission of popular libraries, and President Grevy lately said that he considered the Protestant Church the mother of democracy in modern times.

—Over thirty-five years ago not a Protestant missionary was living within the bounds of the Chinese Empire. Now there are 40,000 Chinese Christians, 13,000 of whom are communicants.

—The Christian Churches in India, China and Japan, have a membership of about 400,000 persons. About 200,000 children are securing a Christian education in these countries.

SHELLING PEAS.

BY EDGAR FAWCETT.

Oh, if I were rich enough but for a day,
I would leave the city, I would wander far away,
All my heart is longing for the meadows and the trees;
Heigh ho! and heigh ho! while I shell my peas.

Ah, the pleasures you may get are few and very slight,
If you're a little kitchen maid, to drudge from morn till night.
Cook is sometimes gentle, but to-day she's hard to please;
Heigh ho! and heigh ho! I'd as dreary, shelling peas.

Here beside the window many people pass me by Nearly all appear, at least, far happier than I.
There's a little dainty lassie, strolling at her ease;
Heigh ho! and heigh ho! but I must shell my peas.

Yonder in her handsome coach, I see a lady pass;
Perhaps the coach will bear her where the shiny stars the grass
Would that I were child'ed here, to nestle on her knees.
Heigh ho! and heigh ho! and cease from shelling peas.

Would that she might carry me where I might hear the birds
Rather louder, and not see white aprons, caps and heads
From a mile these crops and weeds I'm clearing
Heigh ho! and heigh ho! I'm tired of shelling peas.

Well, some day I'll be a lady, and ride in my carriage, and have my own way in everything, and not shell peas unless I like. Yes, I will.

Ciphers.

The political investigations of the past two years have brought to light many of the dispatches that passed between party managers before and after the presidential election of 1876. Some of these dispatches sent by members of both political parties were "in cipher." That is, they were written in such a way that only the sender and the receiver could know their meaning, that being obtained by the use of a "key."

The custom of sending secret dispatches is as old as civilization itself. The orders and reports to and from generals in the field in the time of Greek and Roman supremacy were frequently written in such a way that only the sender and receiver could understand them. This was sometimes accomplished by winding a strip of parchment around a rod of a certain size, writing the dispatch upon it, and afterwards sending the strip. The receiver had a rod of the same size, and by winding the dispatch about it he could read the dispatch.

This was a very simple device, and was not properly a cipher, but it illustrates how ancient is the practice of writing in such a way that an enemy could not understand what was written.

In a true cipher either words are transposed, or words or numbers are substituted for words, or letters are substituted for other letters, or there is a combination of these systems.

The simplest cipher is where the letters are changed. Suppose, for example, each letter used in a cipher dispatch really represents the letter before it in the alphabet. Then when b occurs it means a, c means b and so on. If one wished to send us a message the words—

"The weather is stormy" he would write, "Uif wfbuifs tupsnz."

This cipher may be varied in all sorts of ways, but nothing is easier than to discover the key to it. If can be understood to mean a, b then means b, c means c and so on. O the order is reversed; stands for a for b, x for c, w for d, and so on.

If a page of writing in such a cipher is presented, it is easy to find what letter stands for e, because that is the most common. Then it would not take long to find the word the, and in this way the whole key may be quickly discovered.

There are ways, however, of changing the letters, so that the task of finding the key for translation is much more difficult. The key changes with each word or each line of writing. Nevertheless, it is said that there is no possible letter cipher that may not be deciphered if only enough writing in cipher is furnished. Frequent changes of system make it far more difficult to discover the meaning.

Word ciphers, if well constructed, cannot be deciphered except by chance. Both the sender and the receiver are furnished with a "code," or list of word changes. A short word may stand for a long one, a verb for a noun, an adjective for a preposition.

Under this system a person who meant to inform another that "A calf ate a mouse," might write, "Tom celery excellent tom election;" and anybody who had reams of paper covered with matter written in that cipher, might study upon it for centuries without finding out more than a small part of the code.

There was, however, a modification of this system in use in 1876. In some of the political dispatches. If one wished to write "sensible," he turned to a certain dictionary and found that word. If it stood twentieth on the page where it was found, he turned back two leaves in the dictionary and used the twentieth word on that page. Of course when a copy of the right dictionary was found, all the dispatches could be read.

Another cipher in use was one where the words were transposed. Suppose we had this sentence to turn into cipher: "They gave this as a reason for not speaking truly." Now let us transpose these ten words: "This for speaking gave not as truly as they reason." The words are taken in a particular order. If they be numbered in the sentence as it should be, it will be seen that the cipher takes them in the following order: 3, 7, 9, 2, 8, 5, 10, 4, 1, 6.

To pick out the meaning of a transposed sentence and rearrange the words in their true order, is much more difficult than it seems to be, but it is not impossible by any means. Patience and study will accomplish it. The construction and deciphering of ciphers of various kinds affords recreation, and the knowledge of both arts is by no means useless.—Youth's Companion.

A Chip that Could Talk.

The following anecdote was related by John Williams the martyr missionary to the South Sea Islands. He was engaged one day hewing timber for a chapel, surrounded by many wondering natives:

"As I had come to the work one morning without my square," he says, "I took up a chip, and with a piece of charcoal wrote upon it a request that Mrs. Williams would send me that article. I called a chief, and said to him:

"'Friend, take this; go to our house and give it to Mrs. Williams.'

"He was a singular looking man, remarkably quick in his movements, and had been a great warrior; but in one of his battles he had lost an eye. Giving me an inexpressible look with the other, he said:

"'Take that! She will call me a fool and scold me if I carry a chip to her.'

"'No,' I replied, 'she will not take it, and go immediately; I am in haste.'

"He took it from me and asked, 'What must I say?'

"I replied, 'You have nothing to say; the chip will say all I wish.' With a look of astonishment and contempt, he held the piece of wood, and said:

"'How can this speak? Has it a mouth?' I desired him to take it immediately, and not spend so much time in talking about it.

On arriving at the house, he gave the chip to Mrs. Williams, who read it, threw it away, and went to the cocoa-nut shell, whittled the chief, resolving to see the end of this mysterious matter, followed her closely. On receiving the square from her, he said:

"'Stay, daughter; now do you know what this is?' what Mr. Williams wants.'

"'Why,' she replied, 'did you not bring me a chip just now?'

"'Yes,' said the astonished warrior; 'but I did not hear it say anything.'

"'If you did not I did,' was the reply, 'for it told me what he wanted. And all you have to do is to return with it as quickly as possible.'

"With this, the chief leaped out of the house, and catching up the mysterious piece of wood, he ran through the settlement with the chip in one hand and the square in the other, holding them up as high as his arms would reach, and shouted: 'See the wisdom of these English people! They can make chips talk! They can make chips talk!'

"On giving me the square, he wished to know how it was possible thus to converse with persons at a distance. I gave him all the explanation I could, but all was to him such a mystery that he actually tied a string to the chip, hung it around his neck, and wore it for some time. For several days after, we frequently saw him surrounded by a crowd, who were listening with intense interest while he told them of the wonders which this chip performed."

THE LITTLE SWEEP.—Several years ago an effort was made to collect all the chimney sweepers in the city of Dublin for the purpose of education. Among the others came a little fellow who was asked if he knew his letters.

"'Of yes, sir,' was the reply.

"'Do you spell?'

"'Oh, yes, sir,' was again the answer.

"'Do you read?'

"'O, yes, sir.'

"'And what book did you learn from?'

"'O, I never had a book in my life, sir.'

"'And who was your school-master?'

"'O, I never was at school.'

Here was a singular case: a boy could read and spell without a book or master. But what was the fact? Why, another little sweep, a little older than himself had taught him to read by showing him the letters over the shop-doors which they passed as they went through the city. His teacher, then, was no other little sweep like himself, and his book the sign-boards on the houses. What may not be done by trying? Child's World.

SINS BLOTTED OUT.—"According unto the multitude of thy tender mercies, blot out my transgressions." Ps. 51.

A little boy was much puzzled about this, being obtuse, and said: "I cannot think what becomes of all the sins God forgives, mother."

"Why, Charlie, can you tell me what becomes of all the figures you make on your slate yesterday?"

"I washed them all out, mother."

"And where are they then?"

"Why, there are nowhere, they are gone," said Charley.

Just so it is with the believer's sins! They are gone blotted out—"remembered against us no more."

"As far as the east is from the west, so far hath he removed our transgressions from us."

"CAN'T" AND "TRY".—Can't do it sticks in the mud, but try soon drags the wagon out of the rut. The fox said, "try," and he got away from the hounds when they almost snapped at him. The bees said, "try," and turned flowers into honey. The squirrel said, "try," and he went to the top of the beech tree. The snowdrop said, "try," and Spring soon threw Jack Frost out of the saddle. The young lark said, "try," and he found that his new wings took him over hedges and ditches and up where his father was singing. The ox said, "try," and plowed the field from end to end. No hill too steep for try to climb, no clay too stiff for try to plow, no field too wet for try to drain, no hole too big for try to mend.

ORGAN OF THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES OF THE M. E. CHURCH, SOUTH.

Wresting Scripture.

The things hard to be understood in Paul's writings more probably referred to the second coming of Christ, than to anything he had said about predestination. The Thessalonians had been shaken in mind and troubled about the second coming, and had pushed the subject to the verge of fanaticism. This was a case in which Scripture had been wrested. A more extreme case was that lately at Pocasset, in Massachusetts. In the entire history of the Christian Church there have been frequent manifestations of this tendency. The same is also true of nearly all the great doctrines, such as predestination, justification by faith, the witness of the Spirit, and Christian perfection. The Mormons, and the members of the Oneida community vindicate adultery upon scriptural grounds. The followers of Swedenborg retain the Scriptures along with the writings of him whom they regard as a truly inspired prophet and messenger from God. Modern spiritualism, at least in some of its votaries, appeals to the word of God in support of its notions that the spirits of the dead communicate with the living.

In Peter's day the wresting of Scripture was not confined to Paul's epistles, but it extended to other Scriptures, and the wresting was to the ruin of souls, "unto their own destruction." This torturing of Scripture to sustain false doctrine, and to overthrow the true, is also resorted to in vindicating things that are questionable in religious practice. Sabbath desecrators, and unstable and ignorant church members fond of the dance and the theater, find something in Scripture which, they claim, justifies their views. They remember that we are warned against being righteous over much, that David danced, and that the timbrel and the dance are mentioned in connection with occasions of rejoicing among the chosen people. It is, of course, easy to overlook the fact that promiscuous dancing of men and women was a thing unknown and not tolerated. There was certainly no time for such dancing as we have in the present day.

Those who twist and pervert Scripture to their own destruction are the unlearned, or rather the ignorant and unstable. They are ignorant of the whole Scripture, and the scope of its teachings. There is lack of breadth and accuracy in their interpretations, and there is a moral instability, a fickle and unsettled disposition and temper of mind. But not alone the ignorant and unstable. The devil showed himself an adept in the temptation of the Saviour, and it is doubtless one of his master devices to distort the Scriptures where he cannot altogether dislodge them from the mind. It is an art worthy of the prince of darkness to pervert to the soul's perdition what was designed to be the means of making wise unto salvation. The honest dupes and victims of error are many, but the leaders in infidelity and lust, however ignorant they may be of spiritual things, are yet conscious of the selfish and unholy spirit which actuates them. The leaders and their misguided followers go down to the pit together, wrecked and lost by the perversion of the word that might have brought them life and eternal bliss.

The perverseness of the carnal mind is no where more forcibly exhibited than in the disposition to touch upon the things hard to be understood, and to make them the stumbling blocks of the soul. There are plain things enough in Scripture appertaining to our duty, to the conditions of salvation, and to the future destiny. What men need to know for their guidance in virtue and piety, and for their salvation, can be easily ascertained. But these are passed by for things that may be wrapped in mystery, and for doctrines that for the present are above our comprehension. The time and thought that should be given to the practical and easily understood doctrines and precepts, are wasted in bewildering and vain speculations. The things which, if honestly and prayerfully studied, minister to faith and righteousness, are warped and turned to the soul's undoing. The word of God is a sword that may be wielded in defense of the assaulted, or we may so handle it as to pierce and destroy ourselves. It is a light to illuminate and purify the heart, and to shine upon our path, but it may be so wrested from its gracious purpose as to become a consuming fire.

We wrest Scripture at our peril. Men cannot mock God. They cannot impose upon the Holy Spirit, nor can they with impunity trifle with the word of God. Honest and sincere souls, solely bent on knowing and doing the will of God, cannot well go far astray. Willful ignorance, and instability of purpose and principal, are sins of sufficient magnitude to cut off every plea. The fearful fact is that men wrest the Scriptures to their own destruction. A man must take heed how he builds upon this foundation. There are hardly any extravagancies in error, and but few phases of immorality and crime that have not been extenuated or vindicated by appeal to the Bible. So far from excusing sin, this is one of the swiftest and surest ways to perdition. The Bible is God's most beneficent gift to man. Light, life, salvation, are in it, and it is at his own peril that he thwarts the gracious end. It is one of the gravest elements in our accountability that we have this divine testimony committed to us, to each one for himself, and that the abuse of the trust is the deepest aspect of human guilt.

The Day of Rest.

As Sunday constitutes one-seventh of our lives, nearly two months in each year, its consideration cannot be unimportant. The Sabbath is God's gracious gift to a working and weary world. It is the poor man's, the laborer's day. Rich people can rest and refresh themselves when they will, and as they will, but poor men, bound by the inexorable circumstances of their situation, cannot adopt their own times and methods of repose and recreation. There must be some general, well recognized, and publicly authorized and instituted day of rest, or they will have no rest at all. In our cities there are thousands of poor men who have scarce and any domestic life save on Sunday. Many of them rise and breakfast early before the little ones are awake or up. They take their dinners with them, and at midday, on some door way, or under the shadow of a tree, eat alone. Many, in various callings, rarely ever reach home before their children have fallen asleep. So they really see nothing of their children, or exert any educational influence over them, save on Sunday. If Sunday is not guaranteed to them their domestic life is deplorable—they are almost homeless.

How beautiful it is to see the benediction of the Sabbath resting on the poor! The morning of the day of rest dawns on them in peace. No haste to hurry away to toil. There is no toil, no care wasting responsibilities. No, it is a bright remain of Eden's rest and Eden's joy. With easy leisure he rises from sweet repose, dons the toil stained habiliments of the week; he dons the clean and neat suit of a better station; he gathers with his children and wife at the board his honest toil has crowned with plenty; he feels himself a man, a husband, a father, as he feels on no other day. How fair to his partial and loving eye the bright faces and neat attire of his children! How pleasant is their prattle and childish talk as they crowd around him, or climb upon his knee! If a pious family, the little ones cheerfully hasten to the Sabbath school. Sometimes father goes along, the youngest holding to his hand. The scene of smiles, cheerfulness and song is a beautiful picture to his eye, and a delightful refreshment to the best affections of his nature. See, it is the hour to dine. The good wife and mother has prepared a more varied and appetizing meal than greet the children's eyes when father is not at home to dine with; but she has not violated the Sabbath, and helped to make some one a Sabbath sharer, by marketing on the Sabbath day. No, her meats, her fruits and pastries, were provided on Saturday. The Sunday in such a home is a day of good cheer, a day of gladness, scarcely at all marred with toil. See, the husband and father, and this faithful wife and mother, with all their children, walking and pleasantly lounging in the shady squares of the city, or, if in the country, under the shade of the trees, and along the softly flowing streams. What a blessing has been this day, how sweet the repose that follows! How the day has lightened the burdens, and covered the harsh features of his toiling lot! Who can look on all this and not thank God for this weekly reprieve from the course of toil.

Now, this view of Sabbath, is or we may so handle it as to pierce more than mere sentiment—it is and destroy ourselves. It is a light truth made manifest by many and unanswerable facts.

To begin with, the lower animals—those that are driven hundreds of miles to market—reach the place of destination in better condition, command a higher sale, and more remunerative prices, if allowed to rest one seventh part of the time, than if the owner, in his greed of gain, seeks to make by hurrying through Teams that haul three hundred and sixty five days in the year, have more disease, meet with more disasters, and make less money than those that are rested a seventh of the time.

The toil and strain of daily labor and care for six consecutive days irritates the nerves and disturbs the balance of the circulation more than the night's rest restores and harmonizes; hence the need of a day of rest to bring back the exhausted vitality, and restore the equilibrium of the perturbed system. Sabbath-resting is eminently promotive of long evity.

In large manufacturing establishments, where various delicate articles are fabricated, which require careful manipulation, it has been found that those which are produced in the first part of the week are better than those produced toward the end of the week; because at the begining of the week the operatives had been refreshed by an entire day and two nights rest from toil; but, as the week wears away, the muscles grow still, motions slow and attention flagged. Now this process has only to be continued a hundred or five hundred days to prostrate and stupify the man until his efficiency as a skilled workman would be destoyed. A theatrical manager once told me that a five months engagement in New Orleans, during our most bracing weather, was more exhausting than a two years engagement in Philadelphia. One hundred and fifty nights each until two A. M. and then a rehersal every morning, was a great strain on the nervous system. He said actors desired the rest of the Sabbath for physical and sanitary considerations, if for nothing more.

Multitudes of employers in all sorts of business where Sabbath work is required, are longing for some relief, and, we may add, they are prematurely dying, for they are burning the life candle at both ends. The French atheist and infidels experimented with a tenth day for rest and nine for work, but soon abandoned the arrangement. The fact is, men cannot amend or alter the ten commandments. All tinkering in this direction, fully asserts God's wisdom and our folly. Remember the Sabbath to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou work—the seventh thou shalt rest. Let all the people say amen.

Unrequited Service.

Variable pastorates are a source of anxiety not often satisfactorily accounted for, and, while in doubt, the mind is tortured on the rack of conjecture. The rules for a successful pastorate are so explicit, and the confidence with which they are urged is so unqualified, that complacency without fruit betrays egotism or ignorance. Variable pastorates aggravate the condition viewed, for the success of one year ought to improve the means for future use, but some pastorates are impervious to the means which improve others, and all the labor is vainly employed to overcome the resistance.

The divine means are always immanent—i. e., the word spirit and grace. The human means alone admit of variableness; hence an unsuccessful pastorate bears heavily on the moral sense suggesting dereliction, disqualification or loss of usefulness, but in some cases service is plainly unrequited, a good conscience may regard a fruitless year with sorrow, but still the restlessness that survives, and the unsatisfied sense abiding, suggests that even such an event might be anticipated.

Human nature is an essential factor in the problem. The study of its known laws is a needful preparation for a work upon that nature. To be oblivious of that presence is to be as unprepared for work upon it as to be oblivious of the gospel, the informing word, or of the Holy Spirit, the regenerating principle in Christian work. Human nature is the study for the pastor, who, equally with others, is familiar with it. But is the knowledge of it shaped for such use as its moral transformation?

Some things are visible which elude defining, such as the subtle influence that draws to a pastor the group through which access to widening circles are gained. Unless it be attraction it is nameless; but, if certainly attractive, then its application to our subject is easy.

Satisfied that the greatest visible influence upon human nature is personality, that every community has its leaders, and that the sentiments of Christianity secures the nearest coincidence of desire, and the least selfishness of individual co-operation, the use of this means should be the chief design of the pastor.

We need go no further for a case in point than the selection of the twelve by the great Master. Through these, without suppressing his own influence toward others, did He rely for the propagation of the life from above. It is needless to discuss a fact; the better use is to take its directions. The psychological law that confederates like souls is a sufficient guide in subsidizing to human well-being, the service of others with yourself, and, if a right selection is made, and a full stream of life is kept up, the pastoral efficiency will reach its maximum. In the nearest to you expect to find your access to the farthest. If one knew how best to put the study of human nature, which evidently lies at the basis of success in the pastoral work, it would define and economize the useful activities that can be employed to advantage in the pastorate.

Some men are gifted with insight of others. Their success makes their gift enviable. Others are fortunate in their social attractions, and accomplish as much thereby. While others have neither the gift nor social quality, yet without attraction, which should be cultivated, the pastor is unprepared for his vocation, an unrequited service will be the most frequent of his lot—a hard one to endure—an unsatisfactory one in contrast with the promise: "Greater things shall ye do."

The study of divine grace can never lose its interest with the Christian. The study of the gospel will continue the absorbing work of the preacher, and human nature the point of observation for every intelligent pastor. A point of contact is offered by each pastor. Whom does it invite? If he is natural, instinct will reply; if artificial, dubiety ensues. The picture is verified in almost every congregation. Either the pastor is intelligible and strongly supported, or he is not understood, and doubt weakens every exercise. This is the more closely to be observed, since every pastor requires a conductor of his influence, a personality congenial with himself, and in closer contact with current life and affairs than his meditations and aspirations admit of him.

This media takes a wide range from child stage to ripe age, through the serious and romancing grades of society. The pastor's friend, whether child or man, carries his influence intact, and aggrandizes it with their own support. "Your peace!" is to bind to you willing friends. The winning quality in making friends is urbanity of manners, obligingness of disposition, and a retentive memory, keeping grateful recollections of kindness received. One desire lingers that God would renew his interest in his servants, and bless their pastorates with great fruitfulness.

The Thanksgiving Fund.

Two-thirds of the central meetings on behalf of the Thanksgiving Fund, says the London Watchman of June 11, have been held, and perhaps about one-third of the circuit meetings the result is in round figures £200,000. It may be assumed that the harvest is half gathered in. The fund is not likely to yield less than £300,000. If it were to produce much more, it would not now be matter of surprise. All the objects contemplated in the scheme of the committee will be accomplished. Some larger things will be done than have been proposed. More help should, we venture to think, be given here and there than has been agreed upon. But we must not pursue this line of thought, nor incur the reproach of counting the chickens before they are hatched.

There are two things which we desire to press upon the friends of the movement at this time, both included in the same general principle of doing quickly what is to be done, and so enhancing greatly its value. One point is that the subscriptions or instalments, as the case may be, should be paid in with all convenient speed to the local treasurers, and by the local treasurers forwarded without delay to the general treasurers in London. As the money comes in it is applied, after meeting current expenses, to the payment of the existing debts on the connectional funds. Already nearly one third of these debts has, we believe, been liquidated. If the first wave now giving should make a due impression, and be acted on everywhere, we should hope that the debts might be nearly all done away by the Conference. There is, indeed, only a month remaining. But an extensively awakened feeling might, during the next month, bring to twenty thousand pounds. Let us be forgiven if we are somewhat urgent on this point.

The other point on which we venture to urge speedy action relates to the holding of meetings on behalf of the fund. Wherever a central meeting has been held it will greatly conduce both to efficiency and facility in circuit action, for the circuit meetings of the district to be held as soon as possible after the central meeting. While the minds of the people are full of the subject, while speakers are ready primed for earnest and powerful utterance, while the wave of generous enthusiasm is still advancing with unabated power—while wind and tide favor—before some other subject is pressed into the field, or familiarity has abated the charm and power of freshness, let the meetings be held. With far less effort much more will be accomplished. Besides which the field will then be clear for the ordinary rotation of circuit engagements, and for any special subjects which must need be dealt with. Still further, the meeting once held will be found to have prepared the way for other work and enterprise. It will not have impoverished the soil, but have enriched it. It leaves a blessing behind it. It comes as a rich dew of influence upon all the field of church-life and fellowship.

Analogous considerations make it most desirable that the central meetings which remain to be held should be held as early as possible. Never has so great a movement in Methodism been so protracted in its course as the present. The Centenary and the Jubilee movements ran their course much more rapidly, and this was one secret of their great success. Each was a grand tidal movement, each was accomplished during one tide. There was no ebb, no waiting for a second tide before the scheme was safely carried into the haven of achieved success. The present is a still greater movement, and the tide has a larger, longer, grander sweep. But it may be possible to wait too long before weighing anchor and beginning to sail in. There is water enough now to float every district argosy on its inward run. They may now sail up with a flowing tide. But if they wait too long the tide may have turned before they make the port.

The connection cannot endure a paroxysm however gracious or glorious, however full of joy or of gratitude, of love and of good fruits, which is protracted through successive years. One year is quite long enough. The fund began with the beginning of last December. Its movement and course should terminate before next Christmas, at least as far as the central or district meetings are concerned. Even in that case the circuit meetings will not all have been held much before next May. Surely the sweep of the movement will then have occupied time and space sufficient. The most blessed excitement cannot be indefinitely sustained. The connection will require repose. Attention will need to be given to other matters of vital importance to circuit, to district, to connectional life.

Bishop Paine.

The following, from the pen of Rev. Dr. Palmer, appeared in the Southwestern Presbyterian last week:

MR. EDITOR: Few Christians of any denomination visit Aberdeen, Miss., without paying their respects to the venerable Bishop Paine, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The interview with which I was indulged a few days ago, was so touching that I have a desire to put it on record for the benefit of others besides myself.

The conversation opened naturally with a reference to his state of health, and to the severe chronic disease which, more than his great age disables him from active service. "I cannot describe to you my feelings," said this Christian patriarch, "when the physician ordered me to cease preaching, and to rest henceforth from all labor. It overwhelmed me to think that I should do nothing any more to make the world better in which I lived." "I can appreciate it, Bishop," was the reply. "It must be a solemn moment when we realize that our work on earth is done, and we fold it up for the judgment day." "Ah!" said he, "if I were only permitted to preach again, I would endeavor to do it with greater simplicity and impressiveness. I would go directly for the conscience, and seek to bring sinners at once to Christ." "If it is painful to you," I ventured to suggest, "to be laid aside now, it must be a comfort to reflect that rest comes to you after a long and laborious ministry." "Yes; I thank God that I can look back over sixty years of active service, and upon many tokens of the divine blessing upon it."

After a little, the conversation drifted upon the suffering which it pleased the Master to send upon His aged servant. "It is very acute," said he; "only an hour before you came in it seemed as great as I could bear." "It is very mysterious," I rejoined, "that we should be let out from life through so much suffering." "It is proper," he added, "that we should seek to assuage pain; but I would not desire to have mine a particle less than my Heavenly Father wills." "Bishop, I have sometimes thought a Christian should be willing to endure a good deal of bodily pain, if he can thereby testify to the holiness of God, who will not allow sin to go unreproved, even in those whom He loves and saves." "Ah! yes," replied he; "but the complete vindication of the divine holiness is to be found in the sufferings upon the cross. No one can doubt this when he looks there."

Fearing to weary him, I rose to take my leave. With the sweet courtesy which has always distinguished this amiable Christian gentleman, he followed me to the door, leaning upon his staff. After expressing satisfaction at my visit, he sent messages of love to the ministers of his own church in New Orleans. "Remember me to Bishop Keener, to Drs. Parker, Walker and Mathews, and tell them I am very near the other shore, and I think I know the landing." "Yes, Bishop, and the landing is very safe." "Blessed be God," he replied, "I know the landing on the other side, and it is safe." Thus, after the lapse of eighteen hundred years, from the lips of this Christian patriarch falls the echo of Paul's cheerful testimony. "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed unto Him against that day."

Weekly official meetings are indeed needed, especially in the stations. Rev. W. M. Pattaman, writing to the Pacific Methodist, says:

We would as soon expect a railroad, or bank, or any other corporation, to succeed in its operations without the meeting of its directory, as for a station or circuit to succeed in its legitimate work without the regular weekly or monthly meeting of the "Leaders' Meetings." It does not do to say this is impracticable. This were to say Methodism is impracticable. If the last hundred years has demonstrated anything, it is the practicability and utility, as a system, of Methodism.

Formerly these meetings were required to meet once a week, "whenever practicable;" but now the discipline requires them to meet "once a week."

We can see how a station can get along in some sort of a way, and, under a very active preacher in charge, do much good, without these official meetings; but we cannot see how Methodism can be administered without them. But it is exceedingly difficult to see how the work of a circuit can be carried on without them. And yet we have known many good preachers who regarded them as impracticable on circuits.

A Progressive University.

Vanderbilt University pays liberal salaries, and thus secures the ablest faculty. It provides delightful homes for its officers, as well as elegant lecture-rooms for students. A professorship salary is $2,500 per annum, paid quarterly, and a house. At the late meeting of the Board of Trust some modification was made. The salary continues the same ($2,500) but the Board guarantees only $2,000. One half of the tuition fees is devoted to the payment of the other $500, or its pro rata. With a full attendance, such as the character of the Vanderbilt deserves, the balance will always be made up.

The other half of all tuition fees is devoted to the aid and encouragement of young men who are students of the University. Prizes in the shape of scholarships and fellowships, ranging from $100 to $50, are to be annually distributed among students who excel in conduct and proficiency in their several classes. The young men who are so fortunate as to secure these local prizes may thus pay their way through to graduation in the highest departments, year after year.

Thus does the generous endowment of the Vanderbilt enable the Board of Trust to pay for the services of the strongest Faculty, and offer to the young men of the country the largest and most substantial assistance ever known in the South, and quite to that of the best and richest institutions elsewhere. This will draw powerfully the best class of young men, and raise the standard of their scholarship by a high and valuable competition. It makes every student work for the noble University; for the more students that come the more tuition fees there will be to divide among the students. Several thousands of dollars so used will, year after year, bear a great harvest. This is a wise, timely, and beneficent movement.—Nashville American, June 1.

Rev. Luther M. Smith, D. D.

Rev. Luther M. Smith D. D., late Chancellor of the Southern University, born in Jefferson county, Ga., September 10, 1820, died in faith at Birmingham, Ala., July 4, 1879. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord. Yea, saith the spirit, that they may rest from their labors and their works do follow them."

The parents of Dr. Smith were both from Virginia. His father, Dr. Ira Ellis Smith, was a gentleman of the old school, athletic in body, vigorous in mind and of a lofty and independent spirit. Mrs. Smith née Ellen Penniston, was a lady of rare genius, elegant culture and deep piety. She was devoted to her children and spared no pains to bring them up "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Luther, the oldest son, was ardently attached to his mother, and always maintained that she was the best and greatest woman that ever lived. She moulded his character and gave him his first literary tastes and impulses. When he was a small boy, his father removed to Coweta county, Ga., and here the children enjoyed good educational advantages. Luther was an apt and diligent pupil, and soon made such proficiency in his text books that his father resolved to send him to Emory College, then under the charge of Dr. A. B. Longstreet. In the summer of 1848, our subject was graduated with the highest distinction. A short time previous he had been savingly converted and connected himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. In obedience to his father's wishes he now began the study of law, was soon admitted to the bar and actually began the practice of this profession, with the most animating prospect of success. Through the influence of Dr. George F. Pierce (now Bishop) he was induced, however, to forego his ambition and accept a place in the faculty of Emory College. On the twenty-fifth of January, 1849, he had been united in marriage to Miss Mary Eliza Greenwood, a step daughter of Bishop James O. Andrew. In the year 1851 he was licensed to preach the gospel. He continued in the faculty of Emory College, filling several positions successively with great credit until the Confederate War called away so many of the students that it became necessary to suspend the exercises of the institution. During the year 1859 he lost his amiable and excellent wife. To this crushing blow, which fell very unexpectedly upon him, he submitted with the meekness of that spirit commended in the twelfth chapter of the Epistle to the Hebrews. By his urgent appeals the scattered and discouraged faculty of the college were induced, at the close of the war, to resume their work. President James R. Thomas, Prof. G. W. W. Stone and Prof. L. M. Smith now composed the Board of Instruction. May 10, 1865, he was married to Miss Callie B. Lane, a daughter of Prof. George Lane, his old instructor in Emory College. In January, 1867, the writer of this sketch joined the faculty, as Professor of Latin. Dr. Thomas having resigned in 1867 Prof. (then Dr.) Smith was elected to the vacancy, and held this position until November 1871, when he was succeeded by Dr. Osborn L. Smith. During these four years, there was not one expulsion from the college, there were several revivals of religion characterized by wonderful power, and the application and deportment of the young men were the most exemplary that had ever been known in Georgia. In all that time, the writer never heard a profane expression fall from the lips of a collegian, although the number in attendance was unusually large, never less than one hundred.

In October, 1875, Dr. Smith became Chancellor of the Southern University. The institution was deeply in debt, the trustees disheartened, the few students in attendance, about to take wing. Under the wise administration of Dr. Smith, nearly the whole of the debt has been cancelled, the curriculum greatly enlarged, and the friends of the University confidently expect for it a career of increasing prosperity and usefulness. All this is mainly due to the patient fortitude, the matured wisdom and the self sacrificing devotion of the deceased chancellor.

About six weeks since Dr. Smith accompanied Rev. W. I. Powers to Birmingham, in the interest of the University. Here he was taken suddenly ill, and after a long and fearful struggle with disease, he expired, July 1 in the fifty-third year of his age, and in the prime of his usefulness.

The loss of such a man at such a time is a heavy blow to the institution of which he so ably presided, to the church of which he was an eloquent and efficient minister, and to the community where he was so loved and honored. He was highly endowed and thoroughly educated. Even at the time of his graduation, he was well versed in classical and scientific knowledge. Throughout his life he was an insatiable reader, and his general information was certainly more extensive than that of any man with whom the writer ever has been intimately acquainted. At the same time, no man was freer from all parade of learning. In the social circle he was an admirable conversationalist and an interesting companion. As a friend he was true, steadfast and obliging. At home he was dignified without sternness, and affectionate without weakness. As a Christian, I never knew him to shrink from duty. He was one of the few men of whose salvation no one could doubt, even though they should die without a moment's warning. In the pulpit he had few equals. Able, earnest, eloquent, zealous and absolutely fearless, though he sometimes gave offense by his directness and honesty, he always commanded the respect of his hearers. He was eminent for usefulness. No good cause ever asked in vain his assistance, and both in Georgia and Alabama many a poor young man was indebted to his generous kindness for the means of education. It is impossible to form any adequate conception of the good accomplished by such a man, but all the foreible humors to which he aspired in early life are poor indeed compared with the crown which shall glitter on his brow in the day of eternity. His dying testimony was, "We have overcome the world, the flesh and the Devil. All right." The battle lasted with him to the very gate of the city, but he entered it as a conqueror through Jesus Christ.

JAPANESE SERMONS.—The Japanese are great sermon-hearers everywhere heathen; and the sermons of some of their own priests are justly celebrated. The sermon is irregular in form—a frank and inartistic, but not unstudied, talk over the topic that has been in the preacher's mind. He takes a passage for a text, and then probably passes on to some pregnant passages as he proceeds. Beginning with the soft, low voice of his people, he soon warms, and often uses much gesture and eager rhetoric; but one of his strong points, as it is of the old Buddhist sermons, is his power of illustration. To take an example or two only from the sermons I heard. Speaking of the importance of the Christian under trial: "Summer and winter are each hard to bear, but they are soon over, and we take them as they come. Let us also take trial as one of God's seasons, and believe that it is only for a season." Of faith and works: "A hawk and a crow"—the two common birds here, and the former the model of the Japanese kite, "a hawk and a crow, you know, can fly away when they have two wings; and if one wing be maimed or shot all the bird flutters to the ground, and can only fly. We, also, have two wings on which we fly to heaven. The one is faith, and the other works. But we can only fly thither with two; and if we try with one we fall to the ground, and flutter and crawl there like a maimed bird." Of the hopes of heaven: "When you fly a kite" (a universal amusement in Japan), "if you tie the string to one place the kite will fall; if to another, it will whirl and tumble ignominiously in the air, but never mount; if to another, it will rise a little way, and then flutter, and begin to descend; but, if to the right spot, it will soar into the sky. So, if we tie our hopes to anything earthly, they come to nothing, though they sometimes seem, by our affections and aspirations, to mount unsteadily for a little space; but when we tie them to heaven they soar into the sky, and dazzle us with the sunshine of God."—Good Words.

"Drink is the Curse of Africa!" writes Mr. McKay, Missionary of the American Board, from Lake Victoria Nyanza. "Go where you will—Usoquha, Usagara, Ugogo, Unyamwezi, Usukuma, Ukerewe, or Uganda—you will find every week, and, when grain is plentiful, every night, every man, woman and child, even to sucking infant, reeling with the effects of alcohol. On this account, chiefly, I became a teetotaller on leaving the coast, and have continued so ever since. I believe, also, that abstinence is the true secret of continued and unimpaired health in the tropics. Who wishes to introduce civilization into Africa? Let a sine qua non of the enterprise be that its members be total abstainers. The West Coast is ruined with rum; it is killing the Kaffirs in the south; and even at the East Coast, at Zanzibar, a vile liquor is distilled from the sugar cane at Kokotoni that is retailed by every Hindu, Banyan and Goa merchant in all the coast towns, to the destruction of the Suahili race. The Wanika tap the cocoa-nut tree, and sip its juice with straws, till every village I passed through, even in early morning, seemed a pandemonium. Inland, the grains are used to produce the ferment. Matama, or panicum, is the general malt, but, failing that, Indian corn and a small millet called mewere are called into requisition, the strength being often increased by the addition of honey. On the shores of Nyanza, plantains are plentiful, and from them a wine is made which causes a king and people to meet on the low level of intoxication."

ON TRIAL.—A copy of this paper is sent to certain persons not now subscribers, that they may examine it with reference to introducing it permanently into their families. But as one number may not be sufficient, we propose to send the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for three months on trial, upon receipt of fifty cents. We offer it thus low, because we know that many families after the trial will not consent to give it up, and we will have increased our friends by the experiment. Please inclose the fifty cents in currency or postage stamps, and forward before the matter passes from your mind.

We are indebted to Rev. A. J. Witherspoon for tickets to an excursion and basket picnic to Mandeville, by the Steamer Camelia, on Tuesday, July 29.

The picnic will be under direction of the managers and for the benefit of the New Orleans Seamen's Friend Society, and no doubt all who participate will have an enjoyable time and feel at the same time they are helping a worthy cause. Tickets for the round trip are only fifty cents.

The death of Thomas H. Powers, the millionaire druggist of Philadelphia, has left the various congregations of the Reformed Episcopal Church hopelessly in debt to the estate. The executors and trustees of the estate hold mortgages amounting to $300,000 against church buildings in all parts of the country. They have no disposition to press for the money, but in the absence of any directions in the will of the deceased in relation to this indebtedness they are required by law to recover the amount and hold it in trust for the other heirs of the estate. The seventh General Council of the Reformed Episcopal Church just held in Chicago changed the episcopacy of that church from general to synodical, and elected James A. Latane and T. F. Stevens bishops.

REVISION OF THE AUTHORIZED VERSION.—The revisers of the authorized version of the New Testament met on the tenth instant at the Jerusalem Chamber for their nineteenth session, and sat for six hours. There were present: The Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, who presided; the Archbishop of Dublin, the Deans of Westminster, Rochester, Canterbury and Lichfield, the Master of the Temple, Archdeacons Lee and Palmer, Principals Brown and Newth, Prof. Moulton, Dr. Vance Smith, and Prebendaries Humphry and Scrivener—fifteen members in all, with Mr. Troutbeck the secretary. The company considered suggestions for the revision of the Acts of the Apostles.—London Watchman.

A writer in the Homiletic Monthly, in accommunicating on "Preaching to Children," gives six Points that would not be out of place suggestions to Sunday-school teachers: Explain clearly. Give simple and logical readings. Use no theological or technical terms. Use illustrations, but avoid telling stories. Be natural and conversational in delivery. Let a heart-warm with the love of God look through your eyes into theirs, and down into their hearts. Preach God's word to the children, and take the comfort of Isaiah lv. 11.

By the will of Mr. John R. Jr., an East India commission merchant, a sum amounting to nearly $200,000 is to be granted to various charities of Glasgow. The will gives five per cent. to these charitable institutions, and it is said that when the will was drawn the testator believed himself to be worth only $50,000; but that his estate has since increased to $2,000,000.

The statistics of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for the current year, are as follows: Traveling preachers, 3,157; local, 5,762; superannuated, 396; white members, 783,241; colored, 142,8; Indians, 1,468; total ministers and members, 798,852. Sunday schools, 7,162; teachers, 61,867; scholars, 391,293. The increase in membership during the year was 21,120. The increase in the number of Sunday-school scholars was 28,130.

The American Bible Society now present a Bible for sale at twenty-five cents, and a New Testament at five cents, which, considering the price at which they are offered for sale, are probably unexcelled by any books published.

—The Quarterly Review of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, July, 1879, has: I. Shakespeare's Hamlet, by A. A. Lipscomb, D. D. LL. D. This subject is treated in Dr. Lipscomb's best style. He gives us not a threadbare criticism, but a fresh philosophical study of the greatest creation of the great dramatist. II. Individuality of character, by C. G. Andrews, D. D. The author insists that every man should be himself, and that "a servile emulation of any one is the warping of forces which God intended should develop into result distinct from all others, and which, until then, had no existence." The subject is discussed and illustrated in an luminous and entertaining style. III. Modern Teleology, by Prof. J. W. Glenn, A. M. This article is an exposure of the weakness and contradictions of the scientists, and a vindication of the old doctrine of a creation by supernatural power. The paper is clear and candid, but too brief to exhibit the subject in a very full or conclusive light. IV. Paul the Christianity, by C. W. Miller, D. D. Dr. Miller contends "that from Paul we have the only extended and complete exhibition of the Christian system." The two different theological tendencies in the apostolic age—the Petrine and the Pauline are discribed and distinguished. Prelacy and Calvinism are considered and refuted. The Epistle to the Romans is analyzed, and the doctrine of righteousness, or justification by faith is presented. V. Recent German Pessimism, by Prof. J. P. Lacroix, A. M. The philosophy of despair, the atheism of Schopenhauer and Hartman, is treated by one who is perfectly familiar with all the phases of German skepticism and infidelity. VI. The Duties of Higher Races to Themselves, by Rev. B. W. Bond. This article is a review of an article by Canon George Rawlinson, published in the Princeton Review last year. Mr. Bond controverts Canon Rawlinson's views of the advantages of amalgamation, and very successfully. It is an able though necessarily brief discussion of a live question. VII. Mrs. Cross and Her Writings, by Mrs. M. Martin. Mrs. Cross, by the writer of this article, is placed among the first of the gifted women of Southern Methodism. It is a biographical and literary sketch of a good and noble woman. VIII. The Methodist Church of Canada, by Rev. E. Barrass, A. M. Mr. Barrass gives a historical statement of Canadian Methodism, and contributes a very interesting chapter to Wesleyan history. IX. The Baptisms of the Spirit, by J. O. A. Clark, D. D. LL. D. There was a baptism on the day of Pentecost, mainly distinguished by the gift of miracles and the exhibition of miraculous power. There was a second baptism in which the permanent gifts of the Spirit were bestowed, and which rested upon the ministry of the apostles, and brought about the conversion of the people. The miraculous and the gracious operations of the Holy Spirit are distinguished and defined by Dr. Clark. X. German Socialism, Atheistic and Catholic, by J. C. Hinton, A. M. The author draws largely upon Emile de Lovelleye for his facts. The article will help to open the eyes of Americans to the partially-hidden but powerful forces of socialism which are at work in this country as well as in Europe.

The editorial department, comprising literary notes, views and reviews, and editorial chit, is more full and satisfactory than in the previous numbers. We are glad to know that the Quarterly is making progress, and that its prospects are fair. The present number is certainly excellent and will compare favorably with some of the older Quarterlies. It is published by our Publishing House at Nashville. The subscription price, $4 a year, should be sent to Dr. R. A. Young, Nashville. Rev. J. W. Hinton, D. D., Columbus, Ga., is managing editor, to whom articles for publication should be mailed.

—The Theological and Homiletical Monthly for July, has a good table of contents, and is steadily improving with issue of each new number. Among the articles of the present number are: Origin of the Soul; Ultimate Question, by Dr. Deems; Three Conditions of Effective Preaching, by Rev. J. T. Whitley; Our Colloquial Language, by Rev. S. S. Lambeth; Expository Preaching, by Rev. Dr. Granberry; Pilate's Perplexity, by Rev. J. A. Proctor.

The Theological and Homiletical Monthly is edited and published by Rev. R. N. Sledd, D. D., Richmond, Va. Price, $2 50 per annum.

THE air of perfection, cleanliness and home like comfort which is so apparent at the American House, Boston, is one of the characteristic features of that well-regulated establishment. To the traveling public this popular house offers an opportunity seldom found at so thoroughly a first-class house, having reduced its rates to $2 and $2 50 per day.

CARPETS, FLOOR OIL CLOTHS.—Take advantage now at the inducements which are offered by that old firm, Hyatt, Messrs. Hyatt, Pippey & Lara. The stock is one of the largest and finest in New Orleans, and should be carefully gone through by those who want to trade with a reliable house.

EDWIN ALDEN'S Catalogue of American News, upon his own personal. This is a large octavo book of 158 pages nicely printed on fine book paper, presenting a good appearance, and is well classified. It is to be regretted that a book, evidently the result of great labor, and presenting so good an appearance, should be so very inaccurate, otherwise it would be a valuable reference book for many of our merchants.

During the early spring two papers on the list, with circulation of 8,000 copies each, ceased to have any existence, and it is doubtful if their combined circulation, which last year reached more than half the amount credited to each. Our own paper is credited with something like a thousand less circulation than the very last number printed at the office, except, and many hundreds of new subscribers have been added during the past few months, and the number is steadily increasing. With these facts we feel content, and no doubt the publishers of others as well as ours, who look upon the circulation of their papers as the criterion by which the progressive or retrogressive tendency of their publications is to be judged, "see things" quite differently from the way they appear to those who are not behind the scenes.

There is no better indication that we have a prosperous people than the changes that are taking place in the manufacturing systems of many sections. The old way was for the shoemaker to stand in the door way of his little shop and wait for customers to come to him for work. The tailor, blacksmith, harness maker, and many other artisans, have all had a similar experience. Of late, however, by the introduction of the system of manufacture with which the name of Singer is identified, this has entirely changed. This change was brought about mainly due to the competition in the sewing machine business, but the principle is now being applied to many other articles, and BURNING GREEN Wood GREATLY WASTES. Water passing into vapor absorbs and hides nearly 1,000 degrees of heat. A cord of green wood produces just as much heat as a cord of the same wood dry. In burning the dry wood we get nearly all the heat, but in burning the same wood green, from one half to three-fourths of the heat produced goes off silent and useless in evaporating the sap or water. A cubic foot of green wood weighs, on an average, about 50 pounds, of which 30 pounds is sap or water. As ordinarily fired up, we get only half a cord to 60 cubic feet in the spaces between the sticks; we still have weight of about two tons to the cord, which nearly one-half is water or sap. Such wood burns very little freely, and a great deal of the force of sap. The great saving of burning a home cord is evident as well as the same amount of fuel for half the time. Green wood loses one-fifth its weight in drying; oak, one-quarter to one-fifth.—Exchange.

SPANISH CREAM.—Beat the yolks of six eggs, and six tablespoonfuls of sugar, beat thoroughly together, and put into one quart of milk; pulverize and add gelatine enough to make into a soft custard; put into molds in the custard three-fourths of a cup of chocolate, which will be found in paint stores, ground in oil; let it stand in a pan of water, and when thoroughly dissolved pour the chocolate while it is hot into the custard; mix well together, and pour into molds. When cold, turn out and serve.

SCALLOPED SHEEP.—Scald the sweetbreads, let stand in cold water a few minutes, then parboil in a saucepan of boiling water, adding the juice of a lemon, a little salt, a bay leaf, and a blade of mace. When tender, cut in small pieces, season with salt and pepper, and put in a buttered pudding dish, with a layer of bread crumbs, then a layer of sweetbreads, and so on, with bread crumbs on top. Pour over the whole a cup of cream, and bake half an hour.

BOILED TURKEY.—Boiled turkey with oyster sauce is a delicious dish. Stuff the turkey with a dressing made of bread crumbs, butter, pepper, salt, and a little sage, and boil in water enough to cover it. Make a sauce of the liquor in which the turkey was boiled, thickened with flour and butter, and add a pint of oysters, with a little cream. Pour over the turkey and serve.

A ROME OF GLASS.—In the large basement room of the home of S. Isaacs, at No. 1434 Mission Street, between Tenth and Eleventh, is now weaving the most wonderful fabric of which the voluminous history of unique feminine apparel furnishes any account. It is the material, as flexible as the finest of silk and as durable as Blue Jeans William's favorite stuff for trousers, for a lady's dress, and it is woven by the world renowned artist in glass work, Prof. Theodore Greiner. It is of the finest grade colored strands of glass-ets, spun by himself. Compared with the completed garment, the mythical glass slipper of the fabulous Cinderella will rank in its vulgar and insignificance as an extinct Napa soda bottle. A Chronicle reporter called on him recently, and he very courteously showed him the entire process. Breaking an extra piece off the solid bottom of an already broken tumbler, he submitted it to the heat of a blow-pipe until it became incandescent and soft. Then with a "stick" of glass he touched the molten portion, and with an expert motion, which may be described as a flip, he carried a thread of the material as slowly-revolving wide wood-en wheel of nineteen feet circumference. At a certain number of revolutions the strand was complete, and the wheel was stopped and it is removed. It then consisted of innumerable gossamer glistening threads, finer than the finest floss silk. These strands are spun of all colors, and are then washed in a solution of water and best-refined sugar, which toughens them. The spinning is all done and occupied many weeks. The weaving is done on an old-fashioned hand loom. The warp being nineteen feet long and the woof four feet, so that the material will extend to advantage only about ten inches a day can be woven.—San Francisco Chronicle.

THE ELECTRIC LIGHT ON THE METROPOLITAN RAILWAYS.—A first installment towards lighting the stations of the Metropolitan Railway by electric light was made on Monday night. The point chosen for the experiment was the Edgware-road, and the brilliant appearance of that station, illuminated by two of these lights, one at either end of the building, was in marked contrast with the ordinary aspect of an underground railway station. The platforms are dull and gloomy, and the cost of lighting them is estimated at about £5 per hour, so that it is hoped the present promising innovation, even if only for temporary purposes, may be extended. However, as has not been so much looked for as to afford the public a better light than has been successfully employed, a few words explanatory of the arrangement will not be out of place. A short platform has been erected in front of the station, and is protected from the weather by a glass roof. Under the platform, and parallel to the line, is a trench, in which are placed the electric lamps. These are suspended from the roof of the trench, and are protected from the weather by glass shades. The lamps are worked by a steam-engine, which is placed in a shed at the end of the platform. The electric current is conveyed from the engine to the lamps by means of insulated copper wires. The lamps are of 2,000 candle power each, and are placed at intervals of about 50 feet apart. The experiment was made by Messrs. Siemens, of Charlton, and Messrs. Crompton, of Chelsea, and the result is highly satisfactory.—Times.

At a late meeting of the Russian Geographical Society communications were made to the five expeditions now exploring the interior of Asia under the auspices of Society. The most important of these is the one under Prjevalski, of the 2d of the twenty-three Teachers and Officers constituting the Corps of Cadets and Junior Officers in Command at Camp Jackson, Columbia, S. C., during the Session of 1879-80, will be selected from the town of Khiva. Another expedition, called the Mongolian, is under the superintendence of Commander M. Pevtsoff, and is equipped by M. Potanin, who was heard from last in Siberia, at the end of May, intending to cross the Altai through Uliassutai to Kobdo, on the Kobdo River, and thence to Kuldja, on the Ili River. A third exploring party, under M. Prjevalski, is starting at Kosul-Kolon, a Mongolian village two days' journey to the north of Kiakhta, on the Russian frontier. The object of this party is to explore the mountains of Nan-Shan, which separate Mongolia from the Chinese provinces of Kan-Su and Shen-Si. The fourth expedition, under Potanin, is to explore the mountains of Kuku-Noor, a Mongolian, White Sea, which have been said to be a Russian Switzerland, and the fifth, under Pavlovski, is to explore the country between Kuku-Noor and Lake Lob-Nor.

The telephone is rapidly coming into extensive use in the United States. In some cities and towns it is employed to put the stores and residences of subscribers in telegraphic communication with each other, and now takes the place of speaking tubes in most offices. It is suggested, in addition to these uses, that it would be a valuable auxiliary to the fire department, as it would enable the chief engineer to receive the first intelligence of fires, and to despatch the apparatus to the right point without the loss of time that now occurs in sending messengers to the engine houses. It is also suggested that it would be a valuable auxiliary to the police force, enabling the officers on the beat to communicate with the station-house at any moment.—Iron.

The sensibility of Selenium, a rare element found in the neighborhood of lightly well known. The selenium American inventions is that Mr. Carey F. The Montreal Council of St. Petersburg, on the presidency of M. le Baron Korff, has decided upon erecting electric lights on certain points in the city parts, and in the great bridge of Chamvin. It is stated that an experiment will be shortly made with the electric light between the Place de la Bourse and that of Gare du Port, and that several other squares will be illuminated by the same means. The experiment will be made by the Shah in the palace of Tabriz, the Electrician.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

For the speedy and permanent cure of Scrofula, and all scrofulous diseases, Erysipelas, Rose, or St. Anthony's Fire, Pimples, and Face-grubs, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter, Humors, Salt Rheum, Scald-Head, Ringworm, Ulcers, Sores, Blood-taint, Mercurial Disease, Neuralgia, Female Weaknesses and Irregularities, Jaundice, Affections of the Liver, Dyspepsia, Exhaustion, and General Debility.

By its searching and cleansing qualities it prevents the foul corruptions which originate the blood, and cause decayment and decay. It stimulates and restores the vital functions. It promotes health and strength. It restores and preserves health. It infuses new life and vigor throughout the whole system. No other remedy approaches it in the power to control and cure all those diseases which have their origin in impurities of the blood, and despair, when Ayer's Sarsaparilla is taken. Remember, the earlier the trial, the earlier the cure.

Its virtues have been furnished to physicians everywhere, and their recommendation of its qualities, and their use of it in their practice, abundantly prove its value as a remedy.

For nearly forty years Ayer's Sarsaparilla has been widely used, and it possesses the confidence of millions of those who have experienced its remarkable curative virtue.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The most wonderful and marvelous success, in cases where persons are sick or pining away from a condition of miserableness that no one knows what ails them, profitable patients for doctors, is obtained by the use of Hop Bitters. They begin to cure from the first dose, and keep it up until perfect health and strength is restored. Whoever is afflicted in this way need not suffer, when they can get Hop Bitters. See "Truths" and "Proverbs" in another column Adv.

A Dutchman once met an Irishman on a lonely highway. As they met, each smiled thinking he knew the other. Pat, on seeing his mistake, remarked, with a look of disappointment, "Faith, an' I thought it was you, an' you thought it was me, an' it's naythur of us." "Yaw, dat is dru. I am anuder man, and you is not yourself, and we are some other bodies."

A lecture on natural history was called upon the other day to pay for a live rabbit which he had in a basket in a railway car, and which the conductor said would be charged the same as a dog. The lecturer calmly explained that he was going to use the rabbit in illustration of a lecture he was about to give in another town, and, indignantly taking a small tortoise from his pocket, said, "You'll be telling me next that this is a dog, and that I must pay for it also." The conductor went for superior orders, and, on his return delivered this lecture on natural history: "Cats is dogs, rabbits is dogs, but a tortus is a hinsect." The professor had to pay dog fare for the rabbit.

How Queen Victoria Popped the Question.

On June 20, 1837, William IV. died, and Victoria, then a young maiden, ascended the throne. It had been planned in diplomatic circles to have her marry Alexander, the brother of the King of the Netherlands; but that project failed, for Prince Albert, of Cobourgh, came to England in 1839 and won the heart of England's Queen. On the fourteenth of October her Majesty informed the Prime Minister, Lord Melbourne, of that important but delicate fact, and the following day the Prince had an audience with the Queen. The two lovers were placed in a very peculiar position. The social position of Victoria was so superior to that of Prince Albert that he could not make the first advance, nor offer the lady his hand, as is usually the case between lovers now-a-days. It was rather for her to make the proposition and offer her hand, and she accomplished the somewhat unusual feat in a very skillful manner. With a gracious smile she handed the Prince a small bouquet of flowers, which he placed as near as possible to his heart. As he had no button-hole or pocket in that region of his close-fitting uniform, he took his pen-knife, cut a slit, and slipped in the precious token. He then expressed his thankfulness and pleasure at being so well received at the English Court, and especially at his reception by the Queen. In reply to which she asked him the tell tale question: "If the country pleases your highness so well, perhaps you would not object to remain with us?" The Prince replied that was the great desire of his life, and the Queen, feeling that the decisive moment had come, though quivering with womanly delicacy, confessed to him honestly her great love for him, and assured him that it would be the cause of her greatest happiness if he would consent to make the sacrifice necessary to become the husband of the Queen of England. For he could be nothing more than her husband, and would have nothing to do with the political affairs. The Prince was charmed and capitulated unconditionally. They were married on the tenth of February, 1840. Their marriage was in every way a happy one, and their wedded life unalloyed until death seized the Prince as his prey. Calumny and intrigue never poisoned the sweetness of their family life, which stands to-day as a model, not only for crowned heads, but also for the humblest of human kind.

In an article on the habits of the fly, the New York Tribune ably says: "Great care has to be taken in eating huckleberries, because not infrequently a fly so much as to be mistaken for one; and if he can be baked in a cake and pass himself off on the unwary as a currant, he dies, without a regret."

DISCOVERY BY which hair can be forced to grow on the smoothest heads. The papers all over the country contain notices of the remarkable virtues of Mrs. Hyatt's Hair Restorer, and there are scores of living witnesses in St. Louis who take pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of the Restorer. Mrs. Hyatt's principle is the most reasonable, because she proceeds on the well-based supposition that the hair germ never dies while life exists in the person, and that it is only necessary to stimulate the germ to produce a satisfactory growth. SUMMER MORNING.

BY BLAISE GODFREY.

The sun is up! I hear the lowing
Of cattle from the distant grass;
Where trails the silver dew with my boot
And round my pathway flutters past
The golden wing of butterfly.

The sun is up! I hear the bleat
Of sheep that wander on the hill;
Where broken rocks of granite jut,
I see it across my offering strike
And drift upon the stony crest.

A cool, fresh wind of promise
Is over my shoulder softly blown;
Like an angel's whisper it comes
Where fragrant grass and flowers are strewn
Its wings of dream and song.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, July 22.—By order of the Board of Health disinfectants are applied against all points of entrance and departure of persons and places in the Mississippi valley south of Cairo. Passengers arriving from infected districts in Texas, Mississippi or the Gulf coast will be allowed to enter the city without passing through the hands of the Board of Health. The disinfection of the Board of Health extends to the Alabama line.

NEW YORK, July 22.—Dennis Mahaffey, a man of three names, Chas. McCarthy, Jr., and Jacob Harris, and New York, one night, at Broom, near Centre street, in a saloon kept by Patrick Burke, Broadway, Brooklyn, on Sunday.

The Seminary yellow fever hospital at Tiers were seven persons, each in bed, and she took all the necessary medical precautions when the Mayor ordered the removal of the patients to other hospitals. Mayor Wickham, who is confined to his house with the fever, was not informed of the order, and when he learned of it countermanded it. The order was not carried out, as the Board of Health would not allow the removal of the patients.

The post-mortem examination of the body of Dr. Cullen, who died of yellow fever, has revealed the fact that the disease was of a malignant type.

NEW YORK, July 23.—The mayor of Brooklyn, acting upon the advice of the Board of Health, has issued a proclamation declaring that the city is free from yellow fever, and that the quarantine regulations will be withdrawn on the 25th inst.

NEW YORK, July 23.—Dr. Cullen, who died of yellow fever, was buried this afternoon. Only a few persons were present. The funeral was private, at the request of the family.

NEW YORK, July 23.—The following dispatches have been received:

NASHVILLE, July 22.—To Col. John C. Lamoreux, Memphis: You are hereby assigned to command of the sanitary troops at Memphis. He will be obeyed and respected accordingly.

ALBERT S. MARKS, Governor.

NASHVILLE, July 22.—To the officers and soldiers of several companies, Memphis: The eyes of the people of the State are upon you. Prove true soldiers. I will ask the State to reward you. Remember that the duty of the soldier is obedience.

ALBERT S. MARKS, Governor.

WASHINGTON, July 23.—The Marine Hospital Service has issued a quarantine against Memphis. The National Board of Health to-day ordered the removal of refugees from Memphis to Grenada, and directed that the establishment of a quarantine camp be necessary, asked that tents and rations be furnished for the refugees.

ST. LOUIS, July 23.—No case of yellow fever has developed since sending the Memphis refugees in this city up at quarantine. As a matter of safety the mill orders decided to-day that no boat or people from Memphis should be allowed to come up to the city after to-morrow. The Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, JULY 31, 1879.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

MY MOTHER'S WEDDING DAY.

'Twas morn: beneath Virginia's skies
O'er golden Summer tide,
With happy heart and beaming eyes,
My mother stood, a bride.

A hero, worthy of the name,
Stood proudly by her side,
With brow fit for the crown of fame,
And truest heart when tried.

The day was just as fair as this,
The bird's song just as sweet,
When father gave his bride a kiss,
And friends were there to greet.

If there were clouds, I know the gold
Of sunshine made them bright,
And theirs were hearts that never grew cold—
Love which no care could blight.

Long years they journeyed hand in hand,
This hero and his bride,
Till called unto the "better land,"
And then he left her side.

Within "God's acre" now he sleeps,
Amid the peaceful dead;
While she, a widow sadly weeps,
In sorrow bows her head.

The eyes once bright are dim with tears,
Her dark hair's turning gray,
And memories of those by-gone years,
Are fondly viewed each day.

Just four and thirty years have flown
Since that glad wedding day
Just twelve short hours was left to me
To walk the lonely way.

God bless my cherished mother dear,
And strengthen her, I pray;
Oh, cheer her heart, and dry the tear,
On this, her wedding day.

MERIDIAN DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: This Conference met at Lauderdale, June 27, 1879. No Bishop being present, the business of the session was ably conducted by Rev. R. J. Jones, presiding elder of the district.

From the very beginning a good religious feeling prevailed. At the close of the first public service the presence of the Holy Ghost was felt through the whole assembly, and there were several additions to the church. This state of religious awakening continued during the session, and the meetings were continued several days after the adjournment of the Conference, with good results.

The district was well represented by both ministers and laymen. The following resolutions are expressive of the sense of the Conference upon the usual points looked into on such occasions:

UPON THE SPIRITUAL CONDITION OF THE CHURCH.

Resolved, That from the information coming up from the various charges, we are of the opinion that while there are many signs of bad faith and backslidings in the church, there are very many encouraging facts respecting the spiritual condition of the church.

Resolved, That we are particularly gratified upon receiving reports of so many regular prayer and class meetings, church conferences, Bible readings, and other social meetings of the church within the bounds of the district.

SUNDAY-SCHOOLS.

Resolved, That we note with gratification the general condition of the Sunday-schools as being in an advancing state. Some of the schools are fully awake and are up with the marked improvements in the manner of making this important work most effective in the proper training and saving of souls. We recommend the introduction of books pertaining to Methodist history and polity, and the education of teachers and scholars in Methodism.

EDUCATION.

Resolved, That your committee take great pleasure and pride in recommending East Mississippi Female College to all seeking healthfulness of location, thoroughness of scholarship and economy in expenses, as second to none in the South. Located at Meridian, Miss., it is accessible by four railroads. The president, Rev. J. W. Adkisson, is assisted by a corps of well-trained and competent teachers. Great care is taken of pupils placed in their charge, and we have never seen so much attention given and success attained in the physical development of young ladies as in this college. We are satisfied that the school will continue to win on the hearts of the people, until all we claim for it will be evidenced in a widespread experience.

Resolved, That we take pleasure in calling attention to the Male High School in Enterprise, Miss., under the superintendency of Prof. Spillman. Young men here studying for the ministry are taught free of tuition.

DISTRICT PARSONAGE.

Resolved, That the Committee on District Parsonage report that there is a positive need of such a parsonage in this district. That its location should be at Meridian, Miss. That it should be procured at the earliest practicable convenience. We recommend that this Conference elect a committee of three to purchase such a parsonage, and that this committee adopt such measures as they may deem necessary for raising necessary funds, and that debt be avoided.

A paper signed by William Spillman and J. T. Heard, entitled, "A Proposed Constitution for a Widow's and Orphan's Relief Association," was read in the hearing of the Conference, and referred to a committee. The committee carefully considered the same, and recommended that the Conference adopt this or some other similar plan looking to the inauguration of this good work. The Conference concurred.

Frequent reference was made to the subject of church literature, and the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE was recommended, with other church papers, all along during the session.

Enterprise was selected as the place for the Conference next year.

WOODVILLE DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: This body assembled at Greensburg, St. Helena parish, July 11, 1879, Rev. J. A. Godfrey, P. E., in the chair.

All the traveling preachers of the district, save one (thirteen in number,) were present, with about thirty-five local preachers and lay delegates.

The average spiritual condition of the district, though the time for special efforts hail only fairly begun, was represented as improved.

The establishment of one new mission of great promise was recommended to the Annual Conference.

There were forty-four Sabbath-schools, with 1,235 scholars, represented as solely Methodist, and using, almost universally, our literature. There are a considerable number of Union schools, in which are many Methodist children.

About thirty per cent. of quarterage has been collected, and unusual hopefulness expressed in reference to other collections.

About one-half of the quarterly records were on hand and examined, and the committee approved of the newly-printed journals, for their accuracy and neatness, but disapproved them in that, being printed so precisely and accurately, the secretaries of our quarterly meetings will simply perform mechanical service, without ever educating themselves in the usages of the church, and more especially, also, because the having to provide a book for every four years, will multiply the number of books so much that it will be more difficult to preserve them."

T. D. Brame, H. C. Newsom, Rev. J. E. Jagets and G. D. Nettles were elected delegates to the Annual Conference. D. F. Vaughn and Rev. W. A. Powell alternates.

Fervent prayer meetings, an interesting love-feast, a children's meeting, and the preaching of the word, afforded to crowded houses a feast of fat things too seldom enjoyed among us. Several times the altar was crowded with penitents, strong men mingling with little children in seeking the Lord. We left the brethren, who could stay, determined to continue the meetings, and we expect to hear of good results.

An excellent paper from the committee on the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE and the Quarterly Review of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was read by Prof. D. M. Rush, chairman, setting forth these periodicals as every way worthy of patronage. The editor and managers may be congratulated upon the well deserved and increasing support of the church given to the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE. We cannot prosper without it. It deserves patronage, say the committee, because: 1. "It is a first-class family Christian newspaper." 2. "It were cheap at $2 per annum, "even though it contained only the matter of its editorials." 3. It is the organ of our church in this part of our connection, "and we are proud to see in it an equal to any other," "a safe, pure, reliable family newspaper."

There are not unmeaning compliments. We are all satisfied the committee are sincere in commending the ADVOCATE and Quarterly to our "unqualified endorsement."

I send you a transcript of part of the report of committees on Centenary College, and also a resolution with reference to the donation of President H. F. Johnson to Whitworth Female College; both ordered to be printed.

Norvilla Institute was represented as having about ninety pupils registered last scholastic year. Prof. Norwood and his accomplished Christian wife are doing excellent work for the country and church. Greensburg is justly proud of them and their seminary. The Conference was hospitably and abundantly entertained, and in some of the days to come we shall vote for Greensburg again.

The next District Conference is to be held at Jackson, La.

THOS. W. BROWN, Sec.

MOBILE DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: The District Conference of Mobile district, Alabama Conference, M. E. Church, South, convened at St. Paul's Church, Mobile, on the third instant, at nine A. M. Our Bishop was not with us. Rev. E. Wadsworth, D. D., our presiding elder, in the chair.

All the pastoral charges were represented either by those present or written reports.

We notice an improvement in the Sunday-school work. The finances of the district are in good condition. Some few reports were very encouraging with regard to the spiritual condition. The session was a quiet one; the congregations at the hours of divine service very small. We hope good results will follow. There were three pastors absent, and many of the delegates. President Massey, of Tuskegee Female College, and Rev. F. M. Peterson, of the Southern University, were with us. The following resolution was adopted:

Whereas, The proper observance of the Sabbath is indispensably necessary to all healthy, social life, and all moral and religious growth; therefore,

Resolved, That as Christian men, interested in the welfare of society and the salvation of souls, we note with grief and solicitude the growing tendency to turn the Holy Sabbath into a day simply of recreation and amusement. That as a District Conference we heartily condemn the habit of many members of churches visiting places of amusement on the Sabbath. That we urge upon pastors, official members and parents, to use all their efforts to stay this tide of evil that threatens us as a church and a people. That we heartily unite with all our sister churches in an earnest endeavor to preserve the purity of the Sabbath.

Next District Conference at Kizer Hill, Okatuppa, Miss.

Delegates to the Annual Conference: H. H. Graham, of Okatuppa, J. W. Portis, of Suggsville, R. L. Mitchell, of St. Francis Street, and H. L. Hopper, of Franklin Street.

VICKSBURG DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: The Vicksburg District Conference met in the town of Port Gibson, July 3, 1879, and continued in session two and a half days, under the presidency of Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt. The attendance was unusually large, and all the sessions characterized by the utmost freedom of discussion, pleasantness of brotherly feeling, and cheerful devotion to the great interests of the church. Reports from the several charges indicated a hopeful condition and outlook considering the general stress and depression of the times. Every work in the district has a parsonage except one, and measures are soon to be taken to supply that single deficiency. Few districts can make so favorable a parsonage exhibit.

Early in the session a committee was appointed on Quarterly Conference Journals. The committee brought in a carefully-prepared, exhaustive report, indicating all the errors in each journal. This report excited a good deal of interest, and doubtless will have a wholesome influence in quickening the secretary's skill and accuracy of recording stewards.

The Conference heard from Rev. J. A. B. Jones, president of Port Gibson Collegiate Academy, a very favorable report of the institution over which he presides.

A "Financial Plan," prepared by Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt, was adopted by the Conference, and ordered to be printed in the ADVOCATE, which I herewith enclose.

After resolutions of thanks to generous, good people of the charming little town of Port Gibson, the Conference adjourned to meet in Vicksburg next year. The following were elected delegates to the Annual Conference: R. D. Howe, T. B. Mellen, D. F. Ashford, W. L. Sibley.

MADISON, ALABAMA.

MR. EDITOR: Madison is on the Memphis and Charleston railroad, in Madison county, Ala., fifteen miles above Decatur, and ten miles from Huntsville, on the north side of the Tennessee river, in a beautiful and once very fertile valley. The lands now are exhausted by the cotton culture, but susceptible of as high a state of improvement, and at as little cost as any I ever saw. But onward we move in the same exhaustive process of raising cotton and buying provisions.

Last year the entire crop of this section was seriously injured by a drouth; and now we are just emerging from another, which will reduce the corn crop at least one-half, which, with a moderate breadth in corn, will seriously effect the country.

The condition of the church and morals of the country are as badly wasted as the lands are exhausted—nearly all the old reliable members having gone to their inheritance among the saints.

The Huntsville District Conference of the North Alabama Conference met here on the eleventh, and closed its labors on Saturday evening, the twelfth instant. Owing to the financial pressure, which never fails to effect the preachers, and the yellow fever exodus from Memphis, which created considerable alarm along this line, but few of the preachers and delegates were in attendance. However, the meeting was not a failure. The preaching was good, earnest and spiritual, and we have no doubt some good was done.

HAYNESVILLE CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA.

MR. EDITOR: I have just closed a very interesting meeting at Colquit, Haynesville circuit, Louisiana Conference, four conversions, five accessions, the church greatly revived. Bro. W. H. Lesley just closed out his ten months' school at Mt. Zion, on my circuit, had his examination last Thursday, the tenth, his scholars showed great proficiency, and reflected great credit on their instructor. The patrons well pleased. There was a large crowd out to witness the examination exercises, the speeches and compositions of the students were good, and highly appreciated by the audience. The crowd was not only entertained in a literary way, but sumptuous dinner, melons and fruit, were provided by the citizens of the community, all of which was highly appreciated. Our people believe in education, and Bro Lesley is one of our best educators.

Yours in Christ,

JOHN A. MILLER.

HOMER, LA., July 14, 1879.

TUSKEGEE STATION, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: Our third quarterly meeting for the present Conference year was held on the nineteenth and twentieth instants. On the whole, it was the best and most successful, as well as the most pleasant, meeting of the kind we have had this year. Money was raised to put a complete set of comfortable pews in the main audience room, in which borrowed seats have been used for some time past. The house of worship being in an unfinished state, has never yet been dedicated. We propose to get it ready for consecration to the Lord by the time of the Annual Conference, which is, to assemble here in December. When fully completed, according to the original design, it will be one of the most elegant and commodious church buildings in the Conference.

Rev. T. F. Mangum, our presiding elder, did some excellent preaching while among us.

John Massey, LL. D., the efficient president of our admirable female college, is actively at work canvassing for the next session. I think he will succeed. Certainly I know no institution more worthy of success, nor one among our people of which they have better reason to be proud.

I have suffered much in my own person from ill health during the present year, and my work has been feeble. I am happy to say, however, that our church here seems growing in good works, and that our people are more cheerful than for many months past. The Alabama Conference may expect a warm welcome here in December.

Obligations of Church Members.

MR. EDITOR: When persons are received into our church, and they answer, as they must, in order to their reception, in the affirmative to the question: "Will you be subject to the discipline of the church?" etc., does not the obligation they then assume include the General Rules found as section 2, of chapter 1, of our published Discipline?

If so, what is meant by that clause in the General Rules (page 30 of the Discipline) which reads as follows: "The taking such diversions as cannot be used in the name of the Lord Jesus?"

Does "the taking such diversions" mean dancing, square and round, at balls and in private; attendance upon theatrical performances, amateur and professional; horse-racing and card playing; in short, all (or, if not all, which?) of those amusements commonly styled worldly and fashionable?

We have often heard that the Methodist Church is as good a temperance organization as the Order of Good Templars, or any other organization or order professedly temperance.

If such statement is correct, is it because on page 29 of our Discipline we find as prohibited: "Drunkenness, or drinking spirituous liquors unless in cases of necessity?"

Does this shut off our members from drinking wine cider and beer, as a beverage; or, in order to come actually under the prohibition here mentioned, must a member be given to the drinking of whisky and the like to such an extent as to attain unmistakably to the character of the drunkard?

Has our General Conference ever sought to explain the rules I have mentioned? On the contrary, has not that authoritative body refused to so explain on the ground that said rules are already sufficiently explicit, and, based upon them, action can be taken against the dancers, theater-goers, drinkers, etc., in our membership?

Was not that portion of the pastoral address of the Bishops which condemns worldly amusements (see page 323 of Appendix to Discipline) put into their address by express order of the General Conference?

Having renounced "the world, the flesh and the devil," and promised to "be subject to the Discipline," is not every member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, bound to abide by the rules as understood by the highest authority in the church—i. e., by the General Conference, and as interpreted by the Bishops upon the express order of the General Conference?

Or, as some claim, have the members the right to interpret the meaning of these rules, each for himself and for herself?

ARISHA NELSON died in grand father-in-law, departed this life January 21, 1879. He was born in Carteret county, North Carolina, moved to Greene county, Alabama, about forty-two years ago, from Green he moved to Sumpter county, Alabama, being one of the first settlers. He died at the residence of the writer in Sumpter county, Alabama, aged eighty-three years, ten months and ten days. This good man has been removed from our midst, to mansions above, he enjoyed the confidence of the church and the world, just and upright as a Christian, faithful and ardent as a Christian, affectionate and tender as a father and grandfather, his loss is widely and keenly felt. His impress left deeply upon his children and grand children, and though dead yet he speaketh. He was permitted to see his three sorrowing children and most of his grandchildren in the Methodist Church South, and efficient and faithful members. A consecrated servant of Christ, USE HIM to the last. His death was by the hand of the Lord, and in full assurance of faith. He was reared by Christian parents and in early life had the religious truths of the gospel instilled into his mind, and early in the time his heart was given to God and he consecrated to his service in doing, caused Him to sweep from the path of religious duty. He attached himself to the Baptist Church at an early age, in which he lived and was an efficient and faithful member until his death. To the writer's mind his name will ever revive past flowers of pleasant recollections and happy hours.

JOSEPH PUS WALLACE.

BROTHER RICHMOND RICH died near Shorterville, Henry county, Alabama, on the first of March, 1879. He was born in Effingham county, Georgia, March 4, 1811, and moved to Henry county, Alabama, in 1837. Bro. Rich was twice married, the second time to Miss Penina Walker, who still survives him. He joined the church when quite a young man, and served her many years as class leader. He was a blessing and a comfort to the church in his efforts as only Christians can exhibit. He had for some good while said he was ready for death, would only desire that his Father's pleasure, to be met with the veil unbroken.

In the death of this aged servant of God the church has lost a warm and devoted friend. While we mourn his loss, we rejoice that he has gone where the weary are at rest. May the wife and children meet him in the glory land.

W. M. REES.

MRS. OLIVIA DUNBAR WATSON died in New Orleans, La., May 26, 1879. Born in Wilkinson county, Miss., July 3, 1815, the child of William and Roxanna Rowan, and step daughter of Rev. L. A. Reed of Louisiana Annual Conference.

Raised in the Methodist household of the Episcopal Church, and by this step mother to communicate an age when her Saviour. It was well to state this, but even many say "I left the world from Christ," but in their she was faithful. Nor did communion in had touch of the core of the old she desire distinctly that not works but Christ saves. The inspection of her past life opened the mind to a fact which surprised her. The scroll had revealed, by all her trust, and she could not reach back for even a list of one sin. Then it was her heart seemed empty and miserable. Her's was the mistake of multitudes; she tried to do what only Christ can do—cleanse the soul. The gates of eternity were in view and she feared to approach them; but as the ransom for a pardoning the word of God, there crept into her heart a faith which thrilled her through and through as Christ poured into her empty cup spiritual life. Then she saw there was one hand could reach the scroll and blot out all sin. How she exulted in the Saviour! One could almost hear the angels sing.

This faith, however, was open to the touch and free influence of fear. It centred only when the mind partially wandered, for which she was not responsible. One passage of scripture particularly fixed her thought when ill: she also failed: "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised Him from the dead, thou shalt be saved." She discerned the hidden meaning and grew strong again. Few persons ever passed away with a more vivid conception of the immense value of Christ. Her's was like old John Rowe's grip of faith. The bereaved ones have cause for joy.

JOHN MATTHEWS.

WHEREAS, In the dispensation of an all wise and kind Providence, Brother James U. Culverson has been called from our midst.

Resolved, That we the members of the Sabbath school regret the loss of one so agreeable and kind as was our Brother, yet we do not murmur, nor do we "sorrow as those who have no hope," believing that our loss is his infinite gain.

Resolved, That in this sad visitation of death in our midst, Paulding Sabbath-school has lost a universally beloved member.

Resolved, That we tender to his bereaved mother, brother and sisters our sympathies, and assure them of our prayers, and kind regards, for heaven's blessings and benedictions to be upon them, and as a token of our esteem for them we tender to the bereaved mother, and through her to all of the relations this tribute of respect, to the memory of her son who was so suddenly taken from her while in the vigor of manhood.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be furnished to the mother of the deceased brother, and to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

JAMES M. GANN,
For Committee.

HENRY W. PERRY was born August 25, 1817, in Franklin county, North Carolina, settled in Perry county, Alabama; during the year 1818, and died from a stroke of paralysis at his home in Marion, Alabama, June 7, 1879. In his early manhood he joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and devoted the remainder of his life to the service of his Master. During all his life not one charge of immorality was ever brought against him. He was a man "that feared God and eschewed evil." Warm in his attachments, unpretending in manner, true to friends, and of a noble heart, his loss will long be felt by those who knew and loved him best.

During his illness, though deprived of speech, he was frequently heard humming the tune, "I want to go home to die no more," and when some one joined him and sang the words his delighted look showed that his thoughts were on heavenly things. When asked if he was resigned to the will of God, he signified that he was.

At home he was genial and affable, and extended a generous hospitality. He was a kind husband, a kind father and an exemplary Christian.

The latter part of his life was spent in a public office of high trust, and he was back and down the case before, he maintained a spotless character. Surely he who to day can pass the ordeal of the political arena with untarnished name must have a true and noble heart. His sun set over a beautiful hill, we believe only to rise in the glorious splendor of the resurrection morn. May the God he loved take care of and ever bless the loving wife and three daughters whom he leaves behind him.

JAMES M. GANN.

JOHN WILLIAM MARVIN, infant son of D. C. and O. E. Turnipseed, was born Ballinger, Alabama, December 16, 1878, and died January 2, 1879, aged seventeen days and seven days. Sweet little Marvin, just to rest upon the faces of Papa and Mamma he could recognize them in the home above. "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord."

J. W. SOULE.

MRS. MARTHA MIMS was born in Warren county, Georgia, in the year [illegible] In early manhood she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and devoted the remainder of her life to the service of Christ. She died in the triumphs of faith, aged seventy six years. She had been a member of the church for forty three years and a professor of Christ for forty two years. In the summer of 1878 she remarked to her daughter: I am waiting. She waited faithfully for the coming of Christ. Like Moses she looked at the promised land for a Pisgah's view, and only waited for the messenger of death in order to cross over and join with the [illegible] Weather after [illegible] was a faithful follower of Christ. Her piety was not of the rushing sentimental kind, but rather partook of a constant [illegible] of the evidences of this world. She was a [illegible] and although dead she speaks as her holy example. Let [illegible] has lost one of its brightest and most [illegible] members, and the record of this life is [illegible] sacred in memory.

MRS. LUCINDA M. WALKER, wife of Mr. N. H. Walker, and daughter of Mr. [illegible] Mizell, of Claiborne parish, La., died [illegible] at the residence of her father, with whom her husband and family were temporarily living.

Sister Walker was born in this parish on the twentieth day of May, [illegible], and married to Mr. W. F. Jones in [illegible], with whom she lived happily until his death, October [illegible]. She was married to her now bereaved husband March 6, [illegible], and these sweet companions, they lived together and separated by the ruthless hand of death.

Sister Walker leaves an aged father, a beloved mother, an affectionate husband and seven motherless children, who, though wearing overcoat of loss, rejoice in the love that her's is [illegible]. The subject of this notice entered religious life [illegible] the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, [illegible] a number of years ago, and lived a consistent member of the same till the Great Head of the Church transferred her membership to the Church Triumphant. She was an affectionate daughter, a consoling sister, a devoted wife and a kind and [illegible] mother. Indeed she performed [illegible] the [illegible] varied relations of life according to her lights of religious obligations.

After many months of [illegible] she died perfectly resigned. Before her death, to which she called her family around her and gave to them minute instructions, particularly relating to their religious welfare. Her only regret at the approaching dissolution seemed to be her separation from her children. She left them under the most distressing circumstances, she earnestly exhorted them all to meet her in heaven. This they will do. As hope was a practical exemplification of the power of Christianity. May the benedictions of a kind Heavenly Father rest on all the bereaved, and especially on those of her little children, that they all may meet her in heaven.

THOS. J. REES.

JOHN W. FRANKS was born January [illegible], 1838. On the seventh of July, 1859, he was united in marriage to Miss Mary Harrison, in Choctaw county, Miss. He was converted and joined the Methodist Church in Wesson, Miss., under the ministry of Rev. W. E. Ballard, in [illegible]. After a long and painful illness Bro. Franks died June [illegible], 1879, in his residence in Wesson, Miss., in hope of everlasting life in heaven. He left a wife and several children, whom we commend to the care of affectionate friends and to the sympathy and prayers of the church.

W. H. LEWIS.

BENJAMIN J. BARRIER, son of John and Nancy Barrier, was born in Noxubee [illegible], Miss., on the third day of December, 1837. He was married to Miss M. A. Kelly, an accomplished young lady of Yazoo county, Miss., about [illegible] years ago, and died at Camp Ground on the fourth of June, 1879, aged forty one years and six months.

He professed religion and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, about twenty years ago under the ministry of the Rev. J. A. Vance, of the Mississippi Conference, and remained a faithful member until death severed his connection with the Church Militant and transplanted his happy spirit to the Church Triumphant.

Brother Barrier was a faithful Steward for many years—a Steward who felt a deep interest in the welfare of the Church, the pastor and his family. His heart and purse were always open to the wants of the Church and her ministry. His house was a hospitable home for the weary pilgrims.

Brother Barrier was a quiet man; ministerial demonstrations made but few public demonstrations of his religious enjoyments. But he enjoyed religion and loved to talk the old story around the family altar. Brother Barrier suffered for many years with that fearful disease, dyspepsia. He was advised to visit the coast in hopes of recuperating; but, alas! he died far from home, in the midst of strangers. Brother Barrier was truly a good man.

He was a peaceable citizen and neighbor, a loving, devoted husband and father, exhibiting in his attentions to the comforts of his family. But, better than all, I believe, he was a true Christian gentleman. Consequently we sorrow not as others having no hope. The writer was his pastor for two years, and knew him well for many years before. He keenly feels the loss of such a friend. But our loss is his gain.

OUR ONE LIFE.

'Tis not for man to tell how life is brief
And sin is long.
Our age is but the fall'ng of a leaf,
A dropping tear.
We have no time to sport away the hours:
All must be earnest in a world like ours.

Not many lives, but only one have we—
One, only one.
How sacred should that one life ever be—
That narrow span!
Day after day filled up with blessed toil,
Hour after hour still bringing in new spoil.

Our being is no shadow of thin air—
No vacant dream—
No fable of the things that never were,
But only seem.
'Tis full of meaning, as of mystery,
Though strange and solemn may that meaning be.

Our sorrows are no phantom of the night—
No idle tale;
No cloud that floats along a sky of light,
On summer gale.
They are the true realities of earth.
Friends and companions even from our birth.

O life below—how brief and poor and sad!
One heavy sigh.
O life above—how long, how fair and glad!
Ay, endless joy.
On, to be home while daily dying here!
On, to begin the living in yon sphere!

Afghan Poetry.

BY GEORGE M. DOWLE.

Like all oriental races, the Afghans, savage, brutal, false and drunken as they usually are, have a rich and flowery fancy. The Afghan is to outward view the least prepossessing, the roughest and most ignoble of all human objects in the East; not superior, indeed, to the shirkhizes of the hordes of the nomad Uzbegs of Kheva. He is partly itself; full of the grossest desires and most animal-like propensities. Yet there dwells in this corrupt and benighted heart a deep and strong love for poetry. In this respect, indeed, the Afghan more resembles the Arab than any of his brother Asiatics. Like the Arab, he is nomadic, and his chief physical virtue is his exceeding skill in horsemanship. It has been well said that even the Arabic laws are poems; every daily circumstance and habit make the Arab a romantic and picturesque figure; and he clothes every surrounding object with the lurid fancies of a most exuberant imagination. As for the Afghan, he has this ardent soul, and it is constantly kindled by the wild and splendid landscapes, the inspiring scenery of his native land. The rugged crag and passes, the flower-laden vales, the wealth of parasite as of tropic vegetation, the dashing and crashing streams that fling down the mountain sides, add to the mystic and historic memories of the country to make him, with all his rough savagery, a dreamer and a songster. It is not surprising that, under these conditions, we find the Afghan to be not only poetic, but reflective, and even philosophic; nor that there should have arisen in Afghanistan bards, like Hafiz in Persia, who have interpreted in gorgeous verse the feelings, passions, affections and reflections of the people.

To examine the poems which lie, not hidden away in the records of a half-forgotten literature, but deep in the hearts of the nomad tribes, and which find utterance in the songs of the lonely wife who sits awaiting her brigand spouse by the banks of some wild stream, with the pines towering green above her and her sacred tethered at her side, is to find often the very spirit of poetry of the most exalted kind. Expecting to find, among this people poetry, if at all, of the most sensuous kind, gross in thought and coarse in expression, you come in amaze upon such a verse as this, which breathes a Christianity as broad as the homes of saints:

Should the [illegible] of a [illegible] be thirsty
It will become [illegible] the [illegible] and the dry earth full.
Should [illegible] give [illegible] a cold [illegible] in a [illegible] house,
Verily, it will be [illegible] [illegible] in eternity.

It is the Afghan rendering of "Give, and ye shall receive;" and such a sentiment betrays the kinship of this rude race with mankind. Such things are sung by robbers, to whom to kill and thieve are a daily pastime.

The Afghan, too, philosophizes, grows sad in his poetry, becomes a cynic, and mournfully sings of the faithlessness there is in the world, and the capriciousness of fortune.

"Fortune," he says, musingly,

"Is like a potter's [illegible] that breaketh,
Many [illegible] and [illegible] it created and destroyed.
Every stone and clod for the world that may be looked upon,
Are all skulls—Some the crown of kings, and some all beggars.

But these examples, showing the reflective and contemplative nature of the Afghan poets, do not do justice to the luxuriance of their fancy. Like the poets of most races, a favorite theme with them is love. But it is surprising to see how free from sensuality or low sensuousness of thought are the poems of this dissolute people. They are mostly as pure and lofty in thought, as delicate in expression, as the melancholy sonnets that Michael Angelo addressed to Victoria Colonna. They testify to a love as noble as it is deep; and in plaintively bewail that which is disastrous or interrupted. Their love poems, too, are warm, often with a religious glow. The Afghan believes that the Divine soul permeates nature; that He is "all beauty, sweet music, gentle breezes, [illegible] flowers;" beauty, in whatever form, recalls to the Afghan mind His omnipresence. The poet sings of his love, and says:

"The face of the beloved, the sun, and the morn are all three one.
Her stature, the cypress, and the pine are all three one.
I have not any need of honey or of sugar,
For the lips of the beloved, honey, and sugar are all three one.
When I recline on my couch, without her by my side,
Fire, thorns, and this couch, are all three one."

Again, with all the wealth of simile, which distinguishes cultivated poets west of the Caucasus, he compares his love to a falcon, sweeping upon him, and stealing away his heart:

"Her eyes are two falcons, and her waving locks
Her ring-feathers.
The falcon pounced, and carried away the pigeon of my heart.
The curls of the pagan beauty became a cord about my neck."

The Afghan bard is as fond of making fables with a moral as Esop or La Fontaine. He loves to inculcate a lesson; and his lessons are always good, always moral—it may even be said always Christian. He is grave even in his quaintest images, his most eager flights of fancy; he says nothing, apparently, out of mere sport; the airy nothingness of such lyric poetry as we find sometimes among the French, and even among the Germans, does not engage his invention. We never find a rollicking drinking song, even though it be that the Afghan drinks heavily and hoggishly; nor any light, graceful love songs, merely eulogistic of physical charms. We cannot tell what influence he may have had, during long periods, in teaching the Afghan people; it seems, however, that they must have been taught something by bards who have given them lessons in allegories like this:

[illegible] the [illegible] this: From the right of [illegible]
In what manner hath the [illegible] been [illegible]?
[illegible] nature's law, to the sight of the [illegible]
Appeareth only his daughter of [illegible].
The two [illegible] had a [illegible] together.
In a night [illegible] [illegible] owned its own [illegible].
There is [illegible] in the very insignificance of [illegible].
[illegible] [illegible] that the little [illegible] should [illegible] the [illegible].

It has only been recently that this poetic literature of the Afghans has been by the patient labor of several Orientalists transferred to the western world; we have yet but a few brief glimpses of it here and there. But enough has been divulged to prove that there is much intellectual wealth hidden in its obscure archives; and, even after such few examples as I have given, it may be concluded that this most depraved, perhaps, of all Asiatic people have a literature as noble in thought and fancy as are those of Persia and Hindostan.—Christian Union.

Blessings of Sunlight.

There are few blessings which we enjoy here upon this earth—that is, material blessings—but come to us through the agency of sunlight. Throughout your whole existence you will find, by following the same reasoning, that your most trifling act, your most thoughtless movement, has derived its origin from the sun. A blow with the fist, a breath, a sigh, can be exactly estimated in rays of sunshine. Whether you trifle or whether you work, to make such an effort, you have been obliged to expend so much strength, and that strength had already been stored in you by the sun, through the agency of a series of transformations.

Your clothing is all borrowed from him. He has spun every thread of your linen, and fed every fiber of your cloth and flannel. He either bleaches it snowy white, or dies it purple and scarlet with indigo or madder. He furnishes leather for useful service, and furs and finery for parade. He gives you beddings whether you recline in luxury between feather down and wool, or stretch your weary limbs on straw, chaff, Indian corn husks, sea-weed, or on even a naked plank, as is the lot of not a few, it is the sun who gives both one and the other. What do we receive from regions in the immediate neighborhood of either pole where the sun is not? We receive just nothing. We cannot even go to them. The absence of the sun bars out progress with an impenetrable zone of ice and snow.

In like manner your butter and cheese are merely solid forms of sunshine absorbed by the pastures of Holland or Cambridgeshire. Your sugar is only crystalized sunshine from Jamaica. Your nutmeg, quinine, and coffee, and spice, are contaminants of solar light, hence shelves the surface of China, Peru and the Indian Archipelago. It is the sun's action which sends you to sleep in opium, poisons you in strychnine and cures in the doctors of tonic pills. You taste the sun in your spices, eat him in your meats, and drink him even in your simplest beverage, water. Without the sun no blood could flow in your veins; your whole corporal vitality, your very bodily life is the result of the overflowings of his bounty. Nor is that all we owe to our great central luminary. The physical forces with which we are acquainted—heat, light, electricity, magnetism, chemical affinity, and motion—assuming each other's form and action—believed in all probability to be one in their common birth and origin, are direct emanations from the sun. But how grand and beautiful is the theory that all material blessings here below come to us entirely and alone from the sun! Its simplicity and unity are consistent with the attributes of the Maker.—Scientific American.

There was once a mayor of an ancient borough who was a stanch teetotaller, and well known to be so. He attended the festivities promoted by a neighboring borough, and somebody who knew the mayor well put a glass of milk-punch close to his plate. The mayor saw the glass; he could not resist it; he took it up and quaffed it off, and set it down, saying: "Lord, what a cow!"

Religious Intelligence.

—The English dissenters have been trying for years to get an acknowledgment by Parliament of their right, which they claim as a right, to an equal share with the people of the Established Church in the parish burying grounds. The grounds, they say, belong to the people not to any one church. Mr. Osborne Morgan's Burial bill answers their views; but the clergy have been strong enough to prevent its passage. Six measures, most of which try to evade the issue, have been introduced in Parliament during the present session. One introduced by Mr. Monk, a liberal, provided for the addition of unconsecrated ground to the parish grave yards, in which nonconformists might be interred. This was regarded as insulting, and was summarily and decisively rejected. The current of public opinion is beginning to run in favor of granting the full demands of the nonconformists.

—In the town of St. Albans, England, Congregationalism has had a very interesting history. It dates from the time of the Commonwealth. Although the Puritans in that locality suffered from ecclesiastical tyranny, they did not succumb, for it appears that in 1672 a license was taken out for "the house of Robert Pemberton, St. Albans, for a Congregational meeting." Under the Toleration act, Congregationalists and Presbyterians worshiped together, until the Arian sentiment spread among the Presbyterians in the last century, when the Congregationalists withdrew and became a separate and flourishing society. This society has been fortunate in having eminent men in its communion. Doddridge, Brown, Watson, Rogers, Bacon, and Bassano, are names of which any church might be proud. It is now proposed to make an appeal to the English Congregationalists to replace the old chapel in Spicer street by a fine edifice, to be known as the "Doddridge Memorial Church."

—The returns of the school boards throughout England indicate that purely secular schools are loosing ground. In 1870 the number of such schools reported was sixty-eight, it is now fifty four. Other facts show that many parishes which began with secular schools have abandoned them. A glance at the regulations of the different boards, in the matter of religious services, reveals some curious differences. At Milton Damerel, in Devonshire, they "sing a hymn and pray at the close of the school." At one place in Cornwall they "open school with prayer," at another they have "reading the bible only." At Worlington, in Devonshire, "the master commences the school with reading and explaining the scripture for thirty minutes, after which the master engages in prayer for five minutes;" while at Woolfardisworthy, in the same county, "the school is commenced and concluded with Morning and Evening Prayer of the Church of England."

—Since 1875 the Arabs have been expecting the downfall of the Turkish empire; and in December of that year the Sheik of Derejah, who calls himself the Arabian Messiah, issued an appeal, in which he arraigned the Turks for their faithlessness to the fundamental idea of Islam—the emancipation of the world from unbelief—and declared that salvation must come to Islam from Arabia. The result of this proclamation was a political organization to free Arabia from foreign rule. A recent letter from Aleppo says this movement is now spreading rapidly, and, at the beginning of this year, 60,000 persons were enrolled as members. Even in Mecca the majority of the inhabitants belong to this society; and in three weeks' time the whole body can be assembled, armed and disciplined for action.

DICK WHITTINGTON'S CHURCH.—The very extraordinary event of the seventeenth centenary of the foundation of a church, is to be celebrated at St. Peter's upon-Cornhill, London, on the twenty-seventh instant, when the Lord Mayor and Corporation will attend in state, and the Primate will preach. A slab preserved in the church claims it as the first Christian Church founded in London. The legendary founder was Lucius, the first Christian King, A. D. 179. It is said to have remained the Metropolitan Church of the kingdom until the coming of St. Augustine. The patronage of the rectory was held by Sir Richard Whittington, who conveyed it in 1411 to the Lord Mayor and Commonalty of London, in whose patronage it has remained. The old church was destroyed by the great fire, and the present edifice erected in 1684.

—The arrangements for the Conference of the Evangelic Alliance, to be held at Basle, from August 31 to September 7, inclusive, have been announced. There will be a general reception of delegates on the evening of the first day, and on subsequent days reports will be presented on the state of Protestantism in different countries, and addresses will be made by distinguished members of Protestant churches from all part of the world. Among the English clergymen who have signified their purpose to attend are the Rev. Dr. Stoughton, the Rev. E. S. Bligh, Canon Battersby, the Rev. Dr. Murray Mitchell, and the Rev. Dr. Pope.

—In a letter of June 18, Dr. Dollinger replies to Dr. Newman and declares that the Cardinal owes his honors at Rome to the papal recognition of his commanding influence as a spiritual leader among the educated English, and to the fact that he is the most precious and brilliant acquisition made by the church since the reformation. Notwithstanding all this, Dr. Dollinger affirms that the Cardinal has not escaped denunciation, and that he was obliged to send his most intimate friend to Rome to oppose the attempt made to put his Apologia on the Index Expurgatorius. His conspicuous personality, rather than an approval of his opinions, has forced recognition from the Romish Hierarchy.

—At a Synod of the Old Catholics of Germany, recently held at Bonn, Bishop Reinkens reported that, while the movement had not increased in numbers during the past year, its reforming ideas had obtained a wider recognition. But little outward progress can be noted during the last four years. Twelve clerical and forty-six lay delegates were present; and the principal business of the session was the establishment of a pension fund for the clergy. Two students of theology are preparing at Bonn, besides a Greek Catholic, and several offers from eligible priests have been declined for lack of means to support them.

—From reports read at the Conference of the National Society, recently held in London, it appears that the operation of the education act has not interferred with the schools of the Established Church. The figures indicate a very extensive work. In nine years £1,258,193 has been expended in building schools, and the subscription list has risen to £113,212. School accommodations are afforded to 2,352,749 children, and the average attendance is 1,386,029. The work is carefully managed, and in point of expense compares very favorable with that of the secular school boards.

—The pilgrimage of Christiana and her sons, from the familiar story of John Bunyan, was recently represented at Nottinghill, England, by the family of Mr. and Mrs. George McDonald. The principal characters in this little drama of Christian experience are Christiana, her four sons, Mercy and Greatheart. The spirit of the original was fully embodied throughout; in most cases Bunyan's language was used; and the story was set vividly before the audience.

—A colossal bronze statue of Dr. Livingstone, the African traveler, has been unveiled in George Square, Glasgow. The statue represents the missionary standing by the side of a broken palm tree, over which he has thrown his cloak. He holds in his left hand an open Bible, while in his right, which rests upon the broken tree, is the undress cap, with the well-known band, which he wore in all his journeyings. The attitude is that of a man addressing a gathering.

—The Rev. J. L. Wyatt, who has lately returned from Tinnevelly, reports that eighteen thousand Hindoos have joined the Christian Church within the last year. The most peculiar feature in this stirring of the heathen mind has been the part taken in it by the native women. They have been veritable missionaries, forming themselves into guilds, and spreading the knowledge of the truth from village to village.

—In Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, regular Chinese services are held in Dr. Damon's Presbyterian Church. The Rev. Sit Moon generally preaches to a large company of Chinese on Sunday evenings. He is a clear-headed, energetic preacher. "Just as I am," and many other hymns, are sung in the Chinese language by the congregation.

—By the death of the Rev. T. S. Williamson, at St. Peter, Minn., June 23, a valuable Christian worker was lost. He was sent as a missionary physician to the Sioux Indians in 1831 by the A. B. C. F. M. He escaped the Sioux massacre in 1862, and remained with a remnant of the tribe on a reservation in Dakota. The work of his last years was a translation of the Bible in the Dakota language.

—The company appointed for the revision of the Authorized Version of the Old Testament finished their fifty-third session on Friday afternoon at the Jerusalem Chamber. Mr. Gladstone was among the members present. The company were engaged upon the second revision of the Psalms, which they carried to the end of Psalm xliv.

—There is a good deal of commotion in Scotland owing to rumors of plenty of heresy in the colleges of the Free Church. Prof. Robertson Smith's case is not yet disposed of by the Free Church Assembly.

—The Rev. W. F. Stevenson, of the Irish Presbyterian Church, states that there are about 100,000 persons connected with the Christian Churches in India, China and Japan, besides 200,000 children receiving a Christian education.

—Pastor Chiniquy, of Montreal, recently celebrated the Lord's Supper in a congregation of one hundred and thirty converts from Roman Catholicism, of whom seventy four were admitted to the sacrament for the first time.

—In a sermon recently delivered in Westminster Abbey, the Bishop of Manchester praised the exquisite and finished acting of the Comedie Francaise, but regretted in the interests of morality that the parts assumed by those accomplished actors were so compromising in purpose and thought.

—The revival reported in the Presbyterian mission at Ourumiah, in Persia, continues. In three villages two hundred recent converts are reported.

—The General Synod of the Reformed Church has elected the Rev. Dr. William Ormiston, of New York, as Vedder lecturer for 1880.

—Two Baptist missionaries were to sail from England on the twenty-fifth of April for the new mission on the Congo River.

—The Wesleyan Sunday-school Union of England has finally determined to adopt the International Lessons.

—British Columbia, which was for twenty years in one Episcopal Diocese, under Bishop Hills, has been divided into four dioceses. The new sees are those of Vancouver, New Westminster, and New Caledonia.

—The first collection of Peter's pence ever made publicly in the churches of Rome, Italy, was taken up on the first Sabbath in February by order of the Pope.

—A prominent feature in Henry Varley's new tabernacle in Melbourne, Australia, will be a large coffee house, where eatables will be furnished at a little over cost price. The whole edifice will cost about $100,000.

—There are four Catholic bishoprics in this country now vacant.

Our Young People.

JOHNNIE'S OPINION OF GRANDMOTHERS.

Grandmothers are very nice folks.
They beat all the mothers in creation.
They let a chap do as he likes,
And don't worry about cleanliness.

I'm sure I can't see it at all,
What a poor fellow ever could do
For apples, and pennies, and cakes
Without a grandmother to go to.

Grandmothers have muffins for tea,
And pies, a whole row, in the cellar;
And they're apt (if they know it in time)
To make chicken pie for a fellow.

And if he be bad now and then,
And makes a great racket or noise,
They only look over their specs,
And say, "Ah, those boys will be boys."

"Life is only so short at the best,
Let the children be happy to-day.
Then they look for a while at the sky,
And the hill that are far, far away."

Quite often, as twilight comes on,
Grandmothers sing hymns very low,
To themselves as they rock by the fire,
About heaven, and when they shall go.

And then, a boy stopping to think,
Will find a hot tear in his eye,
To know what will come at the last
For grandmothers all have to die.

I wish they could stay here and pray
For a boy needs their prayers every night.
Some boys more than others, I guess,
Such as I am—a wonderful sight.

Dixey's Six Cents.

A short time ago a pale-faced little girl walked hurriedly into a bookstore in Annasburg and said to the man serving at the counter: "Please, sir, I want a book that's got 'Suffer little children to come unto me,' in it; and how much is it, sir? and I am in a great hurry."

The shop-man bent down and dusted his spectacles. "And suppose I haven't the book you want, what then, my dear?"

"Oh, sir, I shall be so sorry; I want it so!" and the little voice trembled at their being a chance of disappointment.

The kind shop-man took the chilly hand of his small customer in his own. "Will you be sorry sad without the book? and why are you in such a hurry?"

"Well, sir, you see, I went to school on Sunday, when Mrs. West, who takes care of me, was away; and teacher read about a Good Shepherd, who said those words; and about a beautiful place where he takes care of his children, and I want to go there. I'm so tired of being where there is nobody to care for a little girl like me, only Mrs. West, who says I'd be better dead than alive."

"But why are you in such a hurry?"

"My cough's getting so bad now, sir, and I want to know all about Him before I die; it'ud be strange to see Him and not know Him. Besides, if Mrs. West knew I was here, she'd take away the six cents I've saved, running messages, to buy the book with, so I'm in a hurry to be served."

The bookseller wiped his glasses very vigorously this time, and lifting a book from off a shelf, he said: "I'll find the words you want, my little girl, come and listen." Then he read the words of the loving Saviour (Luke 18:16—get your Bibles and find the place children)—and told her how this Good Shepherd had got a home all light and rest and love, prepared for those who love Him and serve Him.

"Oh, how lovely!" was the half breathless exclamation of the eager little buyer.

"And he says, 'Come.' I'll go with Him. How long do you think it may be, sir, before I see Him?"

"Not long, perhaps," said the shop keeper, turning away his head. "You shall keep the six cents, and come here every day, while I read you some more out of this Book."

Thanking him, the small child hurried away. To-morrow came, and another to-morrow, and many days passed, but the little girl never came to hear about Jesus again. One day a loud voiced, untidy woman came into the shop, saying Dixey's dead! She died rambling about some Good Shepherd, and she said you was to have these six cents for the mission-box at school. As I don't like to keep dead men's money, here it is," and she ran out of the shop. The cents went into the box, and when the story of Dixey was told so many followed her example with their cents, that at the end of the year "Dixey's cents," as they were called, were found to be still right to send out a missionary to China, to bring stranger sheep to the Good Shepherd.

The Clam-Shell Preacher.

H. Clay Trumbull, editor of the Sunday-School Times, gives the following pleasant reminiscence of the late Dr. Beadle:

There was a mission school in Hartford, in a garret room of a hickory building, in the earlier days of such schools in this country. It was what the English would call a "ragged-school," made up of boys and girls of the very lowest class in the community, out of homes of squalor and of vice along the river banks, in one of the poorer quarters of that city. It was not an easy matter to catch and hold the attention of that motley assemblage. There was rarely a visitor who was equal to the emergency. But Dr. Beadle won the eyes and ears of all who were there when first he came to that school. Standing in front of the superintendent's desk, before the school closed for the day, he held up a common fresh water clam-shell and called out, "Boys, what is that?"

"A clam-shell," cried a hundred voices.

"Yes, it's a clam shell—a rough, coarse, clam shell; just such a shell as you would pick up any day by the bank of the river, or back in the country by a brook in the woods."

Then turning the shell quickly in his hand, he showed the other valve, beautifully polished, its iridescent colors reflecting the light attractively.

"And what is that, boys?" he said.

"That's a clam-shell, too," was the answer.

"Yes; but see how much prettier this side is. What makes the difference?"

"It's been rubbed down," said one.

"It's been smoothed off," said another.

"It's been polished up," said a third.

"Yes, that's it. And boys, do you know that's just what we are trying to do with you in this Sunday school? We've brought some of you in here as rough as the other side of the clam-shell; and now we are trying to rub you down, to smooth you off, to polish you up, so that you'll shine like this side of the shell. This polishing business is hard work, boys, and it takes time; but it pays."

Then he pressed home the need of soul-polishing in words which were never forgotten in that room. Dr. Beadle was thenceforth known by those boys as "the clam-shell man;" and they always gave him a hearty welcome in the school room, or as they met him from time to time in the street. Many of them were more willing to be rubbed down and smoothed off in consequence of his suggestive words then and later; and some of them came finally to have a character which reflected beautifully the rays of the Sun of Righteousness. There were boys from that mission school to meet Dr. Beadle in heaven as he went home in glory; and others of them are still living as polished shafts in God's earthly temple—polished after the similitude of a palace.

The Muddy Penny.

When I was a boy a circumstance happened which I shall never forget. As I was playing in the streets of the large city where I lived, I saw a little boy, younger than myself, who seemed to be in great distress. His eyes were very much swelled by crying, and his loud sobs first attracted my attention.

"What is the matter?" I inquired.

"Why—why, I've lost my penny, and mother will whip me!" he replied, and he burst anew into tears.

"Where did you lose it?"

"I dropped out of my hand, and rolled right there into the gutter."

"Poor little fellow!" I thought, as I really sympathized with him, and tried to help him to find his lost treasure.

The boy brushed away his tears with his arm, and his countenance brightened with hope as he saw me roll up my coat-sleeve, and thrust my hand into the gutter. How intently did he watch each handful as it came out freighted with the mud and pebbles and pieces of rusted iron! Perhaps the next would bring out his penny. At last I found it.

"O, I am so glad!" I hear the little reader say. "And how glad you must have been, too! Now you could dry up the little boy's tears, and make his face bright and his heart happy. And he would skip and run all the way home without the fear of his mother's displeasure."

But, dear children, listen to the end; and while I know it will make you sad, and perhaps bring a tear to your eyes, it may do you good for a lifetime. I kept the little boy's penny!

As soon as I felt it in my hand, all covered with mud as it was, I forgot all the lessons I had learned at home and in the Sunday school. I forgot about God, that His eyes were looking right down on me. The wicked one entered into me, as you know he did once into Judas, when for money he betrayed his blessed Saviour. I sold my honor, my good feelings and my truthfulness, all for a penny.

I searched a little longer, after I had washed it and contrived to hide it; and then putting on a sad face, told the little boy that I could not find it—that there was no use in looking any longer for it.

O, how the big tears ran down his face, as with disappointed look he turned away. How mean I felt! I felt guilty; and well I might, for I had greatly broken three of God's commandments. I had coveted; that led me to steal; and then in regular order to lie, to cover up all. Alas! where one sin leads to!

Many years have gone by since that wicked act. Since then I have asked God to pardon me for that and a good many other sins I have committed; and though I love my Saviour, and hope that in His mercy the sins of my youth and of my after years will not be remembered against me, yet I can never blot out of memory's page the dark spot which that muddy penny has imprinted upon it.

WORDS SWEARING.—The Sabbath school in Rockville was assembled for their monthly concert. The lesson was about swearing, and when the children had repeated their verses, the minister rose to talk to them.

"I hope, dear children," he said, "that you will never let your lips speak profane words. But now I want to tell you about a kind of swearing, which I heard a good woman speak about not long ago. She called it a wooden swearing. It's a kind of swearing that many people beside children are given to, when they are angry. Instead of giving vent to their feelings in oaths, they slam the doors, kick the chairs, stamp on the floor, throw the furniture about, and make all the noise they possibly can. 'Isn't this just the same as swearing?' said she. 'It's just the same kind of feeling exactly, only they do not like to say those awful words; but they force the furniture to make the noise, and so I call it 'wooden swearing.' I hope, dear children, that you will not do any of this kind of swearing either. It is better to let alone wooden swearing, and all other kinds of swearing.—The Little Christian.

A legal gentleman met a brother lawyer on a Court street one day last week and the following conversation took place: "Well, Judge, how is business?" "Dull, dull; I am living on faith and hope." "Very good, but I have got past you, for I'm living on charity."

Self in Religion.

The care of one's own soul is, of course, the first thing. A man must by all means save himself. Religion begins at home, and he who does not take heed to himself is in no condition to be helpful to others. But are there not many who rarely take thought about any but themselves? Theirs is a life of self examination, of introspection, and of meditation upon their moods and feelings. Often they fall into morbid states of mind, question their acceptance with God, and spend their whole time in brooding over their doubts and fears. They are so entirely occupied and absorbed with themselves that they have utterly neglected the outward fruits of faith. This is a phase of religious selfishness, and one that leads to manifold evils. The cure for the depressed spirits, and for unrest of soul, is in greater activity in the work of Christ. Instead of dwelling upon their own inward troubles, if they would forget themselves in the effort to benefit others, they would become cheerful and happy Christians. The fixed remance of self is the cause of their gloom and the source of their disquietude. There can be no healthy experience apart from zealous, unselfish labor for the welfare of others.

There is a class of believers who are solely intent upon what they call religious enjoyment. The greatest usefulness is not the object, but it is rather to do that which yields the greatest amount of pleasure. They seek out the preaching that pleases them best, without regard to the duty of sustaining their own church, and encouraging their own pastor. The prayer meetings where they are most needed, and the feeble Sunday-schools that most demand their help, are passed by. Where the tide is highest, and where the conditions of a joyous service are most favorable, there they are sure to be. What they may do for others, or for the weak places, is secondary to what may be done for them, or for the gratification of their tastes and desires. Such people seem to have no deep and serious convictions of personal obligation. The church, ministry and means of grace are for them, while nothing is required of them as Christians but to range in the richest pastures, to enjoy themselves, and leave all the hard work and self-denial to others. They are determined to have a good time, while they leave the work of Christ in the world to take care of itself. They receive all, but give back nothing in return. Everything is for them, while they owe nothing to Him who came into the world to save them. Such a religious life as this is necessarily a barren one. Whatever the experience may seem to be, it is both shallow and deceptive. The salt of self-denial is lacking, and the strength and robustness which come of sacrifice is wanting. The selfish pursuit of pleasure, of pleasurable excitement, or of personal ease and gratification in religion, brings nothing but barrenness of soul, and may end in final shipwreck.

A man's prayers, especially in secret, are the expression of his inmost thoughts and desires. How narrow the scope of our intercessions and supplications! In the pulpit, in the prayer meeting, in the family, the range is too generally limited to ourselves. To go further is even regarded as out of place, and a serious incongruity. How it is with us in secret prayer must be left to each one's conscience. Is the pleading for missions, for the country, for the church, as earnest and importunate as for our own spiritual and temporal welfare? While prayer is one of the main educating influences of the Christian's character, it is also the utterance of the hidden man of the heart. It is doubtless often the case that self overshadows all other objects in prayer. It is first, and last, and midst. To sink self out of sight while agonizing for blessings upon others, and for the outpouring of the Spirit upon the whole church, may not be a rare occurrence with some, but is it the common experience? We would fain get much out of God for ourselves, but are we equally in earnest in our intercessions for Heaven's blessings upon distant and benighted people? A man may feel that all his prayer is needed for himself, but if he allows self thus to dominate his devotions he will gather little profit from them.

It is reasonable that a Christian should study how to save himself, and that assured acceptance with God should be a great joy to him. But if he has escaped from the wreck, what of those who are left behind? Shall he rejoice all the same, and leave them to their fate? The Christian who has not great sorrow and heaviness of heart for those who are without Christ is simply a deluded monster. And yet self may so assert its baneful power that we become comparatively indifferent. Not wholly unconcerned, it may be, but it is not the absorbing interest, pity and love which ought to stir the soul. There are those who rest complacently in the persuasion that they are safe, while neither heart nor purse are open to the multitudes that perish.

Self in religion is the last place where we would naturally expect to find it. And yet here it is as a serpent coiled in God's holiest bowers, and as a worm at the root of the tree of life. Its hideous form lurks in our very devotions, and its repulsive visage looks out upon us from some of the most spiritual aspects of the religious life. This old leaven of the carnal mind must be purged out. A higher and better type of religion must be sought and attained, in which to live is Christ, and in which all that is unseemly gives place to a self-denying love. Religion ought to exclude selfishness from society, business and worldly affairs, but selfishness in religion itself is something so paradoxical and so surprising as to be almost incredible. We have tried to uncover and exhibit the fact. The application must be left to every man's conscience.

The London Quarterly Review.

MR. EDITOR: I have been enjoying the perusal of the great Wesleyan Review for July, and as that work is not much circulated in this country, your readers may not object if I give them a taste of it. It contains seven substantial articles, besides literary notices, which are excellent: Clark's Foreign Theological Library; Egypt; The Supernatural in Nature; Moral Evil; An Editor's Portfolio; The Hauhaus in New Zealand; The Buddhist Nirvana.

The first paper is very valuable. Ministers and theological students will find it of great interest. Very few can procure all the translations from the German and other tongues which teem forth from the Edinburgh press—this article will guide judiciously in the choice. The closing paragraphs are so suggestive, and so well adapted to our meridian and latitude, as well as to Great Britain, that I must solicit space for them. The Review says:

"Every one who considers the subject must be struck by the contrast between English and Continental theological literature.

"It would be impossible in this country to find a market for such works as are constantly pouring from the press in Germany, and even in France. No one there who has anything which he considers worth publishing has any hesitation in sending it forth. Of course a great deal of the literature is ephemeral, but a fair portion lives. He would be a daring publisher who in this country should adventure such a thesaurus as Herzog's Encyclopædia, which is now appearing in a second edition. In France it is not uncommon to find not only modern reprints of the fathers, but also modern translations of the fathers in extenso. It is evident that the theology-reading public is far greater on the Continent than with us. The ministers alone form a considerable constituency, and these have undergone a far more thorough and systematic training in theology than is common in this country.

"Theology occupies a very subordinate place in the curriculum of universities, among us compared with its position in Germany.

"There it is much more on a level with the other branches of academical training. The field is regularly mapped out, and professors are assigned to the several departments. The chairs of theology and its related subjects rank with those of classics and science. Oriental philology is thoroughly taught.

"All this points to the much more complete training of the ministry in Germany. Scotland is the only part of Great Britain which approaches Germany in this respect. All honor to national tradition, which has always reckoned scholarship and learning among the essential requisites of the Christian teacher. No question is more important in its bearing on the future of Christianity than that of the training of the ministry. If no one would be allowed to practice in medicine or law without the credentials of adequate qualifications, far less should this be possible in the cure of souls. If it is lawful to learn from an enemy, we may be admonished by the practice of the Romish Church. However narrow and exclusive, the training of its priests, they are, at least, well versed in the technicalities of their calling.

"Until lately, the English Church was the most backward in this respect. Well drilled in the classics or mathematics, its ministers were left to pick up theological knowledge as best they could. Strenuous efforts are now being made by the establishment of colleges like King's, Highbury, Litchfield, Chichester, Cuddesdon and Lampeter, to supply the deficiency.

"Nonconformists have excelled the English Church on this point. Their deficiency, owing to scanty means, has rather been in breadth and depth of general knowledge.

"Nonconformist candidates for the pulpit have always been trained, more or less completely, in the outlines of theology. Let the churches perfect their systems of ministerial training. Nothing will repay culture more generously than this field, and still let it never be forgotten that all that colleges can do is to supply the instruments, sketch the outline, indicate the methods of theological study. The programme given in these preliminary years must be worked out and filled up by assiduous, lifelong research and study. The student, when he leaves college, has mastered the grammar of his special science. He has next to apply the rules put into his hands to one department after another. He is in the position of the art or science student, whose course of training in studio and laboratory is completed. His next business is to do work of his own. It would be a good sign if English theology were constantly producing works like those given in the series now under notice, many of which issue, not from professors' studies, but from quiet parsonages.

"More exhaustive and elaborate works still are perforce left untranslated.

"We do not, of course, forget or undervalue what is done in Great Britain in this field. The different lectureships and individual scholars are rendering good service. But the total outcome is not large in comparison.

"The great lack is a public interested in theological questions, and nothing will tend to create this more effectually than a thorough training of ministerial candidates in Biblical and theological science.

"To all these purposes the series of German translations has made—may it long continue to make—no insignificant contribution."

The article on Egypt is a capital resumé of the history of that wonderful country. But Homer nods in one place: "The Monophysite, or Jacobite Church—they who 'confounded (says the Athanasian Creed) the persons.' The Monophysites confounded the persons." This is confounding with a witness!" The thirty-fourth verse of the Athanasian Creed says: "One altogether; not by confusion of substance, but by unity of person." Confounding the persons of the Trinity—condemned in verse 4 of that creed—is another matter.

The supernatural in nature is an elaborate paper—utterly destructive of the Atheistic, Pantheistic and Materialistic, sciolism of the age. It is very valuable.

The article on Moral Evil has most interested me. It reviews half a dozen works—Mueller on Sin, Naville's, Problem of Evil, Finney's Lectures, Bledsoe's Theodicy, Watson's Institutes, Payne's Congregational Lecture on Original Sin. It notices other works in connection with these. It upholds the orthodox Arminian doctrine of sin—taking exception to "the new school of American theology," to which he seems to relegate Bledsoe as well as Finney, identifying it largely with Knapp on Original Sin. It is to be lamented that Knapp, one of the profoundest theologians—should have broached so erroneous views on this subject—though he largely furnishes the antidote to his poison. He disclaimed Pelagianism, as did Bledsoe. It is to be wished that the reviewer had gone a little further into the subject of "original righteousness," which some have beclouded—as if man could not be created righteous, volition being the only basis of righteousness.

The reviewer well says: "At the earliest period of his being man was predisposed to obedience and holiness; and, further, we should be warranted in calling for some explanation of the image and likeness of God in which he was created." Solomon says: "God made man upright."

Upright both in heart and will,
We by our God were made.

If by righteousness or virtue be meant voluntary action in conformity with law, then it is only a bald truism to say man was not originally endowed with virtue; but nobody of common sense ever talks in that way. We speak of rectitude of nature as well as of action. The reviewer says: "Mueller, in defining sin as 'that which ought not to be,' has furnished a formula of much philosophical value." It is valuable. But Knapp had given it to us before: "The word phthora is used in Scripture to designate the entire corrupt constitution of man in a moral respect." According to common usage, it denotes a constitution and state which is not as it should be.—Vide Second Peter ii, 19; Ephesians iv, 22; First Timothy vi, 5. This suggests the atopos of Luke xxiii, 41: "This man hath done nothing amiss!"—literally "out of place." Atopos is rendered "unreasonable" or "absurd," in Second Thessalonians iii, 2. Surely there is nothing so much "amiss"—"that which ought not to be"—"which is not as it should be"—"unreasonable" and "absurd"—as sin. Still hamartiologists cannot dispense with John's definition: "Sin is lawlessness"—anomia. "By law is the knowledge of sin." The law of God shows us what ought to be, and what ought not to be.

But see whither I am wandering. I must break off abruptly. Those of your readers who can afford to take another Review besides that of their own church would do well to take this. It is like the "Sword of Goliath." There is none like that. The book notices are very valuable. Send $5 25 in a sterling draft to the Rev. Dr. Jobson, Wesleyan Conference Office, 2 Castle street, City Road, London, England.

We are all quiet at Vanderbilt. Bishop McTyeire is recovering from his late attack, which was more serious than was supposed.

Dr. Wilson returned this week, but is off again to Kentucky camp meetings. He does move around, indeed. His family are with Dr. Cunnyngham's, at Abingdon.

We were shocked to hear of the death of Prof. Kirkpatrick, so soon after the death of President Smith. They were two great and good men, and their death is greatly deplored. But they belonged to the Master—He knows where best to employ them.

I am asked a good many questions about Vanderbilt University. In preparing the new Register we put in everything by way of information which we thought anybody might wish to know; and we will send a copy to any one who desires it. Let me repeat, with clearness and emphasis, that all candidates for admission into the Biblical Department must be licensed to preach, and be recommended for admission by a Bishop or Quarterly Conference, or some other ecclesiastical authority. Let none offer who do not intend to do honest study, being reasonably capable of studying, and who intend to devote themselves to the work of the ministry. Any student, indeed, is allowed to attend the Biblical Classes; but clerical students come on a different basis. Let all students be present at the opening service, Sunday, August 31.

THOS. O. SUMMERS.

NASHVILLE, TENN., July 18, 1879.

Seashore Camp Meeting.

The regular services at Seashore opened on Wednesday night, July 16. The congregations, especially at night, were about as good as in other years, and continued so until Monday. The tabernacle was filled at every service on Sunday, and the preaching was excellent throughout. The experience meetings at 8½ o'clock in the morning were, as heretofore, times of refreshing, and rich in the flow of love and the communion of saints. There were penitents at the altar almost continually, and about fifty professed to have found peace through faith in Christ. Hundreds of people from a distance were kept away by apprehension of fever and quarantines, and a feeling of suspense and uneasiness which prevailed from the beginning culminated on Monday, through rumors of yellow fever having appeared on the coast. Many packed up and left on Monday, and nearly all from a distance, especially from the east, including Mobile, Montgomery, Moss Point, and other localities in Alabama, were gone on Tuesday morning. The preaching, however, was continued through Tuesday to small congregations, the sacrament of the Lord's Supper being administered to about seventy-five communicants at three in the afternoon, and a sermon at night. Up to the time of the disturbing reports concerning yellow fever, the prospects of the meeting were never better, and, although cut short, the meeting was one of great profit, and the means of salvation to many. The attendance of preachers was comparatively small—only about thirty-five in all; but they were in the Spirit, and their preaching, and praying, and exhortations, were in power. Several large and commodious cottages have been built this year, and the grounds are becoming more beautiful and attractive with each passing season. All who visit Seashore are charmed with the place, and delighted with the camp meeting. As it turned out, there was no occasion for the uneasiness which prevailed about yellow fever, but the the possibility of the inconsiderate establishment of quarantines was good ground of uneasiness. It may be found expedient to hold the meeting at an earlier date in future. By opening the services about the middle of June the disturbing influence will be avoided. Quite a number of families will remain on the camp ground during the summer. Although several hundred people spent the season there last year, and constant communications were kept up with New Orleans, there was not a case of yellow fever on the camp ground.

The Louisiana Constitutional Convention adjourned sine die Wednesday, July 23. The following was the final action concerning the State debt:

ARTICLE 1. Be it ordained, That the interest to be paid on the consolidated bonds by the State of Louisiana be and is hereby fixed at two per cent. for five years from the first of January, 1880, three per cent. for fifteen years and four per cent. thereafter; and there shall be levied an annual tax sufficient for the full payment of said interests, not exceeding three mills, the limit of all State tax being hereby fixed at six mills; Provided, the holders of consolidated bonds may, at their option, demand in exchange for the bonds held by them, bonds of the denomination of five dollars, one hundred dollars, five hundred dollars, one thousand dollars, to be issued at the rate of seventy-five cents on the dollar of bonds held and to be surrendered by such holders, the said new issue to bear interest at the rate of four per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually.

ART. 2. The holders of the consolidated bonds may at any time present their bonds to the treasurer of the State, or to an agent to be appointed by the governor—one in the City of New York and the other in the City of London—and the said treasurer or agent, as the case may be, shall indorse or stamp thereon the words, "Interest reduced to two per cent. for five years from January 1, 1880 three per cent. for fifteen years and four per cent. thereafter;" Provided, the holder or holders of said bonds may apply to the treasurer for an exchange of bonds, as provided in the preceding article.

ART. 3. Be it further ordained, That the coupons of said consolidated bonds falling due on the first of January, 1880, be, and the same is hereby remitted, and any interest tax collected to meet said coupons is hereby transferred to defray the expenses of the State government.

Be it further ordained, and it is hereby ordained by this Constitutional Convention, That the foregoing provisions and articles relative to the consolidated debt shall not form a part of this Constitution, except as hereinafter provided, as follows:

At the election held for the ratification or rejection of this Constitution, it shall be lawful for each voter to have written or printed on his ballot the words, "For ordinance relative to State debt," or the words, "Against ordinance relative to State debt," and in the event that a majority of the ballots so cast have indorsed on them the words, "For ordinance relative to State debt," then the said foregoing provisions and articles of this ordinance shall form a part of the Constitution submitted if the same is ratified; and if a majority of the votes so cast shall have indorsed on them the words, "Against ordinance relative to State debt," then said provisions and articles shall form no part of this Constitution.

The question of selling liquor on Sunday was left to the Legislature. The Louisiana Lottery Company is shorn of its privileges, and all lotteries are to cease after 1895. The State tax is limited to six mills and the City tax to ten mills.

The following dispatch gives the particulars of an affair of honor, as it is called:

MEMPHIS, July 21.—A duel took place yesterday, at a point fourteen miles east of Columbus, Miss., in the State of Alabama, between Capt. Humphries and Major Moore. Five hundred people witnessed the affair. The combatants fired upon each other at the distance of twelve paces with Smith and Wesson revolvers, without effect. Major Moore fired immediately on turning. Capt. Humphries took cool, calm, deliberate aim.

After the first fire friends pressed the seconds to take advantage of the regulations of the code, which was done, and the affair ended. Both of their honors having been satisfied. The duel grew out of political differences in politics.

It must have been a very interesting and edifying spectacle to the crowd looking on. "Both of their honors having been satisfied." We do not see exactly how the shooting at each other affected the honor of either, except that it dishonored and disgraced both parties. This is one of the mysteries of a barbaric chivalry. Duelling, by the laws of most countries, and by our States, is made a crime. Those who engage in it are law-breakers, and ought to be prosecuted. The bravest man is he who refuses to lend his sanction to this senseless and unchristian practice. We are sorry that five hundred people could be found to countenance it. If men will fight duels, better that it be done in private and that their names be remanded to obscurity and reprobation.

We learn with deep sorrow that Prof. R. L. Kirkpatrick, LL.D., of the University of Tennessee, died at his residence in Knoxville, July 15. Prof. Kirkpatrick was a man of strong and deep convictions, firm and true in his adhesion to the right, a thinker and scholar, a noble and good man, a most devoted and simple-minded Christian. The Holston Methodist, says:

Prof. Kirkpatrick was a local minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and has occupied the chair of Logic, Rhetoric and Belles Lettres in the University at Knoxville for the past twelve years. He was a stockholder and a director in the Holston Publishing Company, and one of the corresponding editors of this paper.

At the recent commencement of the University of Tennessee, in this city, he was honored with the well-merited degree of Doctor of Laws.

He was a native of Anderson county, Tenn., and graduated in 1845 with the first honors at the University where he labored so long as a professor. His illness was short, owing to the violence of the disease. Some few weeks after the close of the session at the University, he spent some days in Anderson county, and during the time was exposed to the excessive heat of the sun while making some surveys of land, and it is supposed brought on the disease which closed his life. The funeral was largely attended, and well attested how much he was honored and beloved in this city and country.

The services were conducted by Rev. G. C. Rankin, pastor of the Church Street Church, assisted by Rev. Geo. B. Eager of the Baptist Church, Rev. James Park of the First Presbyterian Church and Rev. James A. Leone of the Athens Station. Prof. W. G. McAdoo who was a life long friend, a school mate and class mate, and Prof. S. Hall, of the University, represented the faculty in paying tribute to the memory of the deceased. The mementoes of affection and respect were full of emotion, and the good man was laid to rest amid the weeping of a whole city. He rests in peace, and his works do follow him.

Off for California.

MR. EDITOR: To a tourist accustomed to travel north by the Mobile or Jackson route, St. Louis is really the starting point to San Francisco, the great Queen City of the West. Up to this point the railroad passes through no very diverse scenery, except that the soil rises perceptibly from the low flat lands of Louisiana and south Mississippi to the graceful undulations of the rising north, where cotton, corn, wheat and oats grow instead of sugar. The towns all along the road look somewhat alike. There is a dreariness and dustiness about the average town in these sections which could be at once relieved by measuring off and barqueting the streets, and the use of paint and whitewash. I learned, in a rapid conversation with a resident of Corbet, Ill., a town of fifteen hundred inhabitants, that most of the towns on the road have a thriving fruit trade with Chicago. The little town just mentioned is a depot where immense loads of strawberries, peaches and apples are shipped. It is gratifying that this industry is growing in our own immediate section on the Jackson road, and in parts of Louisiana.

St. Louis is alive with railroads. Croakers may talk, but the marvelous growth of such towns as this, and Chicago and Atlanta, is a simple proof of what railroads can make of places enterprising enough to build them. Here is the prophesy of what New Orleans is to be.

As we pushed toward the west from St. Louis, on the Missouri Pacific railroad, we saw apple orchards, fine vigorous timber, and strong, well-sized cattle. The scenery steadily improves. Suddenly we came right before the Missouri river, which at this point is wide and strong of current, and high, doubtless, from the melting mountain snows as the temperature rises. This is the country for fine cattle and horses. What a contrast with our Diego thousand-acre plantations are these little forty and hundred acre wheat fields! In middle Missouri the country is one vast corn, wheat and oat field, undulating for miles in the distance, often unbounded by woodland, so that as far as the eye can reach the fields extend. For days we traveled by rail through a vast unbroken sea of grain fields, which afforded refreshment and delight to us all.

Reaching Omaha, we bid farewell to the east. Now we are in a new world. A clock stands in the dining hall of the Council Bluffs Hotel, just opposite from Omaha, across the Missouri river, with Chicago time, by which the Eastern trains are regulated up to that point. At Omaha there is a change of time by thirty minutes. Then another change at Ogden City; then another at San Francisco, when our time is found three hours faster. There are [illegible] four changes of cars from New Orleans to San Francisco. A [illegible] easily make the trip unco[illegible]

City, a word about the African exodus to this supposed second land of Canaan. I have not met a man who endorses it. I was informed that after the arrival of the boat which has brought scores of negro families at a trip to Kansas City, one will see squads of them setting along the wharfs and piers, waiting and hoping, houseless, footless, moneyless, some sick and some dying. It seems that collections have been taken up in some of the Kansas towns to aid the negro into the interior of the State. But this fund has about ceased. So there is nothing but starvation awaiting those whom charity does not help. Large mass meetings have been held, and some of the leading citizens of the towns have signed resolutions strongly denouncing the further immigration of the colored people.

All this sensation, I doubt not, will soon cease, and the colored man of the South will settle down in earnest to honest toil, and no longer be deceived by some of his self-deceived and foolishly sentimental friendly advisers. The Chinamen are ready to fill any field vacated by negro deserters, and woe be to the colored man if the Chinaman takes it into his head to compete with him.

Men are self-made in this world. If they cannot stand without being propped up by others, they will fall.

Omaha is an active, wealthy little town of about 25,000 people. These towns are the overflow deposits of human beings not needed at home in the East, or by birth or choice make this noble country their home. I saw a high school building in Omaha that is itself the highest compliment which could be paid it. Think of such a town having over $400,000 invested in public school property! Their public building, a high school, cost $250,000.

Out of Omaha, toward the west, after a few miles of grain fields, the whole country is given to grass. Ranches and herds of cattle are all about dotting the otherwise unoccupied waste. The poor man who comes here finds no houses, no wells, no trees, to protect him from the fierce northers that blow. And yet the soil is luxurious. A little scraping of the ground and sowing does the work of agriculture. Even where systematic plowing is done the depth is only about two and a half inches. I am disappointed in not seeing a live buffalo. They have all disappeared from the sight of overland passengers.

Romanism is alive all along the road. Foreign emigrants, the principal element in building and settling this section, have naturally had accompanying their household gods. Prairie dogs skirt the road with their little mounds, but are sharp enough not to expose their little bodies to a too close inspection. Snow sheds are numerous, tunnel-like in appearance, though made of wood, and snow fences, sometimes placed five hundred feet from the road to stop the drifting snow.

As an inducement to the successful completion of this wonderful railroad triumph over more difficulties than one can conceive, a grant of twenty miles was given to the railroad company, after every alternate section, Congress preserving the alternate section for the United States. A section is only about 640 acres. The railroad company are now selling the land thus deeded along the Platte river for $5 an acre.

We have a number of gentlemen aboard who diversify the conversational topics to our relish.

A lawyer from St. Paul, Minn., tells me that farm hands are paid $20 a month and bourded. But farm hands in the North have but permanent employment. On the whole, I doubt not but that our colored hands at the end of the year make more wages than the average white hands of the North and West.

Two of Brigham Young's sons were on the cars. They were returning from a New York college after graduation. They looked like other well-dressed gentlemen. Notwithstanding their association with Eastern men, and habits of thought and feeling, they are as devout Mormons as they were before their Eastern experience.

So it is that crime is often well dressed, and bears the sanction of apparent respectability. We have a genuine frontier scout in a front car. He is just from the Yellow Stone river, in Montana, and tells wonderful stories about the fertility of the entire valley, and the stupendous magnificence of its great canon. He is in the employment of the English Company of capitalists who are now negotiating with Congress for 200,000 acres of that fertile land for $2 50 an acre. If they succeed, which most probably they will do, their intention is to send ship loads of English families, and stock and house them, for a certain number of years. It is a tremendous undertaking, but in every way feasible.

Here is a chance for the poor industrious of all climes, who at home can find nothing to do. Had I months of vacation before me, I should seriously contemplate a horse-back ride of 500 miles over the plains with my trapper friend, to the far-famed wonders of the Yellow Stone.

Health of the City.

From the best sources of information we are warranted in stating that up to this date, Tuesday, July 29, there has been but one case of yellow fever in New Orleans during the summer. This one case terminated fatally on Monday morning, July 28. It was not an imported case, but purely sporadic, and not likely to spread. Nearly every summer, within our recollection, there have been some cases of this kind. We do not regard the city as dangerous to unacclimated people at this time, nor do we believe that there will be much fever here. We have no idea that it will reach an epidemic form. Our weekly bills of mortality were never lower than for the past month, and the sanitary condition is generally excellent.

The latest intelligence from Memphis indicates a falling off in the mortality from yellow fever. It has not reached the proportions of an epidemic there as yet, and it may not. We do not share in the generally felt apprehension that the fever will spread alarmingly and widely this year. As it was last year, there is some degree of wildness and tendency to panic in many sections, and quarantines are being established. In the course of time the people will probably reach the conclusion that quarantines are of little avail in protecting communities, and that they are a worse evil than the yellow fever itself.

A Word of Gratitude.

The following note should encourage the agents and editor in their endeavors to circulate our ADVOCATE. It contains a strong argument to incite us to diligence in the work. The greatest pleasure we have in our labors comes from such testimonies as this:

REV. L PARKER, D. D.—Dear Brother: I am sorely afflicted; have been confined to my house for a long time. Some time last year my pastor, Rev. John A Miller, after some considerable persuasion, got me to subscribe for the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE; and I write this note to express my gratitude to him, and to assure you of my appreciation of your valuable paper. Outside of the Bible, I have never enjoyed any reading I ever did in all my life so much as I have the ADVOCATE. It has been a special comfort and strength to me in my afflictions. I am deprived of the associations of my brethren. But in reading the ADVOCATE I seem to be with you, and all the brethren in their articles. I never knew before how much real worth there was in a religious newspaper. I wish you to accept my sincere thanks for the consolation I have received in reading your paper; and, if it meets your approbation, please publish this, that all may read this feeble testimony. I would not be without the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for double its present subscription price.

Your brother in Christ,

C. P. ROGERS.

Death of One of Our Chinese Bible-Women.

MY DEAR MRS. MCGAVOCK:—Our much beloved Bible woman, Mrs. Tway Tu Tu, died last night at half-past nine o'clock, at Nayzhang, whither she had gone to work among the women. Her health was feeble all winter, but feeling much better she went up when Dr. and Mrs. Lambuth went home, and had been there most of the time since. She had a chill or two last week, and was thought better; on Sabbath was taken worse, and died, Walter writes, without any visible suffering. She died, thank God, in the faith! When last spoken to she said her heart was full of peace.

The life of this dear woman has been such as to make us sure of her reward in the mansions prepared for those who follow the Saviour. God grant us all the same faith and trust that she has enjoyed all through life! Then we may calmly lay our bodies down to die, and look forward to the glorious reward in eternity. Please tell Dr. and Mrs. Cunnyngham and their dear children know that this dear, good woman has gone "home." In Christian love, yours very sincerely,

M. J. BAMFORTH.

SHANGHAI, June 7, 1879.

From the Southern Reveille we learn that Judge Valney Stamps, an old and honored citizen of Mississippi, died at his residence in Port Gibson, June 27. Judge Stamps was a native of Tennessee, born in 1803, and settled in Port Gibson in 1827. The editor of the Reveille says:

In 1861, under the pastoral guardianship of Rev. Dr. J. B. Walker, now of New Orleans, Judge Stamps was received into the membership of the Methodist Church, and, as we have said, on Sunday evening last he died; in the fullness of faith, earth claiming her hereditary dust, and heaven its God-given spirit.

The funeral obsequies took place at the Methodist Church, on Tuesday, in the presence of a large concourse of weeping kindred and sorrowing friends. The sermon by the Rev. H. R Singleton, was a merited and beautiful tribute to one whose life was blameless, and whose integrity was pure and spotless. The choir sang his favorite hymns, and an old and useful and much-loved citizen was quietly and sorrowfully consigned to the tomb.

The Chicago Interior discourses thus concerning the hot weather they are having up there:

It is as hot as blazes in this section of the kingdom. The thermometer ranges from 90° upwards. Last Monday night was the first night we ever knew on this coast when it was too hot to sleep. There was not breeze enough to stir the gossamer hair on the shoulders of one of Fra Angelo's angels. The rivulets trickled and tickled down over brow, over nose, down cheeks and neck, into the depths of wilted linen and general saturation below. One's clothes clave to him closer than a brother. Even the varnished chairs grew sticky, and were disposed to adhere to one after he had risen for a walk—seeming to want to go along, as if dissatisfied about something. People say it is frightful, but it is nothing of the kind. The way in which the corn is shooting up with its sweet tresslures, and the potatoes are expanding with pearly starch, and the sour juices of the apples are turning to rich and fragrant wine! ah, we shall see it all, and enjoy it all, when come the cool winds of October!

The many friends of R. T. Nabors, says the Texas Christian Advocate, will regret to learn that he is compelled by affliction to take a short respite from labor. To use his own language, his "throat has broken down." He passed through Galveston the past week on route to Alabama. We trust this talented and cultivated young minister may be long spared to bless the church with his labors.

Since reading the above we have heard that Bro. Nabors is resting at Opelika, and improving in health. We are led to believe that he will be restored to health in a short time by prudence and rest from preaching.

PERPLEXED.—Mr. Editor: The falling off in the payment of the presiding elder's salary on the —— district is so serious as to restrict his service to those charges accessible without much traveling expenses. This curious fact is exposed for inquiry into the deficiency of benevolence—i. e., "a thoughtful providing for"—whether in the cabinet that erects the districts, in the charges of the district that make no special provision for it, or in the presiding elder whose private resources are inadequate to the cost.

A STRANGER SHE.

We are informed that the State Agricultural and Mechanical College, Auburn, Ala., at its late commencement, conferred the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity on Rev. John Mathews, of New Orleans. Bro. Mathews, in the popular estimation, has been a doctor of divinity for a long time. The conferring of the degree is only the recognition of merit already long appreciated by his many friends and hearers.

Rev. Allin Rains, a venerable minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, died near Nashville, Tenn., July 4.

The corner stone of the new Methodist Church to be built in Opelika, says the Eufaula Times and News, was laid on Wednesday last, July 16.

All pastors are earnestly requested to forward a list of the names of members of their charge or churches in their appointments, who are not subscribers to the ADVOCATE as early a day as possible.

The publisher desires the names, to send sample copies of the paper, with a view to facilitate securing subscriptions.

Please give this matter prompt attention.

ON TRIAL.

A copy of this paper is sent to certain persons not now subscribers, that they may examine it with reference to introducing it permanently into their families. Unless one number may lead the subscriber, we propose to send the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for three months on trial, upon receipt of fifty cents. Weather is this low because we know that many families after the trial will not consent to give it up, and we will have increased any friend by the experiment. Please inclose the fifty cents in currency or postage stamps, and forward before the matter passes from your mind.

of the ADVOCATE will be mailed when desired, to facilitate agents in securing subscribers. Pastors will confer a favor by announcing this fact and forwarding names to the publisher.

MR. E. E. F. ROSS of the staff of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, left Wednesday evening, for the West and East, on business connected with the ADVOCATE. We bespeak for him the courtesies which have been so liberally extended heretofore, and which we have not forgotten.

ST. JAMES HOTEL ST LOUIS, MO. The readers of the ADVOCATE will find this one of the best hotels in the West—kept by one of the most popular men in St. Louis, a gentleman who has been for years in the business, and knows exactly what the traveler wants. When you go to St. Louis remember the place. The table is the best, and their prices are more reasonable than any first class hotel in the city.

THE air of perfection, cleanliness and home-like comfort which is so apparent at the American House Hotel, is one of the characteristic features of that well-regulated establishment. Truth compels us to say that this popular hotel is an agreeably solid contrast to the ugly, first-class house, having reduced its rates to $1 and $1 50 per day.

OUR SCHOOLS.

HIWASSEE COLLEGE, East Tennessee, makes its announcement in our columns this week. Of its faculty we know personally President Bannister and Prof. Grace, and this acquaintance emboldens us to say that Hiwassee College presents a strong claim upon the patronage of all who seek sound learning, good health, moderate charges and the best moral influences for their children or wards.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

We call attention of our readers to the following note, of interest to many of our friends in the country:

ELIZABETH, N. J., July 1, 1879.

KEYANSE MANUFACTURING CO., 9 Broadway, N. Y.—Gentlemen: Your Twelve-foot Windmill which received the first premium at our New Jersey State Agricultural Fair last fall, and which we subsequently purchased of you, has been in operation for the past ten months on our Fair Grounds at Waverly. It has passed through all the severe gales of the last winter without damage, and continues to fill our tanks all the water we require for watering the stock of our three farms, the sewerage of the Trotting Club and other purposes of fair grounds, supplying large quantities of water. We find it to work effectively and much more economical than the steam pump which we discarded for your windmill. So far, it has cost us nothing except for oil, and has given entire satisfaction.

that a remedy made of such common simple plants as the Hops, Buchu, Mandrake, Dandelion, etc., should make so many and such marvelous and wonderful cures as Hop Bitters do, but when old and young, rich and poor, Pastors and people, Lawyers and Editors, all testify to having received from it, you must believe and try them yourself and doubt no longer. A NEW WAY OF GROWING STRAWBERRIES.

There is no doubt but that in many of the country places the "hill" or "stool" plan is a failure, because of hard winters. Fruit is no larger and finer grown by the "stool" system that is, keeping the runners clipped off; and the reasons for this are, that the ground gets better cultivated, and the plants, being worked on all sides, make a luxuriant growth and bear in proportion. Now, if we can adopt some plan by which the soil can be better stirred all around the plants, we know fine fruit will be attained; there are, we presume, what we style the "matted hill system," which is as follows: Prepare the ground well, run it three or three and one-half feet each way, as for corn, and at each crossing of the marks set a strawberry plant or, if you have plenty of them, two in each place will be safer and better. Keep the cultivator running both ways, and quite often, as plants cannot be run to early. By doing this, and when cleaning the hills, by hand drawing stray runs and covering with earth, a matted hill will soon be found one and one-half to two feet across. We have noticed that when there were vacancies in matted rows, and clumps of plants here and there, the fruit was much finer than where the matted rows of plants were continuous. Roots of strawberry plants run much further than one would suppose; and where the ground is filled with them the fruit is not so fine as when they have more room. We advise the trying of this plan by those who have plenty of land and horse-help. After they are through bearing, a small plow with a sharp knife or wheel can be run through both ways, and hills plowed down closely, ground leveled off, and cultivated and hoe run through, as before.—Fruit Recorder.

CONTROLLING VICIOUS HORSES. A new and very simple method of training vicious horses was exhibited in West Philadelphia, recently, and the manner in which some of the wildest horses were subdued was astonishing. The first trial was that of a kicking or "bucking" mare which her owner said had allowed no rider on her back for a period of at least five years. She became tame and gentle almost as quickly as mules, and allowed herself to be ridden about without a sign of her former wildness. The means by which the result was accomplished consisted of a piece of light rope, which was passed around the body of the animal just above the upper teeth, cross-bitted in her mouth and thence secured back of her neck. It was claimed that no horse would kick or jump when thus secured, and that a "kicking" horse, after receiving the treatment a few times, will abandon its vicious ways forever.

A very simple method was also shown by which a kicking horse could be shod. It consisted in first "throwing" the animal's head and fastening by means of a rope passed to the tail, and then to the left hind foot drawn tightly enough to bring the foot sideways to one side. This is claimed makes it absolutely impossible for the horse to kick on the side of the rope. As the animal rests on a horse, which is ready to be shod, it is then a simple matter to operate on him without attempting to kick while secured in the manner described.—Exchange.

GAPES, HOW TO OPERATE FOR. The instrument used was a quill feather, not large, but smaller than I had seen used before. It was stripped to within three inches of its end, the tip of which was wet, and twisted a little, so as to form a sharp point about a quarter of an inch long; the remainder of the barbs were drawn back, forming an arrow head or barbed point. They examine the part of the throat that always had been a mystery—how to better could be proven myself to be introduced into the chick struggles so violently when anything touches the inside of the trachea that it is almost impossible to insert it, without doing harm, to the unaccustomed. However, this was accomplished with ease, by using a low seat, letting the chick's feet hang between the knees, opening the mouth with the right hand, drawing out the tongue and placing it in the upper, pressing it firmly to the lower mandible. The trachea should be brought clearly to view. At the first gape the feather must be inserted instantly, but to prevent violent struggling the unoccupied finger of the left hand must be held rightly against the back of the patient's head. The head must be kept up, and the neck drawn out its full length, so that the feather can be pushed down straight and easily to the bottom of the wind-pipe. Twist the feather rapidly, then draw it out slowly, twisting it as it is withdrawn. The worms will invariably be found adhering to the feather.—Poultry Bulletin.

Henry A. Mott, Jr., says in the Scientific American that at least fifty per cent. of the many baking powders examined by him were grossly adulterated. Tartaric, cream of tartar, and sometimes terra alba, insoluble sesquisilicate of alumina, Dooley's Standard Baking powder" was composed of muriate of lime, bicarbonate of soda, sesquicarbonate of ammonia, and starch. "Patapsco, Chemical and baking powder made by C. E. Andrews & Co., Milwaukee, Wis." was composed of tartaric acid, bicarbonate of soda, and starch. Not a trace of cream of tartar in either of the above. A test to be able to detect adulteration, and the agent known to be most injurious to the largest organs, produces dyspepsia, consumption, and many other ailments, is a powerful astringent, acting chemically on the tissues. A French chemist says the daily introduction into the stomach will exert a dead action, especially in persons with weak constitutions, leading and later confirming disease and death. Any thing that constipates with the same effect and disposition of the grain is cast by the system. The best and purest baking powders are composed of bitartrate of potash (cream of tartar), bicarbonate of soda, and tartaric acid, either free or combined, and bicarbonate of soda, held together by a starch to prevent their combining. The advice is, to buy known brands and make purchases.

CHANGE OF FOOD. The restorative power of change of food is remarkable. Its capacity in this direction is remarkable. A case of dyspepsia has proved that in two hours after a meal of fresh meat, bread and butter, potatoes and tea, the whole of the food had passed from the stomach into the intestines, leaving that organ empty and clean. Even the gastric juice was found to be absent. The quantity of phosphates and other salts in the blood is largely increased by a change of food, and other tissues are benefited in a similar manner. Hence the value of a change of food in cases of debility, dyspepsia, and other diseases. Change of food is also necessary to the healthy growth of children. Those who are fed on one kind of food only, however nutritious it may be, are not so healthy as those who have a variety. Change of food is also necessary to the healthy growth of children. CURE FOR HYDROPHOBIA.—I can give some facts which may be of use to somebody, thereby giving life. The time between the killing of an animal by a mad dog and showing signs of hydrophobia is not less than nine days, but may be nine months. After the animal has become rabid, a bite or scratch with the teeth upon a person, or slobber coming in contact with a sore or raw place, would produce hydrophobia just as soon as though he had been bitten by a mad dog. Hydrophobia can be prevented, and I will give what is known to be an infallible remedy if properly administered, for man or beast. A dose for a horse or cow should be about four times as great as for a person. It is not too late to give medicine any time before the spasms come on. The first dose for a person is one and a half ounces of elecampane root, bruised, put in a pint of new milk, reduced to one half by boiling, then taken all at one dose in the morning, fasting until afternoon, or at least a very light diet after several hours have elapsed. The second dose the same as first, except take two ounces of the root; third dose the same as last, to be taken every other day. Three doses are all that is needed, and there need be no fear. This I know from my own experience, and I know of a number of other cases where it has been entirely successful. This is no guess-work. Those persons I allude to were bitten by their own dogs, that had been bitten by rabid dogs, and were penned up to see if they would go mad; they did go mad, and did bite the persons. This remedy has been used in and about Philadelphia for forty years and longer, with great success, and is known as the Goodman remedy. I am acquainted with a physician who told me he knew of its use for more than thirty years, but never knew a case that failed where it was properly administered. Among other cases he mentioned was one where a number of cows had been bitten by a mad dog. To half this number they administered this remedy, to the other half not. The latter all died of hydrophobia, while those that took the elecampane and milk showed no sign of that disease.—R. C. Shoemaker, in Country Gentleman.

The lime cave at Shandon, near Dungarvan, in the county of Waterford, recently discovered some twenty years ago, was the first Irish cave which produced animal remains belonging to the pleistocene period. In it were found remains of the mammoth, horse, bear, wolf, and reindeer. Professor Leith Adams, in his report on the exploration of this cave, surmised that it was an enormous shelter-shed where the wild denizens repaired to and their days, or for purposes dragging in their prey, and he suggested that it required only hands and some enterprise to discover other caverns in the neighborhood of this one containing abundance of pleistocene animal remains. Specimens within the last few weeks have been discovered near Carrickphilip, at a distance of about seven miles from the Shandon cave. This new cavern is of large size, and appears to have been explored from very remote periods by bears, particularly, whose skeletons are found with all the lower deposits on the floor; but the chief interest in this discovery rests in the fact that remains of the great Irish deer were found in it, in connection with the bones of other deer and of bears, and also with a polished greenstone celt and several bone rubbers.

DEPTH OF EARTHQUAKES.—The recent earthquake at Virginia City was not noticed at all in the mining depths, but only by the people on the surface. Those miners exist quake at the same level, when shook down chimneys, fire walls cracked, brick buildings, and all other damage, was merely noticed by some of the miners working in the upper levels, but in the mine timbers, and even breaking down loose stones and earth. The fallen rock in the various shafts felt the stronger, and at the point where it was pierced was by the station tender at the 900 feet level of the Imperial Empire shaft—900 feet below the surface. He said he felt it as a sudden faint rush or pulsation of the air, as though a blast had been let off somewhere at a distance, above, below, or in some indefinite direction. In none of the mines the shock was not noticed at all, even by the oldest miners. Commenting upon the peculiar fact at the time, the Gold Hill News remarked that the earthquake seemed to be an electrical disturbance proceeding from the atmosphere, and not from the depths of the earth.—Scientific American.

A well-equipped expedition has, the Melbourne Argus says, left Sydney for New Guinea. The party comprises Baron Maclay, the famous Russian scientific and explorer, Chevalier Bruno, who was the first to make an attempt from these shores to open trade with the terra incognitæ, and Captain Leeman, who has had considerable experience on the coast of New Guinea, and elsewhere named. The object of the expedition is scientific and commercial. Astrolabe Bay will first be visited, and thence the coast all round will be examined, and, if possible, arrangements made for opening up a trade with the natives.

Farmers' and Mechanics' MANUAL,

Author of "Elements of Agriculture," "Draining for Profit and for Health," and formerly Agricultural Engineer of Central Park, New York.

500 Octavo pages. Over 200 Illustrations.
Worth to any Thinking, Working Farmer $25 per Year.

This book is one of those rare works of facts and figures, of sterling success, and of practical experience, where there can be no dispute. The directions are plain and full. Work and workers, thinking and planning, and all interests and relations are considered. The book is offered at a price that has been proved by 25,000 to be one that is not necessary for every farmer and mechanic to own, and more it pays to buy any book. Nothing has ever been published to the farmers and mechanics of America. It is complete in every particular as written, as it should be, for such a book to come out, and, in addition to this, it is sufficient to say that in many collective points of value to readers it is unique, as being more practical and to the point than any work ever published on the management of their business as well as ready helper and wise counsel.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The most wonderful and marvelous success, in cases where persons are sick or pining away from a condition of miserableness, that no one knows what ails them, (profitable patients to doctors,) is obtained by the use of Hop Bitters. They begin to cure from the first dose and keep it up until perfect health and strength is restored. Whoever is afflicted in this way need not suffer, when they can get Hop Bitters. See "Truths" and "Proverbs" in another column. Adv.

Of moral feelings depends largely upon moral confidence. "I make it a rule," said a wise one to his friend, "to tell my wife everything that happens. In that way we manage to avoid any misunderstanding." "Not to be outdone in generosity the friend replied, "Well, sir, you are not as open and frank as I am, for I tell my wife a great many things that never happen."

PREVENT YELLOW FEVER.

It has been well proved that prevention is better than cure. A very simple and effective preventive for Yellow Fever and other fevers has been found in BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS. They were used during the last season in New Orleans very successfully. The common method of using them was to apply one over the stomach, changing them every week. They are one of THE MOST ACTIVE ANTISEPTICS, and seem to destroy the poison. One reason why they are of special value is that they stimulate the circulation, and thus enable the system to overcome the influence of the malarial poison. They are a cheap and almost certain preventative. Ask your physician about them. Benson's Capcine Plasters are a sure preventative and cure for chills and fever. If worn as above. Price 25 cents.

The new departure in the Catholic world, inflated by the installation of Leo the Thirteenth, is emphasized, says the Christian Union, by two novel enterprises inspired directly from the Vatican—the one a bank, whose English prospectus is noteworthy by reason of the number of wealthy Catholic nobles whose names are conspicuous by their absence from the list of patrons; the other a newspaper. For the present Pope is as shrewdly aware as Mr. Tilden of the power of printer's ink, and met one of the first rebuffs since his election to the tiara in the refusal of Cardinal Nina to occupy the post of head of the editorial department of the establishment, the benefits of which will extend, like the Papal Easter Benediction, qui et orbi. Balked of his wish that a Cardinal should be chief of the staff, Leo nominated Monsignor Allmonde to the general superintendence, and that prelate will now, subject to superior ecclesiastical direction, control the mightiest organ yet produced, and one unflinchingly obedient to Mother Church. The first number will be issued in August, and its polyglot character may be inferred from the fact that its seven columns to the page will each be printed in a different language. Editorially, it will discuss, from the church point of view, all the political and economical questions of the day, and it will officially represent, if not announce, ex cathedra, the opinions of the Holy See. Its compositors will be the mutes educated and trained in the deaf-and-dumb asylum of San Pietro, and 42,000 subscribers chiefly, of course, clerics, scattered throughout both hemispheres, await the publication of this voice of the church, which will convey to them directly its views on questions of the day in their mother tongues. Beyond all doubt, this outcome of the press will wield a vast influence, for good or evil in both the Old and New Worlds, to which that exercised by the lithographied sheet of foreign politics circulated in London amongst journalists only, and paid for by secret service money, cannot be compared.

Leo XIII has assigned the sum of fifty thousand francs annually, toward completing the restoration of the basilica of San Lorenzo in Damaso, commenced by Pius IX.

Following the line of Irish legislation for closing public houses on Sunday, the Welsh people are seeking a similar benefit in the Principality.

THE WORLD'S NEED AND CRY.—The truth is it is our fortune to live at a moment when the Church of Christ literally staggers beneath the appeals addressed to her to come over and help the nations of the earth. You can scarcely name a region of which it may not be said to day that it is accessible to the gospel. Your keels can scarcely touch a strand where the missionary's foot dare not tread. From every quarter of the compass, in one shape or another, comes to call which Paul heard by night in Troas. It is the privilege—it is no less the perplexity—of all our churches. Bewildered by such competing claims, compelled to debate over a hundred countries their slender resources that would barely suffice for one, attempting too much to be able to accomplish any single task speedily, yet not daring to refuse any new call; you know how all our evangelical churches and societies have stumbled into a state of disarray on the wide foreign field—most desultory, disorganized, and therefore ineffective. When we have no concert among friendly bodies, nor any distribution of the area to be occupied, when half a score of workers on the same spot report each as many as they have boards of management at home, and work each on a line of its own without correlation—how can you anticipate rapid triumphs? How is the non-Christian foreigner to catch, amid your Babel of voices, the one clear trumpet note proclaiming help—the majestic and celestial message which tells us the Eternal's name of hope and safety?—London Baptist.

Some interesting facts regarding Wesleyan education in England were disclosed at a recent meeting of the Conference Education Board. Twelve months ago the books registered the names of 170,000 scholars in day-schools. The day-schools under the care of the committee are 1 per cent. more numerous than they were years ago, the number of scholars is larger by 4½ per cent., and the average attendance by 5½ per cent.; the total increase of income is 9½ per cent., and the increase of expenditure 10 per cent. This increase has occurred in the mid-st of the rivalry of other educational bodies and of the school board schools, and puts the Methodists in the front rank of the bodies engaged in primary education.

The papers all over the country contain notices of the remarkable virtues of Mrs. Hyatt's Hair Restorer, and there are scores of living witnesses in St. Louis who take pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of the Restorer. Mrs. Hyatt's principle is the most reasonable, because she proceeds on the well-based supposition that the hair-germ never dies while life exists in the person, and that it is only necessary to stimulate the germ to produce a satisfactory growth. BUFFALO LITHIA WATER,
For Malarial Poisoning,
Affections Peculiar to Women, etc.

TESTIMONY OF DISTINGUISHED MEDICAL MEN.

EXTRACT FROM LETTER OF DR. WM. T. HOWARD,

Of Baltimore, Professor of Diseases of Women and Children in the University of Maryland, of August 1, 1878.

Dr. Howard compares these waters with those of the celebrated Greenbrier White Sulphur, West Virginia, and adds the following:

"In fact, in a certain class of cases, it is much superior to the latter. I allude to the abiding debility so common upon the fair sex since their grave acute diseases; and more especially to the chronic and opprobrious MALARIOUS FEVERS IN ALL THEIR GRADES AND VARIETIES. It is certain to most dyspepsia, and ALL THE AFFECTIONS PECULIAR TO WOMEN that are remediable by mineral waters. In short, were I called upon to state what mineral water I have seen the greatest and most universal benefit in the largest number of cases in a given way, I would unhesitatingly say the Buffalo Springs, in Mecklenburg county, Virginia."

MALARIAL POISONS.

Extract from a communication of Dr. John R. Wilkinson, of Jackson, Tenn., on the Therapeutic Action of the Buffalo Lithia Waters, in Virginia Medical Monthly for February, 1877.

"Their great value in MALARIAL DISEASES and SEQUELÆ has been most abundantly and satisfactorily tested, and I have no opinion that it would have been a valuable auxiliary in the treatment of the epidemic of yellow fever which so terribly afflicted the Mississippi Valley during the past summer. I prescribed it in my own and I gave prompt relief in a case of suppression of urine in yellow fever and decidedly mitigated the most distressing and dangerous symptoms. The patient recovered, but how far the water in my case contributed to the result (backing pre-existed by high) a single case I, of course, cannot undertake to say. This is no doubt, however, true, that its administration was attended by the most beneficial results."

These Springs are now open for visitors. The waters may be had at the Springs at $5 per case of six gallons; it may also be had of L. Lyons, No. 42 and 44 Camp street, New Orleans, at $6 50 per case. Spring's pamphlet sent to any address.

UNDER ORDERS.

We know not what is expected,
But we may know what is right,
And we never need grope in darkness
If we look to Heaven for light.

Down deep in the hold of the vessel
The quick ear listens and strains,
And faithfully there the engineer
His labor steadily plies.

He knows not the course of the vessel,
He knows not the way he should go,
He feels at his simple duty,
And keeps the fire aglow.

He knows not whether the morrow
The work may perchance bring,
He knows only obeys the orders
Of the pilot at the helm.

And so in the workroom of prayer,
Over life's troubled sea,
I know not the way I am going,
But Jesus steers the ship of me.

I see not the rocks and the quicksands,
Fog may shut in the land from me;
But I know that Christ is my Captain,
And I take my orders from Him.

Pray, Lord, for Thy servant hearth,
Speak peace to my anxious soul,
Help me to feel that all my ways
Are under Thy wise control.

That He who cares for the little
And feeds the sparrow's cry,
Still lovingly leads His loving child,
For He understand even me.

And so when we're called to rest,
And I know not which way to go,
I know that He can guide me,
And so all that I need to know.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Quarantine against New Orleans, by mayor and city, has been established. The Engineer Wrecker, after being inspected by the Health officers was allowed to clear.

PHILADELPHIA, July 29.—The eighteenth annual session of the National Prison Association began here to-day. The delegates were welcomed to the city by Mayor Stokley and Mr. Edward Shippen, whose remarks were responded to by some remarks by John H. Patrick, of Dayton, Ohio. Rutherford B. Hayes, who is scheduled for the leading address.

ST. PAUL, July 31.—Gen. Terry, command of the Military Department of Dakota, has received a report from Gen. Miles, dated Camp on Red Creek, 18 miles south of the boundary, saying:

"Sitting Bull's band of Sioux fled northward to Wood Mountain, leaving their property scattered along the line of route for fifty miles. The Sioux are estimated to number 5000, with 2000 fighting men. Gen. Miles says he believes he has a force enough to deal with all the Indians Sitting Bull can muster."

SAN ANTONIO, Aug. 1.—The Mexican consul at this place has advices from Col. Valdez, in Chihuahua, de la Fuye, Mexico, that he has pursued three bands of Mescalero and Lipan Indians, who have been raiding that country. They carried off 250 horses, killed fifteen persons within a week in Mexico and crossed the Rio Grande into Texas.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 1.—The ship Tempar arrived last night, 151 days from Rio Janeiro, where she put in on her way from New York. While there she lost nine men from yellow fever. After sailing the fever broke out again and Capt. Armstrong, his wife and daughter, ship carpenter and four or five seamen were attacked. Both ladies and two seamen died. Shortly afterwards the chief mate fell overboard and was drowned. Several of the crew are still sick. The ship has been disinfected and taken to quarantine.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 2.—Eight more cases were reported to the Board of Health this afternoon. Five additional deaths have occurred. Total number of deaths, according to official announcement by the Board of Health, for the week ending at 6 o'clock this evening, 44; from yellow fever 26, other causes 18.

It was the purpose of the President to declare the fever epidemic, as the number of deaths from the disease exceeded those from all other causes combined, but as the death rate for the week shows a material decrease from the previous week, he withholds his declaration for the present.

Last week the total number of deaths were 71; from yellow fever 41, other causes 30. Physicians are sanguine that the maximum death rate has been reached and a decrease in the number of deaths can reasonably be expected.

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.—A cable special from Berlin says: "Telegrams received in this city to-day from Stockholm announce that the steamer Vega, with the Arctic explorer Nordenskjold on board, has been freed from the ice and has safely passed Behring Straits.

MOBILE, Aug. 4.—The first bale of new cotton was received to day from Wilcox county, Ala. It was classed Low Middling and sold for twelve cents to E. V. George & Bros. for shipment to Harve. Crop accounts are generally good, but damage from continuous rains is apprehended.

There is no yellow fever here and the city is healthy.

FOREIGN.

CAPE TOWN, July 15.—Lord Chelmsford has resigned and is returning to Durban.

CAPE TOWN, July 15.—Thos. McClear Least, astronomer royal, is dead.

PANAMA, July 21.—The work has been begun on the Pacific section of the Costa Rica Railroad. This is the most important as well as the only practicable section, taking into account the resources of the country. For want of it this season hundreds of thousands of bags of coffee still remain in the country, and cannot be got out until December. The loss by deterioration, interest, etc., will be over half a million dollars.

There is no important war news from South America.

Land operations are confined to parades and reviews about Lima and Arica. The two Presidents are at the latter place.

Gen. Canjerdo, with 2500 Bolivian soldiers, is near Tacna, Chilian outposts at Tarapaca, but dares not take the offensive, and the Chilians are leaving him to starve where he is.

Santa Maria, Chilian Minister, has had interviews with the two Presidents, and it is thought submitted a plan for reorganization of the frontier, which the allied powers may accept without a sacrifice of dignity.

VERSAILLES, July 29.—The Chamber of Deputies to-day adopted the proposal of M. Proust, for the demolition of the ruins of the Tuileries. The site will be transformed into a garden.

HAVANA, July 30.—One hundred and seventeen deaths from yellow fever occurred in Havana during the week ending July 26.

CONSTANTINOPLE, July 30.—Prince Alexander of Bulgaria has telegraphed the Porte that Turkish irregulars crossed Bulgarian territory, near Dubnitza, and fired Bashi Bazouks are pillaging and assassinating. The Prince demands their instant recall.

NAPLES, July 31.—The late Khedive of Egypt sails for Rhodes next week, where he will reside.

LONDON, July 31.—A dispatch from Rome to the Pall Mall Gazette says: The Archbishop of Posen-Gnesen has refused to obey the Prussian Government on the religious questions at issue with the Vatican, has been committed to the fortress. It is as follows: All of the exiled clergy who ask permission will be allowed to return to Germany May laws will be partly suspended; provided the clergy obey the ordinary, and all vacant positions are to be filled by Germans. Low Prussian Catholics are said to be in favor of the concessions.

LONDON, Aug. 1.—Colonel Wolseley telegraphs to the War Office as follows: I propose to form a camp of guards and engineers and a squadron of cavalry on Transvaal. I am relieving Sir Bindon Blood. I have asked permission to go to England. I am returning to Pretoria with the expedition to-day. Cetywayo is said to be in Zululand.

HAVANA, Aug. 1.—Deaths from yellow fever reported in Havana last week, 117; excess of 30 from week before. Total number of deaths in Havana from yellow fever during the month of July, 1878, the same month last year, since the beginning of the year 878. Deaths from yellow fever have continued to increase during the same time last year.

MADRID, Aug. 1.—It was reported from Canet, near Cetywayo, with seven wives and followers, is endeavoring to cross the northern border of Zululand. The authorities are keeping a good lookout for him.

John Dunn and other white renegades there think there is great probability that Cetywayo will be killed by his followers if the Commissioners give trouble. All the Zulus wounded at the battle of Ulundi were killed by the native contingent in the employ of the British.

LONDON, Aug. 1.—Two several signs known to be present among tramping artisans of England, and especially in the city of the Thames, on Saturday night.

The storm was preceded by a fall of hail stones, some of which were of unusual size.

Considerable damage to glass in buildings immediately around London ensued, to the tune of pounds sterling.

FIELD NOTES.

ALABAMA.

GEORGIANA, Ala., July 21.—We are enjoying a gracious revival at McKenzie's Chapel at this time. We began the meeting last Saturday. The results up to this time are eight additions to the church; the number of conversions is not known. The church has been greatly revived. Bro. J. M. Scott is with me, rendering valuable service, both in the pulpit and in selling books. The canvass of money is greatly in the way in the sale of books. Bro. Scott is doing a good work.

Yours, BENJAMIN SMITH.

KEITH HILL, Ala., July 28.—Corn crops on short by drought. Excessive rains now. Making too much weed and cotton shedding. However enough will be made to literally support the next Mobile District Conference, which is to be held at this place. H. D. Graham, our delegate elected to the Annual Conference, is improving in health. Church work is progressing slowly. Up to this date eighty-four accessions and sixty-three baptisms.

A. J. HOGG.

COLUMBIANA, Ala., July 28.—Our Sunday-School Convention for this county closed its second session last Sabbath. The Sunday-schools all over the county were fully represented. The convention lasted three days, closing on Sabbath evening, with a mass meeting, which was at least to soul and mind. The various interests of the Sunday schools was discussed with a zeal worthy of the occasion. This interest is in the right place. It is among the people. All the people in Shelby county have taken a departure for good, and you will hear from us this fall, as we trust in the conversion of many souls. So may it be. County healthy. Crops good.

T. P. ROBERTS.

GUNTERSVILLE, Ala., July 30.—Our District Conference, held here July 25–27, was a pleasant and profitable occasion. It was a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. After a long, severe drought we are having plenty of rain. Early corn is damaged. Health of the country is good.

Your brother, J. W. NEWMAN.

North Alabama Conference.

JONESBORO, Ala., Aug. 1.—Jonesboro circuit is moving on smoothly, evenly, harmoniously and encouragingly. Her bosom is so tranquil that there is not a perceptible ripple of any kind upon it, and her brow so placid that one would hardly give himself the trouble to look for a cloud upon her horizon. I found things so, therefore all praise is due to my very worthy and faithful predecessors, Bros. Nicholson and Isbel. We are very well up financially. We are just now entering upon the season of fervent song, exhortation, prayer and praise, and expect success in well doing. We are favored with seasonable weather, and the farmers have a most flattering prospect for good crops.

Truly yours, R. J. WILLSON.

HARTSELL CIRCUIT, Ala., Aug. 1.—The second protracted meeting for this circuit closed to-day at Mount Tabor. It resulted in about twenty professions, and fifteen accessions to the church. Others will join. A third relapse from measles caused the preacher in charge to fall out of ranks on Tuesday but the good work went on. He is convalescent, but his physician has forbidden his preaching for two months. One man, about eighty years old, joined the church.

O. L. HOYD, P. C.

ECKELL, Ala., Aug. 1.—Many feared that crops were much injured in this vicinity by drought. But the rains have come, and not to late to do much good. Health of this region good, and this city is improving as a commercial point. Quite a number of new edifices going up. We expect to have a parsonage for the new preacher. Two members received from the Sunday-school at last quarterly meeting, 10-inst. Conference at Abbeville next week. Large attendance and Conference well provided for.

BASCOM.

MISSISSIPPI.

GREENSBORO, Miss., July 21.—In some places the St. Helena circuit is the wish any work in the district. There are now eight Sunday schools with 24 officers, about 200 books taken. We also have a Methodist Church altogether. We also have a very interesting class meeting, numbering forty, with a good prospect for another soon. There are forty one Advocates taken. The circuit has paid up to date about forty per cent. of the assessment for preacher and Conference collection, and also 50c for our church, parsonage and Sunday schools. We have a beautiful church house here but it is still not finished. We have a talented, God-loving man, for steward, who may find this present us with a bell for our church.

J. S. PARKER, P. C.

CRYSTAL SPRINGS, Miss., July 30.—We have just closed another protracted meeting, glorious revival, several happy converts. The church was greatly revived. We are erecting a parsonage, commenced, and have now each on the co-operation. Conference at the south had in some places other plans, however, much injured by drought. We are having plenty of rain now.

O. P. CLARK.

OAK RIDGE, Miss., July 30.—On yesterday we celebrated at this place with the following results: eleven accessions to the church, many serious upon the subject of religion, and the members much encouraging. We had the efficient and acceptable services of our presiding elder, W. L. C. Haygood. Our Sabbath-school at this place is in a healthy condition, and I must say, has done and is still doing a good work with Bro. S. D. Davis as superintendent.

WM. WILLIAMS.

OCEAN SPRINGS, Miss., July 7.—I am on the regulations under my consideration travel for the present. Nothing over in Jackson county. Preached at Handsboro, one mile north of Mississippi City, on the twenty-seventh. No fever there. The "Creel" family, that gave the alarm at camp ground, were converging. This seashore country produces fine, large melons. I have raised four "Cuban Queen" variety, weights thirty-five, forty-three, forty-four and a quarter and fifty-six pounds. Seed came from six eighty-pound melon. Abundance of rain.

R. B. DOWNER.

ESTERVILLE, Miss., July 31.—Sister Nancy A. Stockman died in glorious triumph a short time since. She was happy all the time during her sickness, willing to go or stay, as it seemed best to her Lord. We think good was done in preaching her funeral. We think the work here is steadily improving. Wish there were more family altars. Think crops are fair, but too much rain in some localities. Sunday schools increasing. Preached at Sageville and Salem last Sabbath, to a full congregation, and buried an infant, and visited families. O, Lord, revive Thy work everywhere.

GEO. BANCROFT.

GRENADA, Miss., Aug. 1.—Gracious revivals on this work up to this time. Over one hundred conversions, and as many accessions to the church. Outlook promising. Health good. Crops good, except forward corn suffered for rain. No yellow fever at Grenada or vicinity. As yet we do not apprehend a yellow fever epidemic. I will add, that the collections on Grenada circuit are good.

J. B. HACKER.

Grenada circuit, North Mississippi Conference.

LOUISIANA.

WASHINGTON, La., July 28.—We have just closed our third quarterly meeting, which was held on Bayou Boeuf, and lasted from Saturday till Thursday night. We had three conversions, and quite a number of anxious penitents, several of whom promised to earnestly seek till they obtained pardon. A large number of our members in this section are unconverted, and many of them impenitent. But there is perhaps more interest in a salvation from all sin now than at any former period. We are expecting a revival of scriptural holiness in the hearts and lives of our people.

Yours in the faith of the gospel.

J. F. WYNN.

Evil Rejoicings.

Under this heading the Lake Charles Echo, of July 19, says:

A few days ago the Constitutional Convention adopted on its second reading an article prohibiting the sale in Louisiana of spirituous and malt liquors on Sunday. A petition seventy-two feet long, praying for the adoption of such an article, and the fact that its adoption could result only in great and lasting benefit to the State throughout every parish, city, village and hamlet, were so obvious, that only one newspaper in New Orleans could be found to condemn its adoption, and to advocate its reconsideration and defeat. That paper, we are sorry to say it, was the New Orleans Democrat. The article was reconsidered, and on its third reading was defeated by a small majority; and the Democrat thereupon enthusiastically revelled over its defeat, and congratulated itself on the fact that it was the only newspaper in New Orleans which had opposed its adoption.

"All such rejoicings are evil." Considering the tremendous interest which the New Orleans saloon-keepers, numbering several hundred, had in the defeat of that constitutional prohibition, it speaks volumes for the credit of the New Orleans press that but one newspaper in that city could be found to attack a measure of vital interest to the State, and the defeat of which could benefit nobody but the saloon-keepers.

Men may say what they please about "blue laws" and "puritanical theories," but it is a simple fact, already recognized by a large majority of the press and people of Louisiana, that the open and shameless desecration of the Lord's day in our State, and particularly by the drunken orgies and brawls which, where liquor selling liquor is sold more openly and conspicuously on that way than on any other day in the week, is nobody's stain upon the name of Louisiana, but is really more injurious to her prosperity than any other of the manifold evils which of late years have crushed her energies and blighted her best hopes. There is no material interest of the State which does not suffer from the sale of intoxicating liquor on Sunday. Immigration, of that kind which can best develop our resources, is discouraged by it; labor of all kind is paralyzed by it; peace and good order in society are violated by it; the people are needlessly taxed by it, and morality is shocked by it.

The New Orleans Democrat is the leading Democratic journal of the State. Under its present management it is ably edited and conducted, and holds deservedly a high and influential position. It is precisely because of this that we regret its making so feeble a case as to propose that under any circumstances shall the matter of legislating the immorality and productive industry have been defeated last contest with whiskey and lager beer.

Free Translations.

MR. EDITOR: The Bible surpasses all other books in point of value. No other book has received in all ages so much attention as the Bible. Its number of translations and editions are almost countless and yet it is as fresh and pure as at the beginning. And although there are thousands of partisan readings, still its principles precepts, commands, doctrines and promises are not in the least vitiated or compromised.

The various readings are not at all to be wondered at when we remember that a Bible manuscript had so much to do in translating and preserving the "sacred book," and particularly when it is remembered that there are so many religious standards by which men estimate the "infallible standard." The wonder is that "the book" has so few defects in its average.

A few of these defects, in omission as well as addition of words, I now propose to notice. In the gospel by St. John viii, 51, 52, and xi, 26, I find a similar omission. The passages in our translation read thus: "If a man keep My saying he shall never taste of death." "And whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die." In all these Scriptures the words omitted are "see (or taste) corruption" "perishing" "to eternity" or "in eternity." Hence, "If a man keep My saying he shall never see death (or eternity)," or eternal death. This relieves the passage from the conception of physical death.

Some of the passages, by addition, are the following: 1 Corinthians xiii, 5: "Charity . . . is not easily provoked." The word "easily" is not found in the original, and was never found in an English translation till that of King James. The proper reading is: "Charity" . . . "is not provoked." Philippians iv, 3: "And I entreat thee also, true yokefellow, help those women which labored with me in the gospel." The word "women" is not found in the original, which I possess. The verb rendered labored, with is compounded of "sun" with, and ago (from athlos contest), to strive, contend, as in the public games of Greece to struggle, fight, to work, labor, toil." The passage, therefore, might thus be read: "And I entreat thee also, true yokefellow, help those who fought (or toiled) with me in the gospel." Another passage, blurred by addition, is found in Hebrews vi, 4–6. "For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened" * * * "if they shall fall away," etc. The word "if" is manifestly an addition, and was rejected by Dr. Macknight, though a Calvinist. Dr. A. Clarke says "if" was introduced by Beza. Freed from this defect the passage would read: "For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, and have fallen away," etc.

These are specimens which show that the word of God ought to be studied in order to be understood.

ANGUS DOWLING.

Alabama Conference Female College.

MR. EDITOR: I desire, by your kind indulgence, to say a word of the institution whose name heads this article, and which is the property of the Alabama Conference, and is conducted under its direct supervision. I am prompted to do this in no spirit of puffing, but simply to direct attention, as far as may be, to the fact that here in this retired and quiet town is an institution devoted to female education, the equal of the best in the land, and where, at moderate cost, those having daughters to educate can secure for them every possible advantage.

Of one thing all who patronize this college may be assured, that value received will be returned, in honest, earnest, conscientious teaching, for the money expended.

THE LOCATION.

Tuskegee has long been known as an educational center. Its retired situation, and yet easiness of access, its healthfulness, possessing, as it does, a history in this regard not excelled and rarely equaled, the high moral tone of its citizens, combine to make it a place in which to establish and maintain schools of high grade. So thought the founders of the one under consideration, and the passing years, with their record of its success, have fully confirmed the wisdom of their selection. The uniform healthiness of those who have passed their collegiate years within its walls has been a matter of grateful remark.

THE COLLEGE BUILDING

is, perhaps, the best in the State. Erected in prosperous times, and without regard to cost, it has every convenience for the comfort of pupils, and for successful teaching. Its rooms are large, well ventilated, and lighted and suitably furnished. Situated in the midst of beautiful and extensive grounds, well inclosed, whatever of noise and bustle of business there may be, nothing of it reaches the ears of the inmates.

THE LABORATORY

is well fitted up with chemical and philosophical apparatus of superior quality, and by skillful use of which the truths of science are daily exemplified and enforced.

MUSIC AND ART

are taught by skilled instructors, and with every advantage that the newest and best instruments can afford.

THE FACULTY.

Over the Alabama Conference Female College John Massey presides as president, and he it is who gives character and control in the formation of the faculty, and in the conduct of the institution. To say this is to say enough to all who know the man. Ability is sound and who combines so perfectly the qualities of head and heart required to constitute a first-class instructor.

Faithfully to do his appointed work, so high will be approved, not by men only, but by the Master as well, seems to be the ever-present and governing motive of his life.

In recognition of his worth and distinguished abilities Alma Mater, the trustees of Alabama has recently conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Laws.

Assisting and supporting Dr. Massey is a corps of teachers, selected by him with reference to their fitness for their several positions, and who are as diligent and competent as himself in the discharge of the duties required of them.

In his recently issued catalogue a copy of which I send you, Dr. Massey says: "It is the design of this institution to elevate the education of women, and to fit it for a place corresponding to its great importance. For the development of mind, and the promotion of learning, we propose no crucible, alchemy, no mysterious legerdemain, our only talisman is study, our only magic is faithful effort. On these we rest the reputation of the college." And the methods pursued are well calculated to accomplish this design. For while proper care is given that young ladies shall become "accomplished," as the term is, the polish sought to be conferred is the polish of the marble, the graces of manner embellishing and beautifying substantial mental and moral strength.

To induce, to draw forth latent capacities, to educate in the true and highest sense, this is the design, and this the constant care of the faculty. And a diploma, bearing Dr. Massey's signature, is a sure evidence of solid attainments. So think this community, and so think those leading men in the church, who compose the Board of Trustees, as evidenced by a resolution recently adopted unanimously by them. It reads:

"Resolved The Board of Trustees are highly gratified at the success and satisfactory management of this institution for the past scholastic year by the president, John Massey, and his faculty."

And when the high character of the men composing this board, their opportunities for investigation, and the feeling of responsibility which actuated them, are considered the worth of such indorsement is apparent.

I have no further interest in its success than should be felt by every one who favors the education of women, conducted under the most favorable auspices and to the highest attainable results, and who rejoices in an enterprise established in prayer by the church of his choice, and conducted for the good of his race and the glory of God.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

At the meeting of the third Quarterly Conference of St. Charles Avenue Church, July 29, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, The Quarterly Conference of the St. Charles Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has sustained a great loss in the death of Hon. R. W. Rayne, the founder and patron of our church, and desiring to record the deep sense of our official and individual bereavement, and our admiration of a character so spotless, wishing also to commemorate a name so honored and revered, not only by his Christian brethren, but by our citizens generally, and the poor who partook of his bounty, we would unite with these in expressing our high appreciation of his large liberality, his noble testimony and personal influence in aiding every good cause, his unquestioned faith in God, and the many qualities which gave a charm to his life; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we cherish the memory of the honorable life and Christian zeal of the Rev. R. W. Rayne, and do hereby express our gratitude for that noble monument of his liberality, the St. Charles Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, South, erected of his own motion.

Resolved, That we tender our sympathies to the surviving family, and bind our hearts in prayer that God's blessings may attend each member of it.

Resolved, That this preamble and these resolutions be spread upon our minutes, and also published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

E. HALE, Sec.

THE SINNER'S FRIEND.

"Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friend." (John xv, 13). "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee." (Heb. xiii

I've found a Friend; oh such a Friend!
He loved me ere I knew Him
He drew me with the cords of love,
And thus He bound me to Him.
And round my heart still closely twine
Those ties which nought can sever,
For I am His and He is mine
Forever and forever.

I've found a Friend; oh, such a Friend!
He died, He died to save me
And not alone the gift of life,
But His own self He gave me.
Nought that I have my own I call,
I'll hold it for the Giver;
My heart, my strength, my life, my all,
Are His and His forever.

I've found a Friend; oh such a Friend!
All pow'er to Him is given
To guard me on my onward course,
And bring me safe to heaven.
The eternal gates gleam near,
To enter in I'll never fear,
With Him all dangers I'll brave,
Safe in the arms of Jesus,

I've found a Friend; oh such a Friend!
So kind and true and tender,
So wise a Counsellor and guide,
So mighty a Defender.
From Him who loves me now to-day
While life or death, shall earth or hell?
No, I am His forever.

Rev. Henderson H. Montgomery was born in Williamson county, Tenn., August 12, 1819, and died June 15, 1879. His father was Andrew Hamilton Montgomery, born in Lancaster district, S. C. His mother was Elizabeth Jane Morris, born in Davidson county, Tenn. When about two years of age his parents became concerned about religion, and joined the Methodist Church. He said of himself that he did not know precisely when he felt the first impressions about religion. He was converted at the age of sixteen, at Sardis camp meeting, Henderson county, Tenn., on the tenth of August, 1835. He was licensed to exhort by Rev. J. W. Ellis, September 1, 1839, and on the fifteenth of August, 1840, was licensed to preach, and on the fourth day of November, of the same year, he was admitted on trial in the Memphis Conference, Bishop Andrew presiding. He remained in the Memphis Conference six years, being three years on circuits and three in stations. He transferred to the Mississippi Conference in 1846, where he has served three districts as presiding elder, four stations, and many circuits. For three years he was agent of the Book and Tract Society. He was never local, was never on the supernumerary or superannuated list. To preach was his loved employ. His very last published article showed that he wanted to live only that he might continue to work for the Master.

If the question was raised: "Who of all the members of the Mississippi Conference during the last thirty years had come nearer realizing the much quoted sentiment 'He did the whole duty of a Methodist preacher?'" doubtless the answer from many lips would be: H. H. Montgomery. He recognized with unquestioning obedience the authority of the church, loved its usages, and always endeavored, as best he could, to fill the appointment assigned him. Whether as station or circuit preacher, or presiding elder or agent, he strove to do heartily whatever his hand found to do. Voluntarily, unreservedly, conscientiously, he had given himself to the church, and whatever its authorities bade him do that was his duty and his delight.

He was methodical, and always ready. He would have everything prepared beforehand for a Quarterly, an Annual or even a General Conference, as far as he was able. He anticipated what committees would be needed, and had the list made out, what resolutions, and had them written, what data, and had reliable ways at hand. So thoroughly did he canvass all these matters, and so minutely did he provide for them, that his fellow committee men found little else to do than to adopt his own judicious suggestions.

He was a most instructive preacher, not showy, but scriptural and edifying. He had a most remarkable tact for putting to immediate and effective use in his preaching whatever he had seen or heard; and, after having been received and restamped in his own mind, it shone with a greater brilliancy, and possessed greater intrinsic value than before. While his sermons enchained the attention during their delivery, they also remained fixed in the memory. So clear and distinct were his enunciations of doctrine, so authoritative his enforcement of duty, so apposite and striking his illustrations, that his sermons were often indelible in their impression. He labored for immediate results, and if one method of preaching truth did not succeed in arousing sinners, he would resort to others. His great purpose was to induce men to fall out with their sins and forsake them. If this could not be done by the ordinary presentation of the glories of the saved, and the terrors of the lost, he would try the unsparing and withering denunciation of special sins. These peculiar efforts often fell with telling power and startling effect. Under them the timid Christian would shrink and wince, the lukewarm be loud in their condemnation, and the unscrupulously wicked would even threaten personal violence. Many times has even his life been menaced; but on these occasions, when his friends would be concerned for his safety, he was calm and unconcerned. Indeed, this was the very state of things that he wished to bring about; and the fact that many of those who were most excitedly wrought up became afterward, because of that very experience, devoted Christians, and some of them even ministers of the gospel, showed the wisdom of the policy. It is doubtful if any other man ever wielded so great an influence through central Mississippi, or was the means of the conversion of more sinners, or led more young men into the ministry.

Bro. Montgomery was a very popular writer. The files of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE from its beginning, and those of the Jackson Methodist, show many pieces which are peculiarly interesting and entertaining, and also highly instructive in the doctrine and polity of the church he loved so well.

He was five successive times elected to the General Conference, beginning with the Nashville Conference in 1858, and ending with the Louisville in 1874. He made a most useful member and his conservative influence was felt and prized. This continued preferment at the hands of his brethren was to him a source of the purest and most heartfelt gratification. From no men in the world could indications of trust and affection have been so highly prized by him as from traveling Methodist preachers.

Bro. Montgomery was as far removed as is possible from being a time-server. He had little or no policy in his nature or conduct. His convictions were strong and sincere, and he acted upon them, no matter what persons or measures they arrayed against him. If there was bluntness, or even inconsiderateness of the feelings and rights of others in his methods of securing desired results, it arose not from a want of courtesy or kindness, but rather from a heartfelt assurance that what he advocated was right, and that the right must prevail. If circumstances demanded only courtesy and kindness, his ardent feelings were at once enlisted, but if the exhibition of courtesy and kindness for a moment jeopardized the prevalence of truth, then the former seemed insignificant, even puerile in his estimation.

As a personal friend, and especially to his brethren in the ministry, no truer heart ever beat than in his own bosom. He loved God and the church, and all who were of kindred sentiments found ready access to his heart, and remained fixed there as with hooks of steel.

One trait of his character deserves honorable mention, viz: He was faithful in the unrighteous mammon. He was scrupulously exact in money matters. Though his whole life was a struggle with poverty, on account of his insufficient pay as a preacher, yet he never left a circuit in debt. Though he frequently urged his stewards and members to pay him his dues as pastor, none could ever say of him that he did not do his duty likewise to those whom he owed. He that is faithful in that which is least, is faithful also in much.

Bro. Montgomery was subjected to most painful experiences in the death of his children. Out of a large family of most promising sons and daughters, only two survive. Most of them died as they approached maturity. A noble son was called upon to give up his life just as he was prepared to enter upon the honorable career for which his natural endowments, and intellectual and moral attainments, so eminently qualified him. Two accomplished daughters were taken while engaged in their successful life work. But these deep trials never provoked a murmuring word from him; nay, very probably never produced a murmuring thought. He had learned to say: "It is the Lord; let Him do what seemeth Him good."

His devoted wife, who has proved as true a yoke-fellow as ever brightened an itinerant's life, says that in the closing hours "he was calm and serene and patient." His last words were a message to his two daughters "to love and serve the Lord."

Thus one of our bravest spirits, our most successful workers, our truest friends has fallen. Brethren of the Mississippi Conference, let us emulate his shining example!

Thoughts for Pastors and People.

MR. EDITOR: Christ, while here on earth, represented himself as the Pastor of the church or Shepherd of the flock. The Psalmist David calls Him his Shepherd, saying: "The Lord is my Shepherd; I shall not want."

"Give ear, O Shepherd of Israel!" Christ is Shepherd and Pastor. Our Pastor Christ Jesus was filled with love for His flock. He ever listened to the appeal for help. The cry of the needy ever found a response in His breast. And if He was now on His way to create a new heaven and a new earth, He would stop to answer the prayer of one penitent sinner.

The apostles also declare it our duty to love one another, and make it a test of our heirship. For "we know we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren."

The eyes of Christ, our Pastor, were ever watching over His flock. He gave them courage to go forth to the discharge of their duty. He gave them strength for their need. He encouraged them in times of despondency and gloom. Not only did His love beam forth from His eyes upon His disciples, but He loved His enemies also, and prayed for them. So should the eyes of our minister and pastor beam with love and solicitude upon his people, his flock, trusted to his care or his instruction. He should visit the widow and orphan, the needy and afflicted, the poor and destitute, and especially those who are seeking to know the love of God in their hearts. They should also pay especial attention to the young converts (the lambs of the flock), feeding them on the sincere milk of the word, ever teaching them the necessity of a continual growth in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. These are some of a pastor's duties. Now, what are the duties of the members of the church, the pastor's flock? The disciples of old, the followers of Christ, listened attentively to His instruction, and endeavored to so live as was pleasing in His sight—to go forth at the request of their Pastor, to do all the good in their power. From the example of the disciples we are taught we should ever endeavor to gain knowledge from our pastor's discourses and conversation. We should endeavor to strengthen our pastor, to hold up his hands, to encourage him and assist him in spreading the joyful news of salvation throughout the length and breadth of our land. We may strengthen him by ever being present at his appointments, whether for preaching, prayer meeting, love feast or church conference, by ever letting him see, by our interest which we manifest, that our hearts and sympathy are with him in the glorious work of saving souls.

We may strengthen him by keeping all unpleasant or disagreeable church matter from him, unless when we desire to bring charges against a member.

We may strengthen him by ever showing a willingness to serve the church in any capacity that he may deem best.

We may strengthen him and increase his usefulness by earnest prayer in his behalf. Not only in public, but in secret we should always pray for our pastor.

We can help our minister and the cause of Christianity by contributing liberally to the charitable objects that it is his duty to appeal to us for.

We may strengthen him by seeing that his temporal wants are supplied, that his mind may be free to his Master's work.

And these things will we surely do, this we will always endeavor to do: To promote the cause of Christ if His Spirit be in us, if we are, indeed, the children of God, for these are the fruits of the Spirit.

But, oh! I fear there are many whose names are enrolled upon the class books without Christ in their hearts—they are temples devoid of the love of Christ. Some there are who are struggling for that love "that casteth out all fear."

A few there are who are letting their lights so shine that others seeing their good works may be constrained to glorify our Father which art in heaven.

"Then, Christian, be prayerful and true,
Let your motto be ever and aye,
May work in the world that for you."

Then let our lights shine in love and unity upon our fellowmen, especially those that be of the household of faith. Let our hands be stretched in love and charity to the fallen, those who have wandered off in forbidden paths, that by our care and admonitions they may be reclaimed. And may we ever feel a tender sympathy for the sick and afflicted, doing all in our power for their relief, and may all suffering humanity ever find a friend and true friend in us. But, when you have done all these things, remember that you are still unprofitable servants.

Brothers and sisters, there is one great command of our loving Saviour that we must remember and obey, if we would grow in grace, if we would go on to perfection in this world, and be received into the kingdom of the sanctified after death, that is: To forgive our enemies to love those who hate us and despitefully use us. They are God's creatures, made by the hand of Almighty God. They are possessed of immortal souls, that must go from hence to a world of happiness or woe. Then, hand in hand, heart in heart, with the blessing of God let us work in the labor of love, ever remembering that He that turns a single sinner from the evil of his ways will add a star to his crown of glory.

Then will our church prosper, and soon become like a city set upon a hill, and the lights will grow brighter and brighter until the perfect day, and multitudes will flock to her glorious altars to worship their Redeemer and their God.

MARIANNA DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: At 8½ A. M., Thursday, June 26, 1879, the District Conference for Marianna district, Alabama Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, convened in the Methodist Church at Marianna. The Conference was opened with religious services, conducted by Rev. E. Phillips, P. E. All the pastors save one were present, with a goodly number of lay members in attendance.

Some pastors report spiritual condition good, and everything else bad; others report everything bad, at a low ebb, while others report medium.

The support of the ministry up to date has been very meager—as follows:

Calhoun circuit, $38 61; Greenwood circuit, $90; Holmes' Valley circuit, $24 10; Geneva circuit, $11 10; Big Creek circuit, $11 12; Gordon circuit, $30; Gerro Gordo mission, $8 65; Cuipola mission, —; Freeport station, $63; Mariana station, $125; District paid Presiding Elder, $30 61; Total, $374 81.

The Sabbath-school interest was well looked after during the Conference session, and some reports were very encouraging.

The Bible Cause was noticed, also church literature. Only 82 Advocates are taken on the district. We appealed, and do most earnestly appeal again, to the brethren to circulate the Advocates, especially our own NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE. 1,363 members, and only 82 Advocates taken! No wonder the finances are at a low ebb! Brethren of the Marianna district, think, feel, act! Again, I say with you, Circulate the ADVOCATE! We heard of a man the other day talking about how bravely Napoleon Bonaparte fought General Washington in the late war. Brethren, circulate the ADVOCATE!

The subject of education was well considered. The Conference passed a resolution, resolving, if possible, to establish a District High School. In the name of the Marianna district, in the name of the church, in the name of God, I appeal to the laymen of this district to wake up on the subject of education, and without fail help us to build up a school in your own district, for your own interest, and to the interest of your own children.

The Conference resolved to erect or purchase a home for the presiding elder, as soon as possible. For 19 years there has been a regular organized district with a presiding elder, from year to year, and during all this time the presiding elders have been paying large rents for homes to live in. A collection, amounting to $20 or a ward, was lifted for this purpose on the Conference floor.

One of the most prominent features of the District Conference was that of parsonages generally. All the pastors seemed to be much concerned about parsonages, and say that they must have them.

The religious exercises of the meeting resulted in great good, and a deeper work of grace in our own hearts. Rev. E. Phillips, P. E., presided, though in feeble health, with great ability, and gave general satisfaction.

All the preaching during the Conference was full of power and the Holy Ghost. Great crowds of penitents came to the altar at nearly every service.

Sunday, at nine A. M., we had a love feast, and a glorious time it was. Many souls were filled with the love of God, and were very happy.

After the sermon in the morning the Lord's Supper was administered to the largest number of communicants I have ever seen at a District Conference. Large congregations at all the services.

The pastor protracted the religious services. Bro. B. C. Glenn and myself remained to assist in the meeting. Monday morning, at prayer meeting, six souls were converted to God, and the whole church was shouting happy. The meeting continued nine days, during which many were made to rejoice aloud, and there were several conversions and accessions to the church.

On Thursday night the angel Death came in the camp, which brought sadness, yet the most bereaved did not cease to give glory to God. Another soul transplanted in yonder world! Saturday morning the body of Mrs. Robinson was consigned earth to earth, ashes to ashes, dust to dust. Bro. Bilbro, the pastor, is doing a fine work, and was very happy during and over the success of his meeting.

Marianna is a beautiful little town, with flowers, oranges and other fruits, elegant mansions, and the most kind, inteligent and hospitable people I have ever met.

During my stay (with pleasant company) I visited the Blue Springs, also the Secret Springs, six and eight miles from town. These springs are the natural curiosities of that country.

Resolutions of the Board of Trustees of Wesleyan Female Institute.

The Board of Trustees of the Wesleyan Female Institute, at Staunton, Va., at the close of a most harmonious session, hereby express their gratitude to Almighty God for His continued blessing on our Conference institution. Notwithstanding the embarrassments attending the opening of the session, occasioned by the yellow fever epidemic in our best patronizing section, the school has been full all the year, while the health of the pupils has been unsurpassed.

We could safely leave the patronage of the school the next session with the pupils of the past;

But we desire to testify that parents, however distant their homes, can have their daughters at the Wesleyan Female Institute with as much confidence as to their health, studiousness, deportment and comfort as if they were under their own eyes at their homes; therefore be it

Resolved, That the continued success of the Wesleyan Female Institute, under the management of its able and efficient president, Rev. William A. Harris, D. D., aided by its accomplished Board of Teachers, merits our hearty approval. And we not only recognize the superior qualifications of the president as a Christian educator, but hereby express our high appreciation, both of his personal and official character.

Adopted by the board at its annual meeting, June 18, 1879.

SPIRITUAL religion!" He had no doubt of his final entrance into heaven. He rejoiced in an assurance of being wholly consecrated to God, and the witness that he was made "perfect in love." He was often very happy during his long confinement, and, being visited by large numbers of sympathizing friends, he had a word of exhortation for all, so that some were led to say his preaching was more effectual in doing good than ever before. He enjoyed religious exercises in his room very much, and often requested those who had the prayer-book to give thanks to God for His special goodness to him in giving him support during the [illegible] grace. To [illegible] all the evidences of his complete triumph in death would greatly transcend the allotted space of a memoir. His work on earth being done, he calmly slept in Jesus, and entered into rest eternal. One trait of Bro. Clark's character ought to be mentioned separately. His unbounded sympathy for suffering humanity. He was unusually diligent in visiting the sick and all other classes of sufferers, and where his limited means failed him in giving relief he would sit down and weep and speak words of kindness and comfort to the afflicted, the result of which was that something like universal sympathy was felt and manifested toward him in his late sufferings.

SOWING THE TARES

A prisoner in the penitentiary, who heard Mr Moody's remarks one Sunday not long since, retired after the discourse to his cell and soon emerged with the verses hastily written. They had been suggested by the discourse, and he handed them to Mr Moody, who in the afternoon led them at the Maryland Institute. They are as follows:

Sowing tares, when it might have been wheat,
Plucking the bud of life's wreath all complete—
The night sinks down amid darkness and tears,
While we are so cruelly sowing the tares.

Sowing the tares of malice and spite,
Words of black import—Plutonian blight!
We might have sowed roses amid the sad cares,
But we turned from their beauty to sow the tares.

Sowing the tares—how dark the track we
May reap a curse with it's sickle-toothed horn;
Pleading no mercy—no pity—no prayer—
While we are sowing the tares.

Sowing the tares to bring a crop down,
That robs of its jewels the richest crown;
Turning to silver the poor seeds he helps
To grow whiter and whiter as we sowed the tares.

Sowing the tares—a cover of night—
When we might have sowed joy on every sad sight;
Oh, God, turn not in thy mercy and pray,
And read for us verses for sowing the tares.

Rebels and Reprobates.

It is often assumed in political discussions that every rebel in the late civil war was a reprobate; that the fact of rebellion is prima facie evidence of moral depravity. Every intelligent man who was found fighting of his own accord in the armies of the Confederacy must have been a false and wicked man. This theory is accredited by many honest persons at the North, and is diligently disseminated by many others who care less for justice than for political success.

So long as such opinions prevail at the North it is impossible that there should be real and lasting peace between the two sections. If the people of the North believe the people of the South to be a mass of perjured traitors, who have proved themselves false to the highest obligations, they can do not them with respect or look upon them their confidence. Every movement the South will be regarded with suspicion; every profession of loyalty will be listened to with sneers and every political campaign in which the interests of the two sections collide will be the occasion of an outburst of taunts and reproaches on account of the ancient perfidy.

If the people of the South are as base as many Northern politicians are trying to make out, it was a great mistake ever to resist the dissolution of the Union. Why should we wish to have any political relations whatever with a people who have proved themselves destitute of honor and fidelity? If this is their true character we ought either to have welcomed secession, or else to have subjugated or exterminated them. The restoration of political rights to such a people as some Northern statesmen now represent the Southern people to have been a gigantic blunder. If they were all such injured gentlemen as you now say, gentlemen, and if you knew it all the while, as you now say you did, why in the name of all that is holy did you ever give them back the suffrage? Why did you not banish or disfranchise the whole race forever, as soon as they laid down their arms? If rebellion was the sin that you now represent it to be, if it was a proof of utter moral depravity, if it so blackened a man's character as to render him unfit to be honored or trusted by his fellow-citizens forever after, what right had you to clothe that man with political power?

The fact is that rebellion was not with the great majority of the Southern people, in any sense of the word a sin. To have been a volunteer in the armies of the Confederacy fighting against the Union was not a proof of moral obliquity. Multitudes of the intelligent men who were in those armies were as upright, as conscientious, as honorable as any of the men against whom they fought. Neither were they, in any true sense of the word traitors; on the contrary, they would have been traitors if they had not been just where they were.

The prevailing political doctrine at the South before the war was the doctrine of State Sovereignty. As the prevalent doctrine at the North was the doctrine of Nationality. There were believers in the national supremacy at the South, as there were believers in State rights at the North, but these were exceptions to the general rule. The great majority of the educated Southerners held the theory of State Sovereignty. They regarded the government as only a confederation of Sovereign States, and they thought that each State had the right to withdraw at pleasure from the confederation. The Northern man thought that his supreme allegiance was due to the government of the United States, the Southern man gave his supreme allegiance to his own State. The Northern man, when he was in Europe, called himself an American; the Southern man called himself a Virginian or a South Carolinian or a Georgian. This was not merely the choice of local pride—it was the language of the deepest political conviction. From their earliest years the Southerners of this generation had been taught this doctrine, and they believed it just as heartily as the Northern people believed the opposite doctrine. Those of them who took the oath to support the Constitution of the United States took it understanding that the oath was only binding while their States remained in the Union, and that when their States withdrew from the Union they would no longer be citizens of the United States.

Holding this political theory they came to the question of secession. Some of them were in favor of secession. They thought it would be both right and expedient. Some of them were opposed to it, not because they doubted that their States had the right to secede, but because they deemed it a foolish and injurious policy. But when by a formal vote of its Legislature this State had seceded from the Union, the Southern man had no longer any doubt as to where his allegiance was due. Stonewall Jackson was a citizen of Virginia; he was opposed to secession; but when Virginia had seceded, he was still a citizen of Virginia, and he was no longer a citizen of the United States; it was to the Old Dominion that his supreme loyalty was pledged, and when the Old Dominion declared war against the United States, and called him into the field, it was loyalty and not treachery that made him gird on the sword and rush to her defense.

A great multitude of the people of the South—the educated people, the leaders of opinion—were in the same case. They were not, consciously, traitors to their country; their country was their State; it was to this that they had always been taught to pay their highest allegiance; and they followed their convictions as brave men should.

If the Northern man, who believed in the supremacy of the National government, had done the things that the Southern man did, the Northern man would have been a traitor; but he ought to remember that the Southern man's fundamental theories of the government were wholly unlike his own, and that the Southern man's acts must be judged by a reference to the political principles which he honestly held. Before this prevalent doctrine of State Sovereignty, the war could not have occurred. That doctrine was uprooted; it is settled now that this is a nation, and not a confederation, and the obligations of loyalty must be determined and understood in the Northern and not in the Southern sense. But they were not so understood at the South before the war, and therefore the fact of rebellion is not a proof of moral depravity.

The readers of Sunday Afternoon will perhaps discussion which arose of the primer. We have thought it worth while, in the interests of peace, to devote a little space to such a study of the question. From a failure to remember these elementary principles many Northern people judge their Southern brethren harshly and unjustly. It is now more than fourteen years since the last battle of the war was fought, and it would seem that by this time there ought to be some approach to harmony between the sections. The politicians will do their best to prevent this, of course, so long as they can gain anything by keeping up the quarrel; but the Northern people at large do not mean to be unjust, and many of their harsh words would be withdrawn if they could put themselves in the places of the Southern people, and understand all the motives that influenced them in the great civil war. We ought to be able to see that the people of the South did not forfeit their own honor nor our respect by their rebellion against the United States; that it is unjust to taunt them with treachery on that account; and that it is asking too much to demand of them that they grovel at our feet as conscious miscreants whenever the war is mentioned. If we are to live together as one people, it is high time for both sides to cease from outing reproaches, and to study with all diligence the things which make for peace.—Sunday Afternoon.

A Missionary Catechism.

The following is from a short missionary catechism prepared by the American Board:

How many Congregational Churches in the United States of America? 3,620.

How many members in these churches? 332,

How many are enrolled in Sunday-schools connected with these churches? 405,741.

If each member of these Sunday-schools would contribute one cent a week to the mission schools of the American Board, how much would it make in a year? $2,28,81,32?

How much was received from this source during the last year? $1,025,47

How much does this average for every Sunday scholar? About one cent a year.

What shall we do about it? Will any be one cent a week, if the church members will try to five cents a week?

Suppose all the church members should agree to this: how much would they raise in a year? $16,6,[illegible]?

Of this system, what would be the probable income contributed by the 405,741 churches and Sunday-schools? [illegible]?

What does this calculation teach us? The value of systematic benevolence in every church and every Sunday-school.

Why should we all give something? Because this is one way of obeying the "marching orders" of the Great Commander.

Who is the "Great Commander?" He who said: "All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth."

What are His marching orders? "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."

What is the promise given to those who obey? "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

What answer does the Lord desire from every disciple, young and old? "Here am I; send me."

Old Editions of the Bible.

Queer titles have been given to some old editions of the Bible. The "Bug" Bible was printed in London, 1551; and received its nickname from the fact that Psalm xci, 5, was translated: "Thou shalt not need to be afraid for any Bugges by night," instead of, as in our version: "Afraid for the terror by night."

The "Breeches" Bible was printed in Geneva, in 1560; and is also called from Genesis iii, 7, being translated: "They sewed fig-leaves together, and made themselves breeches," instead of aprons, as in our version.

The "Treacle" Bible was printed in 1568; and in it Jeremiah viii, 22, reads: "Is there no treacle in Gilead," etc., instead of balm. In 1609 this word was changed to "rosin," and so came the name of the "Rosin" Bible; and in 1611 this last word was changed for "Balm," as now.

The "He" Bible, printed in 1611, takes its name from an error in Ruth iii, 15: "He measured six measures of barley and laid it on her, and he went into the city," when the word should have been: "She went into the city," etc.

The "Wicked" Bible was printed in 1631, and was so named from its omitting the word "not" from the seventh commandment, making it read: "Thou shalt commit adultery;" and this extraordinary omission occurred again in a German edition of 1732; so that there is a wicked Bible in each language.

The "Vinegar" Bible was printed in 1717, and is so called from the head-line of Luke xx, which in it is made to read: "The parable of the vinegar," instead of "the parable of the vineyard." The printer of this edition was one John Basket, of Oxford, and from its many errors in spelling and punctuation was sometimes called "A Basket full of errors."

The "Fool-pot" Bible was the edition translated by Eliot for the Indians. Describing, by the sign of crossing his fingers, what he thought would represent the "lattice work" through which the mother of Sisera cried, Judges v, 28, he asked the Indians for the proper word for it, and they gave him one, which he inserted in his translation, supposing, of course, it was right. But when he became more fully acquainted with their language he found he had made the passage read: "The mother of Sisera look out a window, and cried through the eel-pots," instead of "lattice."

Religious Intelligence.

—The Sixth Council of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations was held in New York, July 8–11. William B. Hackenburgh, Esq., of Philadelphia, was elected president. In the preliminary address the introduction of Prof. Adler's name by the Rev. Dr. Sonneschein, a St. Louis rabbi of liberal tendencies, called out some expressions of dissent from the conservative delegates, but the proceedings as a whole were characterized by harmony and enthusiasm. The Rev. Dr. Lilienthal read a report on the Hebrew Union College, to be opened in Cincinnati in September. The faculty is to consist of four tutors for the three higher classes and a professor who will act as president. There are to be two departments—preparatory and collegiate. Students who pass a successful examination in the full course of studies will receive the title of rabbi. In the preparatory schools special attention will be given to Hebrew literature, and proficiency will be required in the Pentateuch, the historical books of the Old Testament, Jeremiah, forty Psalms, Proverbs and selections from Rashi. The Rev. Dr. Mulzleuer, of this city, was elected Professor of Talmud. The collegiate course will extend through five years. A letter from the Hon. Horatio Seymour was read, expressing the interest in the plan for inducing the Jews to take up farming pursuits. The question of Sabbath observance was virtually ignored by the adopting of a resolution declaring that the means of obtaining a stricter observance of the Sabbath were not within the reach of the council. Perhaps on example and instruction alone can produce sentiments on the subject. An attempt was made to define the Sabbath as the seventh day of the week, but the motion was lost. A plan for circuit preaching was adopted, and many prominent rabbis have volunteered to preach in places where no regular congregations are organized. The principal subject of discussion before the council was the question of establishing a Jewish agricultural colony in the West. After an interesting debate, in which farming was characterized as the natural occupation of the Jews, resolutions were adopted, in substance, as follows: That a tract of land should be purchased large enough to accommodate at least fifty families and support a model farm and school; that immigrants of Jewish schools and charitable institutions should introduce into the institutions elementary instruction in the subject; that the opportunity now opens for a good investment of money by capitalists; and that the Executive Board of the Conference empowered to solicit from their number a committee of five on agriculture to solicit donations of land, of farming implements, and moneys; to adopt such family in the colony from fifty to eighty acres of land, that shall be rent free for seven years, after which the land taken up shall be offered to the tenement at a reasonable price, the money received to be applied in purchasing other land, and so on. A dinner at Delmonico's, Thursday evening, brought the council to an end, and was attended by a large number of delegates. The Rev. Dr. Howard Crosby spoke, with great applause, in response to the toast: "Our Seat of Learning."

—PASTORAL LETTER FROM THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.—An "Epistle," or pastoral letter, from the Society of Friends to the quarterly meetings in Great Britain and Ireland has been issued. It is largely doctrinal in its nature, expresses the belief of the body in the commonly-held doctrine of Christianity, and deals with some points of interest in current affairs. As to the "speculative upheaval," which pervades so much of the popular literature of the day, the true attitude is described as the knowledge which "opens into a deeper and higher experience" of Christ's love. The effect of the prevailing trade depression in its spiritual aspect is glanced at, and there is an expression of grief "over the prevalence of the war spirit," and especially at "the spectacle of professedly Christian ministers proclaiming the bayonet and the rifle as among the means of opening the way for the spreading of the gospel." It is added that language such as this seems highly dangerous, for though the Lord may overrule all, yet "the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God." Attention is directed to the fact that two centuries have passed since the representative meeting of the body first assembled, and that it has been held in unbroken succession, during which the names of Fox, Penn, Barclay, Dewsbury and Whitehead, of Thomas Story, the Fothergills and Woolman—to mention no others—appear in its proceedings. The letter is signed on behalf of the yearly meeting by Mr. Gibson, its clerk.

—Late news from Bishop Crowther's mission on the Niger river, Africa, state that one of the chiefs, Captain Hart, who had been most active at Bonny in the persecution of Christian converts, is dead. On his death-bed he commanded that all his idols be destroyed, warning his followers to have nothing to do with idol-worship. The next day after his death the heathen fell upon the collection of idols with a will. Archdeacon Crowther writes:

"Early this morning they began to destroy the jujus. The work of destruction is great. The poor gods and goddesses are having very hard times in late Captain Hart's quarters now. They are handled in a most unceremonious and rough manner. Two canoe-loads, it is said, have found their resting-place in the deepest part of the river, and those that float and will not sink are broken into ever so many pieces. Floating wrecks of idols made and worshipped since the days of Captain Hart's father are to be seen dotted all over the creek, to the river in the shipping. Imprecations and curses have taken the place of worship."

Bishop Crowther reports that, after a long season at Bonny, in which, owing to persecution, there were no converts, eight persons have been baptized.

—The Swedenborgians have in the United States eighty-nine societies and churches and ninety-one ministers, together with fourteen licentiates, the entire membership not exceeding 5,000. The denomination carries on its publishing department through its headquarters in the Cooper Institute. There are, however, three publishing houses properly connected with the new church, namely: the American Swedenborg Printing and Publishing Society, the Board of Publications, and the American New Church Tract and Publishing Society. The business of one and all is to translate and publish the works of Swedenborg and commentaries thereon. There are several theological schools connected with the denomination. A fund exists for the gratuitous distribution of New Church literature, by which nearly 10,000 volumes of Swedenborg's writings have already been sent out, and it is stated that the demand for these is on the increase. The Sunday-schools of the church number about 35,000 pupils.

BIBLE WORK LAST YEAR.—An exchange thus sums up the work of the American Bible Society last year: It has employed 117 colporteurs, chiefly in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Michigan, Missouri, Nebraska, Iowa, North and South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and West Virginia. The combined results of these agencies for seeking out and supplying the destitute are as follows: Number of families visited, 145,631; number of families found without the Scriptures 77,341; number of destitute families supplied, 52,862; individuals supplied in addition, 27,029; Sabbath-schools supplied, 703.

—The ninety-eighth annual, and the one hundred and tenth Irish Conference commenced its sessions on the seventeenth of June, in Belfast. It was the largest Conference ever held in Ireland, and, as the first United Conference, historic in character. The Ministerial Conference was composed of some 280 ministers, and the Representative Conference of 120 ministers and an equal number of laymen. The Rev. Dr. Rigg, the President of the English Conference, presided. Though the Union of the Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist Conferences was effected last year in Dublin, their work remained distinct until the present. The Rev. Wallace McMullen was appointed representative of the next General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in America.

AN AMUSEMENT FOR DISSENTANTS.—In the eastern part of London on a recent Sunday, all the churches belonging to the established persuasion, and having a seating capacity of 11,875, were visited, and exactly 381 persons were found present in the afternoon; in four of them only two persons were found. About the same time eleven mile-a-minute omnibuses in the same part of the city were visited, and 6,000 were said to be found.

Persons of the higher classes in Spain, receiving copies of the gospels in paper covers through the mail, The Spanish Evangelization Society sends them.

At the beginning of this century the Congregationalists contributed, on average, of eight cents each for missionary purposes; now the average is $7.52 per annum.

The Japanese Churches connected with the Presbyterian, Reformed and Scotch United Presbyterian Missions, propose to send a pioneer missionary to Corea.

The Northern Presbyterian Church lost in a year by death 9,011 of 4,000 ministers, and the Southern Presbyterian Church nearly 40 out of 1,691 ministers.

M. de Laveleye, the distinguished Belgian economist, who with Frederic Harrison came some time ago from the Roman Catholic, has connected himself with the Protestant Church.

CHARITY.

Only a drop in the bucket,
But every drop will tell;
The bucket would soon be empty
Without the drops in the well.

Only a poor little penny,
If we all had to give;
But as pennies make the guineas
It may help some one to live.

A few little bits of ribbon,
And some toys they were quite new—
But they made the sick child happy,
Which has made me happy, too.

Only some outgrown garments,
They were all I had to spare,
But they'll help to clothe the needy,
And the giver are every where.

A word now and then of comfort
That cost me nothing to say,
But the poor old man's sad heart leaped,
And it helped him on his way.

God loveth the cheerful giver,
Though the gift be poor and small;
What of the drinks of fresh cold water
When they never give at all?

From A Little Friend.

DEAR MR EDITOR: My dear little Sister Fannie has crossed the bright river.

Her golden curls were all turned to pure white, and her head was full matured with age.

The cross and book it were in her hands.

The shoes were all laced and ready for her journey.

The strings of the crowns were given to her by the angel band to wear in the bright world.

Fannie was ready for her journey.

Now why should we mourn for her going? Well knowing we shall see her again.

We shall wear crowns and palms.

And live in bright glory.

I am only four years old; will be five on the seventeenth of next March. I am going to school at Beaulah Camp Ground. My uncle, Adam P. Massey, is my teacher. I go to Sunday-school. Every Sunday a prayer meeting is held at this place. Papa and mamma have moved out to this place for health. Our old home is on Bayou Perie. Papa says he is afraid to keep his family on the low bottom land during the sickly season of the year. We are very comfortably situated at this place. My mamma belongs to the Methodist Church. Please bear with my blunders and mistakes, as this is my first.

Your most obedient little boy,

My Birdie.

My birdhouse is not my own invention. I read in some newspaper that an oyster keg made a good birdhouse, and an oyster keg is what you must have in the first place. Most of you know what these kegs are, and can easily get one from some store or some oyster man. Have the head in, and shut up the bung hole; then cut a round hole, two inches in diameter, in the side about two inches from the end you design for the floor of your house, and nail this end firmly to a square piece of board large enough to project a couple of inches all round, like a little platform. Next, cover the outside of the keg with pieces of rough bark. If you have a woodpile to go to, you can probably find logs from which you can pry off while, curving pieces that will go half round your little house; but if not you must get smaller bits from trees in the woods and trim them with a knife so it will lie flat, no matter if the joinings are not very close; when the house is fastened on some crib or trellis, no eyes but the birds' can possibly see the crevices, and they are not critical, bright as they are. Use small heads for nailing on the bark, and if driven in a little on the slant they will hold the bark more securely. For a roof nail two wide strips of bark to the upper rim of the keg in such a position that their upper edges will meet in form a gable just in the middle above the door. It is not necessary to have this roof water-tight, because the head of the keg will keep out the rain; trim off the upper edges of the bark roof sides so that they will meet closely, but if they do not stay together well, take a few hooks and take several stitches with fine wire, and your work will be better. The house will look prettier if you make the roof both wide and deep, giving what, in a real house, would be called "overhanging eaves."

Last of all, fill up the open spaces under the gables with bits of bark trimmed to fit, and nailed perpendicular to the keg. Now your birdhouse is complete. Nail it on to a tree and hang a basket of crumbs and a few bits of suet in the keg, which the birds will read as well as you the sign "To Let," and one of your old hats will have wrens and chickadees coming to look at the vacant house, and at last, some nice little couple will conclude to rent it for the summer.

No matter if your house is not ready until late in the season. I do not think all the birds get to housekeeping before June, and yet know often they build more than one nest in the course of the summer, so, unless there are too many enemies about, I think you may be pretty sure of a tenant. When I made my little house, I had no idea it would last more than one summer, but it has weathered the storms of four winters and still looks well. Every spring the wrens and bluebirds quarrel and fight for possession of it, the wrens, I am sorry to say, always coming off conquerors. And every spring I watch the nest building from my window with great satisfaction.—St. Nicholas.

Blindy.

I have all the friend whom we all call "Blindy," because he always says, "Bye and bye!" when he is asked to do anything. He will get up by and by; he will learn his lessons by and by; he will bring in wood for his mother, or go to the store for groceries by-and-by.

A great many troubles come to him and to his friends from this bad habit of putting off his duties, and not long ago, it was the cause of a very serious misfortune.

One morning when the ground was covered with ice, little "Blindy's" mother said:

"Jack, I want you to sprinkle some ashes on that icy place by the back door."

"All right," said Jack, "I'll do it by and by."

"But you must do it right off," said Mrs. Harris; "somebody will fall there, if it is neglected."

"Yes, mother," and "Blindy" started off to get his sled that he had lent to the boy next door, thinking that a few minutes' delay could not make much difference.

Just about that time, Mamie, Jack's four-year-old sister, begged to go out and play in the yard.

"It is so shiny out," she said, "I guess it's most like summer. And mother I shall not get any cold, keeping up somewhere."

So her mamma put on her little rubber boots, her warm cloak, and hood, and mittens, and let her go out with her tiny sled.

Poor Mamie! She clambered down the steps, laughing and singing to herself, and picking up the flowers. But all at once she uttered a cry of fright and pain. She had slipped upon a [illegible] and broke her arm.

Then came the surgeon to fix the little soft, pain arm, and long days of weariness followed, days of great care and anxiety for the household, all because one careless boy put off obeying his mother for a few minutes.

One day when Mamie lay asleep, and Jack was softly watching her, Mrs. Harris said some very serious words to Blindy.

"My boy, make up your mind," she said, "I would rather be blind, or lame, or deformed, than to be under the control of the habit of putting off. Such a habit will take away the very best of life, and make our work and our pleasures all there is to get of real enjoyment. I will do nothing and say nothing. And I need not tell you that such a habit makes endless troubles for all our friends. Think of the suffering you have caused your little sister."

The tears rolled down his cheeks.

"I know you do not mean to make trouble and sorrow," added his mother, "but you always will until you learn to do every duty at the right moment—that is, at the first moment possible."

Blindy took the lesson to heart, and his friends hope that they will soon have reason to change his name to "Bright-eye."

THE CHILD DIES.—Holland is a beautiful country, full of green fields, with cattle and sheep grazing in the pastures; but there are few trees and no hills to be seen. The ground is so flat and low that two or three times the sea has rushed in over parts of it and destroyed whole towns. In one of these floods, about two hundred years ago, more than twenty thousand people were drowned. In some of the towns that were flooded not a creature of any kind was left alive.

A large part of the water that rushed in at the time of that flood still remains. It is known as "The Meres," and in one part of it there is a little green island—a part of an old dike or dam—which is called the "kinder dijk," or children's dike, and it got its name in this way:

The waters rushed in over one of the little Zeeland villages, and no one had any warning. In one of the houses there lay a child asleep in its cradle—an old-fashioned cradle, made tight and strong of good stout wood.

By the side of the cradle lay the old cat, baby's friend, probably purring away as comfortably as possible. In came the water with a fearful roar. The old cat, in her fright, jumped into the cradle with the baby, who slept through all the turmoil as quietly as ever. The people were driven from their homes. The house was torn from its foundations and broken in pieces. But the little cradle floated out on the angry sea in that dark night, bearing safely its precious burden.

When morning came there was nothing to be seen of the villages or green meadows. All was water. Hundreds of people were out in boats trying to save as many lives as possible; and on this little bit of an island that I have spoken of was a dog. Do you think they found it? Why, that same old cradle, with the baby asleep in it and the cat curled up at her feet, safe and sound.

When the boatmen came to it they thought no one could be in it, for it floated so high in the water. But curiosity led them to look, and the little baby was found. Then the cradle was called the "kinder dijk," and it goes by that name to this day, and the story is told to strangers as the most remarkable instance of God's providence.—The Nursery.

"She was very ill and I was to give her [illegible] but for two weeks she did not attend Sunday-school. Was she sick?" No. Away? No. Dead? No. Well, what was the matter? Why, she didn't have a new [illegible]. The teacher investigated and found out what the difficulty was. It has become known and now the delinquent pupil says she will be ashamed to wear her new hat when she gets it. And now all are dressed alike. [illegible] to the careful attention paid to it. Does it take [illegible] that do make a good, godly method [illegible]? Let all workers in St. Paul's Sunday-school take up the subject of punctuality in these little things, and the Sunday-school will become a real school of Christian Work.

The Serious Age.

Death to young people, even when they allow themselves to think about it at all, seems very remote, and almost as if it were not to be. It is only when we reach that age in which our remaining days are necessarily limited that frequent glimpses of the dark river come unbidden to our eyes. On the down grade of life the years are as swift as they are few. The young may not live long, but the old cannot. There is the difference between the possible and the certain. The man of fifty naturally gives himself twenty years more; at sixty a decade is left. Years ago we heard a ministerial friend say that he would probably be in heaven in twenty-five years, and in a love-feast talk, the other night, ten years was the probable time left. Not till they are fifty do people usually begin to think seriously of the end, and to estimate the number of their years. After reaching three score-and-ten by reason of strength, they may count it possible to prolong their days to four-score. But, if this age be reached, the considerate accept each day as more than could be reasonably expected.

The outlook is certainly a solemn one, and it may be at the same time a very cheerful one. Some aged people live by the day, and do not suffer their anticipations to run out much beyond the present hour. But others calculate on at least a few more years—not many, but a few more years. The end is near, but it is never quite at hand. Those who have no religious support in declining years must keep off the thought of death, or yield themselves to the delusions of unbelief. Generally the gathering shadows are too deep to be wholly ignored, and there is melancholy and despair, or the ungathering refuge of atheism. Death, eternity, our relations to God, are not only personal questions, but we know that the solution is close by. The man of sixty who is not impressed with the nearness of eternity, and with a solemn sense of his accountability, must be either incapable of reflection, or unwilling to think of the near but mysterious future. Aged sinners sometimes appear more reckless. What they really feel and fear may be masked by this outward seeming, or they may have become so utterly hardened and abandoned as to be indifferent. The convictions of their youth, as to long years before them, and the purpose of ultimate reformation, must have given place to other convictions which have adjusted themselves to the situation. Time is short, and there may be no intention of repentance. There is something dark and fearful in death, and something dreadful in being consciously upon the very brink, but there is little thought of coming to Christ.

And yet we believe that some—many altogether—after fifty years begin to lead a new life. The serious age has brought them to realize their folly and danger, and to turn to the stronghold of salvation. It proves a singular mercy to them that this period, so well adapted to earnest thought and candid reflection, has been vouchsafed to them by a merciful and long-suffering God. That they are permitted to reach this period of life may be interpreted favorably. They have been spared in order that the strongest and completest forces of the probationary condition may be brought to bear upon them. The reason of old age, in the singer, is the long suffering of God, and the end is a merciful one, even his salvation. In his case there is this beam of light. The serious age to him, if truly understood, is also a time of opportunity and of hope. It may be more difficult for the aged to repent, but there are stronger appeals to move him to act.

With Christians the period of life to which we refer is not without its serious aspects. It is a matter of joy to feel that we are very near heaven, so near that we can, with tolerable accuracy, tell how many days or years it will be before we grasp the palms and tread the tearless shore. It is a satisfaction to know that the weary journey is about at an end, that the warfare of earth is well-nigh accomplished, and that we are almost home. But, on the other hand, comes the reflection that our time for work is also nearly out, and that the record is about to be closed. With the hope of salvation, clear and unclouded, it is hardly possible to look back upon our mistakes and our inefficiency without painful regret. All we can now do for Christ is limited to the narrowest span. Once we looked forward to forty or fifty years of usefulness; now we are shut in to fifteen, ten, five; or, perhaps, laid aside, we are passively waiting. The account is already made up, and the book of our life-work is closed and sealed until the judgment. Not much longer, at the most, can we do anything for the world's salvation.

The most earnest work of the Christian may well be done after he has passed the summit of life. His time of life is a call to greater diligence, and to more hearty and consecrated endeavor. His zeal may well be kindled to a brighter flame by the consciousness that the time is short. He will press with more vigor along the mark as he nears the goal. These last days ought to be the best for zeal, for power, for unmeasured love, for faithfulness. The sermon, then, is from a dying man to dying men, and each day is one of the golden opportunities of which but few remain. "I must work the work of Him that sent me while it is day." The last hours of the harvest day are the busiest ones. The belated traveler hurries over the last miles. The victory must be achieved upon the battle-field before the sun goes down, or never. If in earlier life there has been loitering and trifling the serious age calls us to energy, activity and to vigilance, and to downright earnestness in the work of God.

Tact.

This is a little word, but has a world of meaning and infinite power for good. Scarcely less needful is it to enlarged success than great talents and vast attainments. Indeed, genius and learning have but a history of failures and blunders without its skillful guidance and control. The important quality or faculty expressed by this little word is a quick and nice perception, "a ready power of appreciating and doing what is required by circumstances." Or, as aptly defined by another: "It is a delicate and subtle gift, almost like a sixth sense, which enables its possessor to grasp a situation, and say and do the best thing, in the best manner, at the right moment." A faculty of immeasurable value! It is quite as necessary to know when to speak as what to say. Often, while speech is silver, silence is golden. What blunders have we heard, by even great minds, saying, may be, good things out of time and tune! What mistakes are made, and good intentions disappointed, by ill-timed reproofs or exhortations! In the work of the pastorate this is an indispensable quality. It readily discerns the fitness of things, and never offends the proprieties of delicate refinement. We have heard of a minister in the midst of company, engaged in animated conversation on another subject, abruptly address one of the number: "Well, sister, how is it with your soul? Are you prospering in religion, growing in grace?" Very proper interrogatories, and, no doubt, good were the intentions of the man of God, but his abruptness amounted to grossness, and, instead of comforting, injured the spirit of his parishioner. Our religious feelings are sacred and delicate. Approaches into this holy of holies must be made gently and lovingly, and not by driving against its golden-hinged gateway with a thunderous battering ram of cold, bald questions. Tact would easily glide into religious conversation, and possibly, without a single interrogatory, ascertain the sacred secrets and profoundest experiences of the inmost soul. Sympathetic words of encouragement, exhortation and reproof fall into their natural places, and when the cheerful face of pastor is gone she feels that an angel has been entertained unawares.

Tact suits the subject to circumstances. We have heard of another zealous brother in his pastoral conscientiousness discoursing to a sister bereft childless, on family government, the training and educating of children. In that subject she could have no personal interest, and from the visit gleaned little edification. A heart burdened with sorrow needs sympathy, not didactic theology. The tempted and fainting crave help and brotherly care, not reproof nor disquisitions on human frailties.

Tact also suggests the theme for pulpit ministrations. Topics are adapted to occasions. It readily discerns the spiritual needs of the congregation and community, and indicates the proper subject for discourse. It never scolds when comfort should heal the wounded spirit. It never preaches death and judgment on a bridal occasion, nor rings the marriage bells at a funeral. Indeed, for every occasion, every profession, and everywhere, tact gives access and success.

Now this is consistent with most scrupulous conscientiousness. Tact is not compromise. It is not hollow flattery. It is not dishonest insincerity. It is neither the policy of the demagogue nor the smile of the sycophant. No. It is the very soul of high born honor, readily grasping circumstances to achieve the greatest good. It pleases not for pleasure's sake, but to gain influence and win souls. A lack of this quality has been mistaken for unusual fidelity and decision. Offensive bluntness, with some, is synonomous with great firmness and courageous zeal. The man who scolds and offends is not more faithful and less wise than the pastor who sympathizes, or admonishes and saves. Their ends are the same. They are alike honest and true, but the one has tact, and succeeds, the other has not, and fails. Gruffness is not grace, neither is grossness the badge of holiest zeal or grandest fidelity.

This tact is susceptible of cultivation. Its development, so necessary to pastoral efficiency, demands our careful thought, vigilance and prayer. This is the wisdom of the serpent with the harmlessness of the dove.

Robbery in New York.

Here is something fully as bad as Louisiana repudiation. We trust that those religious journals in the great metropolis that have shown so much concern for our State and City will try to get the beam out of their own eyes. We quote from Harper's Weekly:

"At the commencement of the Charlier Institute, a few evenings since, the Rev. Dr. Howard Crosby, who has an excellent gift of plain speech, said in a brief address: 'My blood boils when I see how some men ride over the community. The greatest highway robbery ever committed was by the elevated railways, for they robbed us of our highways. I know that rapid transit is necessary; we must have it. But I hold that when corporations take away the property of the widow and the orphan, and give nothing in its place, it is robbery, and nothing but robbery.' This emphatic remark was received with hearty applause, for its truth was instantly and universally recognized. There are poor men and women, whose sole income was derived from the rent of rooms, who are now deprived of their living by inability to let rooms which front the elevated roads, while, on the other hand, those who advanced the money to build the roads have already realized fortunes. The franchise was given. But those who gave the franchise gave away the bread of honest poor people." How great the robbery has been is gradually becoming known. No less than $13,000,000 of stock and $16,000,000 of bonds bearing from seven to ten per cent. interest represent these roads. Everybody knows that not the half of this enormous sum has been expended. At least one hundred per cent., probably more, have the managers of these railways divided amongst themselves. One-half of their stock and bonds never cost them one cent, not even the expense of printing them. Here is an open theft of nearly fifteen millions of dollars. No greater swindle has ever been practiced even here, where Tweed once led a gang of thieves. Property has been greatly injured that certain men might fill their pockets with money. In the face of this rapacity of capital the daily press is almost daily repeating the monstrous injustice that "the rights of the few must give way before the public convenience." The Romish and pagan doctrine, destructive of all morality and righteousness, that the end justifies the means, that men may do evil that good may come, is announced and maintained. What is the difference between such a principle and that of communism? Why not at once divide the earnings and savings of the industrious and give every one a share? Why not print thousands of millions of treasury notes and fill every man's pocket? Men are saying more and more that this unsightly nuisance ought to come down, and their indignation is rising as it becomes more evident what an enormous robbery has been perpetrated.

A Pointed Article.

Mr. Editor: Returning yesterday from an appointment in a neighboring village, I met D., a circuit preacher of the old type, who had been on his monthly visitation to one of the churches in his charge. He seemed in a good humor, and I asked for a report of his labors. He replied that there was a good congregation, the house was full, and they had a gracious time. I inquired how long he had preached that morning. "One hour and ten minutes," said he, straightening himself up with the air of a man who had put in full time, and had nothing to be ashamed of. Remember, it was July weather. I mused a moment, and then asked: "Was it as broad as it was long?" "No, sir," was the emphatic reply as he flourished his whale-bone buggy whip over a high mettled steed. "No, sir, I give it to them like this—big at the beginning, and draw it down to a point. Let your sermons taper—let them taper, sir—long and keen to a point, with a good cracker at the end. That moves them, sir." One more flourish of the whale-bone, and the gallant boy was speeding along the road, to other fields of labor, while I poked up black with my stubby rattan staff, and jogged on turning the matter over in my mind. That night I was in a city church. It was an occasion of interest, yet I heard a pastor—one of the finest pulpit orators in the State—say that he had been informed that his congregation would hear him if he would preach fifteen minutes. That church has had few conversions of late years. Oh! how I wanted to fix a "cracker" on that brother's whip. But, alas! I remembered that my own was badly worn. Said nothing. Received the benediction, and was dismissed.

RAMBLER.

Among the Mountains.

Mr. Editor: I gave you a rash promise in my last postal to send you an account of the District Conference at Murphy, N. C. Had I known then the mountains that intervene between the two States, I might not have undertaken the expedition. But now that it is past, I suppose I may as well proceed and "recount the labors of the way." Long have I lived in the sight of these great mountains, but had never before attempted to pass them. For, be it known to you, that a man may live in North Alabama and East Tennessee all his life, and if he travels in the proper direction—i. e., from northeast to southwest—he will never have to cross a mountain. There may be mountains before you and mountains behind, and there will always be mountains to the right of you, mountains to the left of you, but keep in the right track and you may avoid them. But set your face eastward or westward, and there will be no evasion. Right up, up you must go, and down, down you must come again. The Blue Ridge, which lies out far to the east, is the great water-shed between the Atlantic and the Mississippi. From its lofty sides come rolling down our own Hiwassee, Tennessee, French Broad and Holston rivers, through a vast system of mountains only lower than the Blue Ridge. Among these are White Cliff, Unicoi, Nantahalie, Mt. Mitchell, Clingman's Peak, the Roane, the Bald, White Top, and others from 2,000 to 6,000 feet above the sea-level.

Our route from Hiwassee College to Murphy carried us via White Cliff Springs, the Tellico (an American corruption for the beautiful Indian name Tahlequah,) the Unicoi and the Long Ridge, ascending the general course of the Hiwassee river, and much of the way along its rugged banks. White Cliff is a detached mountain that rises sheer 1200 feet from the valley below, and is crowned with a fine hotel, mineral waters, and a throng of guests, mostly refugees from the regions of the yellow fever. It is ascended by a fine graded road of two miles, giving many magnificent views of the Tennessee Valley, and the mountains beyond.

The Tellico is a series of long and very steep ridges with sharp ravines, ascended by a turn pike road, much of which is like a winding gallery or stairway several hundred feet above the bottom of the ravine. From the top of the first mountain you descend into a notch or gorge along a branch thickly set with laurel, fearfully dark and deep, a noted place during the war for deserters and robbers, the graves of some of whom decorate the sides of the highway. Into such recesses the energy of the government has driven the gangs of illicit distillers, who now threaten the revenue forces from their mountain fastnesses. We had some uncomfortable fears of being mistaken for revenue officers and fired into like the poor preachers on Boston Mountain, Arkansas.

From the summit of the last Tellico we easily descend to the gold fields of Coca Creek, which have been worked for thirty years by primitive methods, and still yield fair wages to the miners. The beautiful crystalline quartz, indicative of the presence of gold, lies abundant on the highway. And now we ascend the Unicoi, the line between Tennessee and North Carolina. We travel for some miles across its broad back, unconscious of our altitude by reason of the lofty peaks a little way off to our right and left, that rise far above the common height of the mountains. The presence of the white pine, the spruce and the balsam, and of the unfailing laurel on the streams, proves our exalted height.

By many curious windings along the banks of streams we finally emerge from the wilderness into the regions of inhabitable lands on the summit of the Long Ridge, where a full crop of apples and peaches first greet our wondering eyes. And now the bank of the river is reached and pursued upward through yet other mountains, till finally we reach the pleasant site of Murphy, where DeSoto once camped in his mad search for the precious metals amid the mountain fastnesses of the Cherokees.

But, having reached the place of the District Conference by such a laborious journey, I must needs postpone any account of its proceedings till we have rested.

Holston Conference, July 25, 1879.

The Chinese in California.

Mr. Editor: For a quarter of a century the Mongolians have been immigrating to this western coast of America, until at this time there must be at least 100,000 Chinamen in the United States. Of this number about 30,000 reside permanently in San Francisco, making about one-tenth of the entire population.

In a portion of the city bounded by Pacific street on the north, and Sacramento on the south, and Stockton street on the west, and Kearney street on the east, is a section known as Chinatown. Here the Chinese hive together in all kinds of houses. They have even burrowed into the earth, underneath the houses, banquettes and streets, and made little berths separated by boards, in which, without ventilation, scores and perhaps hundreds sleep. Here are the opium dens, hid away from the sight of strangers, and here are played those games of gambling and nightly revelry so revolting to even the average civilization of San Francisco, which is very average, be assured.

Domestically, they cannot be said to exist. There are but few Chinese families here. It is the rare exception when a Chinaman brings his wife and children to this land. Although on the arrival of the Steamer "City of Tokio," recently from China, among the 1,000 Chinamen aboard were a number of entire families, having come with the intention of remaining here permanently. Sometimes you will see the interesting spectacle of a mother leading in advance of her one or more of her children by the queue, or, as is commonly called, pig tail. The women among them are not generally wives.

The Chinaman has a tacit understanding with himself that he comes here to do business and make money. He comes for gain. He does not care for the politics, schools, churches or government of the country to which he comes. He is absolutely indifferent to all these. He merely wants protection while he does the white man's work.

The money he receives he takes care to preserve against any possible investment or deposit in this country. On the principle that China is the place to spend money, and America the place to make it, he holds to it, until, having acquired a sufficiency for all future need, he goes back to his native land to tell of this glorious land of radiant bonanzas, whose gold glisters on the sea shore, and comes through the rock formations of the gigantic mountains; and then another horde come over. They are much like Vandals or landsharks.

They work unceasingly while in this country, doubtless looking forward to the long day of ease and luxury which they are to enjoy in their own country.

They have no Sabbath for worship or repose. Their irons hardly ever grow cold, and their utensils of labor are almost continually in motion. You see in their every act the one thought: "Hurry, get much money, and go back to China;" and so they circulate through all the streets of the cities and highways of the country. They venture any service. They do most of the washing and ironing, shoe and cigar manufacturing, vegetable selling, and they are seen in stores, on railroads, in mines, in blacksmith shops, at the carpenter's bench, in the foundries, in the fields. Wherever white men labor there you may find the Chinaman. He aspires to compete with the laboring Caucasian in everything, and knows nothing but victory.

He can work for less and live on less than the white man. He is four times quicker than the African, and twice as fast as the average white man in many things. He walks faster, and talks more rapidly, and moves quicker than any class of men with whom he competes. The consequence is he has gotten all the business of the common day laborer. The white mechanic often has, beside his own strong beef-accustomed stomach, a large family to support by his hands. He finds by John without a family unforbidding him, and at his place.

The Irish washerwoman and cook, and household servant, find John the master of all their secrets in the wash-room and kitchen. For John can outwash and outstarch everybody. In the kitchen he is as spry as a cat. His mistress need toil him but once how to do anything, and his quivering initiativeness will invariably make him the master of the situation in the future. The slow and pompous hotel African waiter and house man servant find John in their places with fantastic and assiduous effort, eclipsing all the happiest success of his predecessor. So John has everybody down on him, except the farmer and capitalist, who need his quick, cheap service, and the housewife, who says Chinamen are great improvements on "Biddies."

Thousands of men and women who once commanded their own prices for even menial services now stand begging for employment at almost any wages. They have been forgotten by their old employers, and they claim that the Chinese are at the bottom of all their trouble. So they say the Chinaman must go back to China. That is what Kearneyism, Communism, Socialism, and all this California political excitement means. It all settles down on this ultimatum: Chinese immigration must cease, or the working classes of this section of the United States will starve, or be driven from their homes to the East, or to the wild plains of the desert, or to the government lands in the mountains. Which shall it be is the question which is discussed every Sabbath by the sand lot orators of San Francisco. Which shall it be the maidens and matrons sing in their homes and out in the public assemblies of these unemployed laborers, until these men are almost frenzied.

The prejudice against Chinese labor is so great that to make anything popular and salable the advertisement is often added: "Manufactured by white men, or no Chinese employed." The anti-Chinese clan have the ascendency in San Francisco. Their city nominees will most probably be elected, and then they hope for relief from the men they expect to put in office. The election will close on the third of September, and in January, 1880, the new constitution, adopted by a majority of 11,000 of all the voters of this State, will be in force. This constitution very materially affects the Chinese. The clause on the Chinese reads as follows:

Art. xix, Sec 2. "No corporation now existing, or hereafter formed, under the laws of this State, shall, after the adoption of this constitution, employ, directly or indirectly, in any capacity, any Chinese or Mongolian. The Legislature shall pass such laws as may be necessary to enforce this provision."

Sec 3. "No Chinese shall be employed on any State, county, municipal or other public work, except in punishment for crime."

Sec 4. "The presence of foreigners ineligible to become citizens of the United States is declared to be dangerous to the well-being of the State, and the Legislature shall discourage their immigration by all the means within its power. Asiatic Coolieism is a form of human slavery, and is forever prohibited in this State, and all contracts for Coolie labor shall be void."

* * * * * * *

"The Legislature shall delegate all necessary power to the incorporated cities and towns of this State for the removal of Chinese without the limits of such cities and towns, or for their location within prescribed portions of those limits, and it shall also provide the necessary legislation to prohibit the introduction into this State of Chinese after the adoption of this constitution. This section shall be enforced by appropriate legislation."

It can be easily inferred from the animus of this section of the constitution what the feeling of the State is toward the Chinese.

A point as to the constitutionality of this article may be raised here, as it is in direct contravention and antagonism with the verbiage of the treaty made between this government and China, as cited in the veto of President Hayes to the Chinese bill recently offered in Congress. According to this treaty, the rights of property and liberty were to be secured to the Chinese, and the protection and privileges of the most favored citizens were to be extended. And, in consideration of this, our native American citizens in China were to enjoy like benefits, and to have the protection of the Chinese government secured.

I do not propose any solution to this difficulty. Not being a party to the trouble, I do not feel it my duty to find a way out of it. But there is another point of view from which to look at this question.

While the Chinese are undoubtedly getting good through this treaty, we are, as a nation, receiving reciprocal benefit. There is immense trade with China to be developed by this country. Joseph Cook, summarizing on this phase of the subject, is reported as having said: "In a commercial point of view, the anti-Chinese crusade is greatly to be deprecated. We should be rivals with England for the trade of the Orient. She has now ninety per cent. of this trade (employing 1,400 ships.) We have only five per cent. In this relation the abrogation of the Burlingame treaty would be a national calamity." We are nearer China than England; hence should naturally command more of her trade. But now, just as law and inclination and safety all conspire to make this desirable achievement probable, the hue and the cry against the Chinese threaten to consign the whole matter to defeat.

But the opportunity to educate and evangelize the Chinese is not the least consideration. Missionaries are at work. All the Protestant Churches are active in school and chapel work among them. This seems to be the divinely appointed moment for the regeneration of China. True, they have their temple or josh-house in which they worship now, and right under the shadow of our Christian civilization they fall before their idols, but on the Sabbath the missions are well attended. A few Sabbaths ago I visited Rev. O. Gibson's Chinese Methodist mission, and was delighted to see the room filled, and to hear, for the first time, a sermon in Chinese by a Chinaman. There can be no doubt as to the ultimate effect on the Chinese character of all these Christian influences. In 1876 a summary was published giving the total number of Chinese Christians baptized in America:

Presbyterian Church, San Francisco	80
Presbyterian Churches	18
Methodist mission	11
Methodist Churches	2
Congregational Churches	2
Baptist mission, San Francisco	1
Baptist mission Oregon	15
Episcopalian Churches	1
Suffering not reported	20
Professions or dates unknown	6

Perhaps the greatest efforts put forth by these different missions have been since the above date. At some future time I may give a clearer insight into the present working and results of all the missions.

Health of the City.

The Health of New Orleans continues excellent. The following is the mortuary report for the week ending August 3:

The total number of deaths for the week ending August 3, was 91, of which 50 were white and 37 colored, 15 were white males, 11 white females, 23 were colored males, 14 colored females; 49 were natives of Louisiana, 20 of other States, and 31 were foreigners.

The principal diseases were yellow fever, 3; other fevers, 7; consumption, 21; dysentery, 5; Bright's disease, 3; old age, 1; and debility, 4.

At this writing, Tuesday, August 5, there are but three cases in the city, two of them of so mild a type as to excite no apprehension whatever. Up to this time there have been seven cases in all. At this date last year there were fifty cases a day. Our medical men of long experience do not think the fever will spread to any great extent. New Orleans has not had a better health record, with one or two exceptions, for twenty years than that of the present summer.

The fever in Memphis is evidently of a milder type than last year, and the mortality there continues about the same as for a week past. Refugees from Memphis have been taken with the yellow fever in many places, North and West, but in no case has the fever been communicated by them. Whether this is to be accounted for by the theory that the hybernated germ is incapable of propagation beyond the first instance, or by the theory that atmospheric conditions are unfavorable to the spread of the disease, the fact remains, up to this date unquestioned. We cannot tell what a few weeks may reveal, but the indications are that there will be no epidemic of yellow fever anywhere in the Southwest this year, except at Memphis, and even there the type is of a character to excite no alarm in other sections of the country.

Will they exert themselves to swell the list? There is no other investment that will supply the same amount of interesting reading matter, fresh each week, as this liberal offer. Let us hear from you at early as possible.

To any person sending us four yearly subscribers with $8 the paper will be sent free for one year. Sample copies will be mailed to parties when advised, to facilitate agents in securing subscribers. Address all communications in connection with above to the publisher.

EDUCATION IN ALABAMA.—Hon. L. F. Box, the accomplished and earnest Superintendent of Education for Alabama, has made, says the Daily Register, Mobile, Ala., his report for the school year ending September 30, 1878.

The total school revenue was $377,634. The amount appropriated to schools was:

For white schools	$210,334
For colored schools	156,218

It is not fact, therefore, that the Southern States are depriving the colored race of their proportion of school revenues, but on the contrary, in a State like Alabama, where every department of the government is in Democratic hands, the negroes get a large share of the public funds, and that, too, when it is well known that the use made of it by the race is not such as a careful State should permit.

There are normal schools for colored teachers at Florence, Marion and Huntsville, which together receive ten thousand dollars.

Of the children of educational age there were 214 720 whites and 160 713 blacks; and half of these attended school during the year.

Card from Rev. W. P. Barton.

DEAR DOCTOR—We have a little yellow fever in Memphis, and have had a big scare. I think both are abating. The quarantine keeps me out of my district, so I am resting on my oars till the calamities are overpast. I have written to try to get passes to go to my appointments, but the trains on the Mississippi and Tennessee Railroad Roads, running through my district, are stopped and I do not suppose they have any mails. If they do it is from the South and your paper may convey intelligence of my situation and push my good people and preachers to work to get me passes for DeSoto, Tate and Panola counties as they know I am not infected. Plenty of rain of late; health good in this vicinity and everything very dull. Can't be at my protracted meetings.

W. P. BARTON.

DEATH OF HON. WILLIAM G. LITTLE.—We have just received, says the daily Register, Mobile, July 27, through a private source, the painful intelligence that this young and distinguished Alabamian is no more. We are informed that Senator Little died suddenly of congestion of the brain, at the residence of Walter Winston, Esq., in Pickens county, while on his way to attend the Chancery Court at Carrollton. No man in the State of his age was more distinguished, or more widely known than William G. Little; few more generally or more justly beloved. At the bar, his talents as a lawyer had placed him in the front rank of his profession in his section; in the politics of the State he had already attained to the high office of President of the Senate, which he held at the time of his death.

THE NEGROES.—Representative Ryan, of Kansas, whose district embraces Topeka, says the half has not been told of the destitution of the deluded colored people. There are hundreds on the verge of starvation, and more are coming into the state. On the outskirts of Topeka five hundred are encamped, and are living fed through the charity of Topeka people. The colonization societies and the relief societies have exhausted their resources of relief, and Mr. Ryan says he does not know what will become of those who are now on their way to Kansas. Oddly enough, the "fever" now is to go to Iowa and Nebraska, where the climate is even more severe upon them than that of Kansas.—Christian Observer.

As usual we are constantly receiving communications without the names of the writers. We cannot publish them without knowing who the writers are. An important communication, for instance, from Port Gibson, Miss., is simply signed "Sigma." The writer must acquaint the editor with his name before it can appear. Please to observe our rule. Give us your names, if you expect your articles to appear.

The Pacific Methodist, July 25, says: Rev. S. Halsey Werlein, pastor of Lafayette Avenue Church, New Orleans, called at our office this week. Bro. Werlein is with his parents on a visit to his sister, Mrs. Lilly Werlein Ware, the gifted and popular Instructress of Vocal Music in the Methodist College. He will make visits to places of interest in our State and go back to his Louisiana work rejoicing. We would be glad to lay violent hands upon him and keep him in California, but that he has a young wife in the Louisiana lowlands. However, the Western work and its needs will doubtless so impress him as to make him useful to us on the other side.

Our Nashville Sunday-school officials for August have been received. There is no falling off in the editorial work during the heated term. Dr. Cunnyngham does his writing for the press up in the atmosphere of the Virginia mountains. This may account for the excellence of his summer work.

We deeply sympathize with Rev. Wesley B. Beggs and his wife of Pensacola in their bereavement. The death of Miss Lida is a heavy blow. But she was ready for the summons. Her obituary will appear soon.

On our second page will be found a very able and just biographical sketch of Rev. Henderson H. Montgomery from the pen of Dr. C. H. Andrews.

Bishop Keener has changed the time of holding the Columbia Conference from September 17 to September 21.

BEYOND THE GRAVE. Being three lectures before Chautauqua Assembly in 1878, with papers on recognition in the future state and other addenda. By Bishop Randolph S. Foster, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, New York: Phillips & Hunt, Cincinnati; Hitchcock & Walden, 1879.

"Man a spiritual being" is the topic of the lectures. The author in the first lecture considers the spiritual as distinguished from the material part, opposes and disproves materialism, and very convincingly establishes the existence and endowment of spirit as "the self-conscious ego." The proofs of the immortality of the soul are set forth in strong and conclusive array in the second and third lectures. His proofs are drawn from reason and from revelation. The doctrine of recognition is clearly stated and elaborately vindicated. The subjects of the volume are peculiarly suited to the analytical acumen and spiritual insight of Bishop Foster's mind, and we need not say that they are handled with clearness and eloquence. A valuable book and timely, in view of the materialistic tendencies of the times. For sale by Lathrop & Wilkins, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

LETTERS TO THE RIGHT REV. JOHN HUGHES, Roman Catholic Bishop of New York. By Kirwan. First series. Philadelphia: Presbyterian Board of Publication.

Kirwan's Letters were published many years ago and were very popular. The work has been a standard ever since its first appearance, and we are glad to welcome a new edition. After the lapse of a quarter of a century they have lost none of their interest, nor of their adaptation to the great Catholic controversy.

THE air of perfection, cleanliness and home-like comfort which is so apparent at the American House, Boston, is one of the characteristic features of that well-regulated establishment. To the well-to-do stranger this is no small item. To the man of limited means the opportunity seldom found at first-class houses for so low rates. Read the advertisement in another column.

KENTUCKY STOCK BELL.—The bells manufactured by T. P. Barclay, of Louisville, are the standard stock bells, and the best made in this country. He does the largest bell business in the United States, controlling all the Western and nearly all the Southern trade. The stock is entirely made of good material, and is equal in appearance, and the workmanship is unsurpassed by any. Barclay's aim is to make a good bell for less money than the competing bells, and he is willing to show that there is at least one bell he is willing to keep up. Price, tone, style, etc., he says, have no charm for him unless the bell is right. He has always been willing to put his bells on trial, and has never had one returned. He has been in the business for twenty years, and has a reputation to sustain, which is a guarantee that his bells are what he represents them to be. Send for circular and price list.

CARRIAGE MANUFACTORY.—Mr. Wm. Rhodes, of Louisville, Ky., employs the largest capital of any carriage factory in the United States, and is not only having the largest sale of carriages, buggies, phaetons, etc., but of any establishment in the city. His establishment is one of the institutions of Louisville, and is a credit to the city. Every carriage turned out from this house are executed in the most perfect manner in every respect. A vehicle can be purchased at small cost that will have style and finish like the finest, or at a little higher cost a carriage which for elegance of style, workmanship and durability cannot be surpassed. The establishment employs a large force of workmen, and enjoys the advantages of obtaining a large quantity of stock at the lowest cash prices. Those who need a vehicle should call on or address Wm. Rhodes, Louisville, Ky., and get his prices before buying elsewhere. See advertisement and write for circular.

MITCHELL'S FOUNDRY, LOUISVILLE, KY.—The following just by Rev. concerning this excellent establishment, by the representative of the ADVOCATE on his recent visit to Louisville: The work turned out by the foundry is celebrated all over the country. The bells on the Lee Chapel, Wallace and Richardson were made at those shops, and Superintendent, of New Orleans, is now ordering a new set of bells for his new boat, of the same line. Mr. Mitchell, the former proprietor, who established these shops in 1837, died some time ago, universally respected for his Louisville fair and upright qualities of heart and mind. He was succeeded by Mr. Walling, his son-in-law, a gentleman thoroughly competent to fill the place of his father-in-law. Our planters and gin-making brothers of anything in this line, could do no better than correspond with so worthy concern. Sugar and cotton bells also work a specialty.

TRAVELERS and tourists desiring to accommodate on cabin and deck will consult their interests by calling on or addressing their orders to Mr. Ed. Gandy, No. 61 St. Charles street. This gentleman has facilities for supplying tickets at a considerable reduction from regular rates, and as many of our friends have already availed themselves of the opportunity to save travel, expense, and warmly commend him, we take pleasure in making a note of it. It is an old but true saying that applies in this connection that "economy is the road to wealth." Give him a call, and it will repay you.

Manuring Orange Trees.—To plant an orange seed, to make it grow to three feet high by mid-summer, to transplant this three-seedling to Angers, so as not to retard its growth for one week, to weed, prune as I like for eight or ten successive years, I see are not difficult feats, and unfortunately easier to do in soil where we intimately perceive the want of success of some trees, than to ascertain the orange likes.

But when your orange trees get to be eight or ten years old and begin to bear, if not before, the practice must begin of supplying orange-food, or forego or lower the crop. I was recommending a new comer to Nice, to visit an orange grove about to yield its first crop, since in Manatee County, situated on the bank of a river, two tons to the acre, or what was originally a worthless space, "pay the owner in advance his dues," said my friend to my new comer. "Yes, is that not right?" said I. "But no——is and we shall need to manure orange trees," said they, look[illegible] what[illegible]

Is only to be wise.

But I say now, and stake my reputation on good sense thus to say, that there is no land in Nice, or in the Maritime Alps, that does not require manure to make good crops of good oranges. And now the question is how to do this closely and well.

Now, three years ago some strange bird came along and said to me, Mr. West, are going to tell you how to make your work an art in a few seconds, and practical way. I would not, or I might not have told you that angels meet, and thanked her for a piece of information that would before this have saved me thousands of dollars, and even cost my life to a great degree. But no such angel ever did, and now am going to give the reader that very secret. Have on hand also now, two of which pieces, I hand cabbages to 20 cents for a great deal of them, but the return of an orange tree can have now than that, is you like enough, an [illegible] grove of the value of a [illegible]

HOW THE SEA IS SALTED.—Many people imagine that the ocean-water is naturally salt, and will be surprised to know that the salt comes from the rocks and is washed into the sea. The sea depends on the disintegration of rocks on land for its saltness. It does not originate in oceans and seas. Rains wash it, and hold it in solution as particles are liberated by violence, decomposition, and gradual action of many natural forces. All streamlets and rivers, therefore, are constantly transporting salt to the sea. If there is more than can be held in solution, then it accumulates, in masses at very deep points, which, in the revolution to which matter is subject, may again be a stratum of salt somewhere remote from where the mass was formed. Thus the salt-mines of Perryngal; and the vast horizontal bed of pure salt in Texas; as well as that mountain of rock salt in Domingo, was collected at the bottom of ancient seas, which are now dry land remote from water. There are places in Africa where the process of disintegration of salt from water is regularly going on, but there is not water-power enough to force it onward to the sea. Hence the particles are spread abroad and mixed up with soil. The negroes of Lahnl, in Northern Africa, having discovered its distribution where there is no water to dissolve in the ground, leach it. In that way they separate the salt. By evaporating the water holding it in solution, an excellent article for domestic purposes is produced. Salt pervades the earth. It exists in the grasses and most vegetable products on which animals feed. In that way they derive enough in most countries to meet the demands of their natures. They require as much as civilized humanity. With them salt is necessary, as with ourselves, to like plog the organs of vision in good condition. Stop the supply and blindness would be universal.

REPAIRING THE EYE.—Some curious facts have been brought to light in the regeneration of the eye during experiments made by M. Colasanti, facts of a very pleasing kind it would take but few words to explain. Experiments made upon rabbits and guinea-pigs, to whom tumor would be recognized and whether even the eye of the animal would be reproduced. With this view, he has been completing his operations, always, of course, taking care to touch the crystalline capsule, for experience has shown that in order that an organ shall regenerate, a portion of it must be left in its place. These last thirty months after the amputation was effected the experimentalist was able to state that the eyes, which had been entirely were liberated, and that the crystalline was reconstituted. He operated on twenty-four animals, of which eighteen the animal eye survived. The world seems to show that the organ in the stone cephalites nearest to the female process resembles in every particular, more or less complete, that portion which has been struck off from the shell.—Gallagher's Messenger.

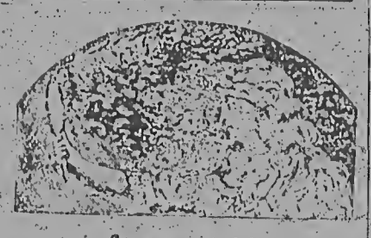
Some people, all in the habit of studying and practicing, or at least attempting to make applications of it in the line of life. A recent case occurs to us with this being applied to the question in New York, recently, in the case that the professors and ministers of the several evangelical denominations of Christ are talk and practice. Mr. Moses and Mr. Field were both members of the same Presbyterian Church, and recognizing the propriety of evidence of God, they gave both testimonies as to their worth in weight. They did. In his address the commemorative meeting, Dr. Wm. Adams said, quoting the report of the service, to be imported to on canvas, when Captain Hudson, devoted to the west gallows, after the cable had been drawn to its anchorage on the shore, surrounded by his crew, with uncovered head, delivered his skill, and thought to have gave thanks to Almighty God for its generous favor, and for the new power born into the world.

The King of Greece, on his recent visit to Paris, at which he was accompanied by his eldest son, expressed a wish that a suitable present should be found for honoring the treaties brought to bed by the expeditions. On his Majesty's return to Athens a Greek banker, M. A. Zographi, placed 100,000 fr. at the King's disposal.

The total cost of that enormous structure, the new Palace of Justice at Brussels, is stated now in the report addressed to the Chamber of Deputies to be about 44,000,000 francs, still a quarter of a million to be spent before the building, which will certainly be admired though a somewhat costly piece of modern architecture.

News has reached Lourenzo Marques that the Portuguese Captain and twenty-six of his men were killed on the margin of the River Limpopo, studying the results caused by the recent flooding. They had explored the Cuma go from its source to its eighth parallel.

Fifty-one metals are known to exist, thirty of which have been discovered within the present century. Four hundred years ago only seven were known.



Ayer's

Hair Vigor,

FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS NATURAL VITALITY AND COLOR.

It is a most agreeable dressing, which is at once harmless and economical, for its saving the hair. It restores, with the freshness of youth, faded or gray hair, to a healthy, glossy color, as may be desired. By its use hair is thickened, and baldness, though not always cured, often checks falling of the hair immediately, and causes a new growth to all cases where the glands are not destroyed, while to brashy, weak, or otherwise diseased hair, it imparts vitality and strength, and renders it pliable.

The Vigor cleanses the scalp, cures and prevents the formation of dandruff, and, by its cooling, stimulating, and soothing properties, it heals most if not all of the humors and diseases peculiar to the scalp, keeping it cool, clean, and soft, under which conditions diseases of the scalp and hair are impossible.

As a Dressing for Ladies' Hair, The Vigor is incomparable. It is colorless, contains neither oil nor dye, and will not soil white cambric. It imparts an agreeable and lasting perfume, and as an article for the toilet it is economical and unsurpassed in its excellence.

IT IS WORTH A TRIAL.

"I was troubled for many years with Kidney Complaint, Gravel etc.; my blood became thin; I was dull and inactive, could hardly crawl about, and was an old worn out man all over, and could get nothing to help me, until I got Hop Bitters and now I am a boy again. My blood and kidneys are all right, and I am as active as a man of thirty, although I am seventy-two, and I have no doubt it will do as well for others of my age. It is worth the trial.—Father. (Adv)

A gentleman in New Orleans was agreeably surprised to find a plump turkey served up for the dinner, and inquired of his servant how it was obtained. "Why, sir," replied Sambo, "dat turkey has been roosting on our fence tree nights. So dis morning I seized him for the rent ob the fence."

PREVENT YELLOW FEVER.

It has been well proved that prevention is better than cure. A very simple and effective preventative for Yellow-fever and other fevers has been found in BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS. They were used during the last season in New Orleans very successfully; the command was issued to using them was to apply them over the stomach; thousands of them were worn. They are one OF THE MOST ACTIVE ANTISEPTICS and vein to destroy the poison. One reason why they are of special value is that they stimulate the digestion and thus enable the system to overcome the influence of the malarial poison. They are a cheap and almost certain preventative. Ask your physician about them. Benson's Capcine Plasters are a sure preventative and cure for chills and fever if worn as above. Price 25 cents.

An extensive religious movement, attended with considerable excitement, is in progress in South Wales. It is conducted by three young women, who call themselves "the Salvation Army." The chief one is a Miss Sheppard. The addresses of these women are producing a great impression, especially upon the rough miners. A very amusing account is given of the attempt of a reporter to interview the principal lady. He asked her, "How many converts have you made?" "About five hundred," was the reply. "Where do you intend to go," he then asked, "when you leave here?" "To heaven," said Miss Sheppard. He then tried to ascertain what her plans for the future were, when she met him with earnest exhortations to "look to his soul's salvation." She told him that she had no time to spend in furnishing news for the papers, but must give herself to saving souls. The gallant reporter was compelled to leave without an item. The meetings are often held all night, the time being occupied in singing Welsh hymns, praying and preaching. The young men and women at some of the meetings throw away their ornaments and pipes, and at one service the young women tore off the flounces from their dresses, renouncing them as idols. One account of an all-night meeting in Rhondda Valley says: "Young men rushed to the penitents' table, calling to God to bless them, and one of them took off his coat and tucked up his sleeves, while the rest of the audience, embracing and shouting "Hallelujah," shook hands and sang and prayed by turns. This went on till daylight."—Christian Intelligencer.

THE WORTH OF A CONVICTION.—It is as true on the highest authority that according to a man's faith it will be unto him. His power in the world—his power over himself, his power over others, his power over difficulties—may almost unvaryingly be measured by his convictions. If he believes something—believes it with all his heart—he is a power in the direction of that belief. If he lacks conviction, if he does not believe anything so positively that his belief has possession of him—that it takes hold of his whole mind and soul, and makes him ready to do everything, to endure everything, and to dare everything in its behalf—all the talents in the world will not make that man a great man, or enable him to accomplish a great work in the world.—Sunday School Times.

The man who comes late into church with squeaky boots is the only thing in America that can even for one moment divert the minds of a fraction of the American people from the election returns. This may seem rather hard on the sermon, but it's a fact all the same.

WHITE CLOVER.

The day's last lilting lay is sung,
Have faded in a haze of blue;
The sun has been a-long time low,
The day has been a warm day too;
But all desire is over.

The sable veil is lodging from the west,
The night has brought a dream of rest,
And deep beyond what I can hear
The ocean's lisping of a shell
While flies an evening bird still
Across the silken clover.

The glory of the day has ceased,
The moon has risen in the east,
The distant hills and meadows near
Are bathing in the light, soft and clear,
That veils the lazy leaves of clover
And from rare grass and straw perfume,
Here as the clover's odorous bloom,
Dear to departed as the living loved,
In the fog as in all lights and the dusk,
I will rest again in deeper rest
And cradle in scented clover.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

ST. PAUL, Aug. 7.—Advices received at headquarters from Gen. Miles show that Sitting Bull, with his whole company of squaws, papooses, has moved south to Swan Lake, eighty miles from the United States boundary. Where he intends to remain. He promises not to cross the line or trade on the American side without permission.

Reports from traders show that the whole yield of wheat in this State this year will be about 40,000,000 bushels, more than double that of last year.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 5.—A Boise City dispatch says: A message has been received here from Camp Bidwell stating that the Indians attacked and defeated Lieut. Conley, Jr., wounding two men and capturing all his pony stock, most of his baggage and twenty-three mules. He asks immediate reinforcements.

LOUISVILLE, Aug. 5.—Specials received by the Courier-Journal indicate a falling off of the Democratic vote cast at yesterday's election for State officers and members of the Legislature. The Democratic State Central Committee estimates the total vote at not over 200,000, a falling off of 50,000 on the Tilden-Hayes vote, and over 15,000 on the last gubernatorial vote. In this city the vote will show over 8000.

The Republicans make all the gains in the Legislature and defeat the Speaker of the last House, but the Democratic majority is all-overwhelming in the General Assembly. The call for a constitutional convention fails for want of a constitutional majority in its favor. In this city, where the Workingmen elected five of the seven Representatives two years ago, none but Democrats were elected yesterday. The Greenbackers cut no figure in the contest.

NASHVILLE, Aug. 3.—Wm. H. Vanderbilt has just given $100,000 for a gymnasium and the erection of a civil engineer room and scientific hall on the grounds of the Vanderbilt University.

NEW YORK, Aug. 10. There are no cases of yellow fever either at Upper or Lower Quarantine.

CHICAGO, Aug. 11.—Jas. C. Clark, manager of the Illinois Central railroad, has sent a circular to managers of southern railroads and roads leading from and to Southern States, suggesting a meeting in November to adopt measures looking to more reasonable and intelligent quarantine regulations to be established by answer of congress, in accordance with the suggestions offered by such convention.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 11.—Thirty-four cases of yellow fever in all—twenty whites and fourteen colored—were reported to the Board of Health to-day; six deaths. Among the number J. T. Hastings, Ed. Soloss, William Cosell, Henry W. Johnson and Johanna Ostmann.

At a meeting of the Executive Committee of Safety, held this afternoon, a committee was appointed to confer with the various ministers regarding the propriety of closing the churches, and discontinuing any large public assemblies which are calculated to spread yellow fever in our midst.

Dr. S. H. Collins, who had been sent to Forrest Hill to investigate the cases of fever at that point, returned to-day. He reports one person, a refugee from Memphis, down with fever. Every precaution has been taken against its spreading, by isolating the dwelling.

FOREIGN.

CITY OF MEXICO, July 13, via Havana.—Two chiefs of pronunciados in Yucatan and Mexico have been arrested and their followers dispersed.

President Diaz warns the revolutionists that if they rebel they must expect halters.

The Supreme Council of Masons has asked President Diaz whether he ordered the executions in Vera Cruz.

ESCORIAZO, Aug. 5.—The Infanta Marie del Pilar, second sister of the King of Spain, is dead.

King Alfonso and the Princess of Asturias did not reach this place until after the decease of the Infanta.

LONDON, Aug. 6.—King Menek, who rules over the Southern portions of Abyssinia, has sent a letter to the Anti-Slavery Society, announcing the abolition of the slave trade throughout his dominions.

PARIS, Aug. 6.—Official reports state that the grain in the south of France has been harvested in excellent condition, and that in the north, and west a good average crop may be expected.

LONDON, Aug. 7.—A Berlin dispatch to the Pall Mall Gazette says: The latest proposal of Cardinal Nino, the papal secretary of state, do not satisfy Prince Bismark, who is willing to ameliorate the operation of the May laws but is not willing to repeal them.

LONDON, Aug. 7.—Advices from Cape Town to July 22, received by way of Madeira, say several Zulu chiefs have submitted to Sir Garnet Wolseley at St. Paul's. It is reported that he assisted them they will hereafter be governed and protected by the British government. General Crealock and Colonels Wood and Butler will return to England. Another detachment of marines recalled to go home. A strong force is to advance on Ulundi immediately. General Wolseley having promised the chiefs that he would be there by August 10. A detachment of infantry, cavalry and irregulars, and probably also General Newdegate's column, will advance simultaneously on the king's new kraal.

HAVANA, Aug. 11.—There were ninety-three deaths from yellow fever in this city last week being a decrease of forty from the previous week.

CAIRO, Aug. 11.—Up to August 6 there had been 76 cases of cholera among Europeans at Cantara of which number 69 cases were fatal.

LONDON, Aug. 11.—The Standard's Rome dispatch announces that a correspondence has been commenced between the Pope and the Emperor William with the hope of finding means to settle the existing differences between them without entirely abrogating them.

LONDON, Aug. 11.—A Berlin dispatch to the Pall Mall Gazette says: It has been suggested that if Roumania agrees unreservedly to accept the principle of equal rights for the Jews, some allowance should be made in respect to its application. Germany, among other powers, appears willing to grant this concession.

FIELD NOTES.

ALABAMA.

OAKVILLE, ALA., July 31.—The prospects here are good. We have built a neat parsonage, and have now three new churches under way, all of which will be finished soon. The people here are very poor as a general thing, but they love the church and make sacrifices for her interests. Money is scarce. Crops look fine. I am whitening, working and praying for a general revival. Already I have tokens of good. Children are being converted, and a general seriousness prevails. Lord, be with us!

J. WYCKOFF.

SHEFFIELD, ALA., Aug. 1.—We are in the midst of a gracious revival. During the past ten days we have witnessed the conversion of many souls, and the church greatly revived and edified. The Lord is blessing us with fine rains, good crops, excellent health, and best of all, the outpouring of the Holy Spirit. During the year we have baptized forty-eight children, received forty-five members. We can confidently believe all the claims made against the church will be met, and every interest of the church advanced.

JOHN J. FERGUSON.

ALISHORO, ALA., Aug. 2.—We have had a good time at Cuckesaw. There were seven conversions and four accessions to the church up till the time I left. The meeting was to be continued. There are now indications of a revival throughout the circuit. Finances are rather low, but still we live, and "owe no man anything." We have a good country, fine crops, and clever people. May the Lord continue with us!

M. E. TUMLIN, P. C.

GREENSBORO DIST., ALA., Aug. 5.—Rain almost every day for three weeks; fodder nearly all lost; cotton seriously injured; worms making their appearance in the black belt of Alabama; corn crop average fair; revivals at Belmont, on the Belmont circuit; at Mt. Hebron, on the Newbern circuit; favorable indications on most of the charges; Eutaw church, remodled, is a beauty; lumber ordered for nine new churches at York Station and Mt. Carmel; camp meetings on the Gaston circuit, August 29; Butler, September 5; Havana, September 19.

YOURS, S. H. FOX.

CARROLLTON CIRCUIT, ALA., Aug. 5.—Our meeting at Pickensville was a success; three conversions, five additions to the church, and its membership revived. Congregations good. Many made resolves at the meeting not soon to be forgotten. Health is not first-class; chills and fevers are frequent. Crops are good. Rain in abundance, except a few neighborhoods. Have removed and rebuilt a church last month.

Your brother, W. M. P. RIPPY.

ROANOKE, ALA., Aug. 5.—We had a good meeting at Rock Mills, twenty conversions and eight accessions. A good religious feeling in the charge. God is among us. I have been sick a month; unable to do any work yet, but the good work goes on. We have a good parsonage, nearly complete; have been in it since January 1. Fredonia circuit, North Alabama Conference, is looking up. Recent rains have been abundant. Crops excellent.

R. F. MOUNTAIN, Pastor.

LANGSTON, ALA., Aug. 5.—The rains which have fallen here recently have revived the spirits of our people. Prospects for a full harvest are flattering, thank God. The ADVOCATE is appreciated.

Truly yours, JAMES COX, P. C.

LENTSVILLE CIRCUIT, ALA., Aug. 6.—Our meeting at Lentsville was a very interesting one. Congregations immensely large. Preaching excellent. The church revived, backsliders reclaimed, sinners serious; four persons converted, one of whom was sixty years old; five additions to the church, one infant baptized. Weather intensely hot. ADVOCATE comes regularly, and is an excellent paper.

R. W. COOKS.

VAN BUREN, ALA., Aug. 6.—Fine rains of late, after a protracted drought. Crop prospects brightening. Health generally good. The spiritual condition of the church is moderate. Our Sunday-school interest is very good. We use our own literature exclusively. Finances sadly behind. There is almost no money in this country. Educational interests looking up. Protracted meetings are now in order. Yours truly.

P. S. BRINDLEY.

MOUNT HOPE, ALA., Aug. 6.—Two third-quarterly meeting for Mount Hope circuit convened July 26. Bro. Kirkam, P. E., was not present; family sick I learn. The meeting was protracted. The church much revived. Altar crowded with penitents, but, strange to say, no conversions. Left the brethren still going on with the meeting, working for the conversion of souls.

J. F. RANDALL.

MISSISSIPPI.

SARDIS, MISS., Aug. 1.—We are hemmed in on every side by the "mediation" of quarantine. Our District Conference was delightful and profitable, presided over by W. P. Harrell, whom many of your readers will recognize as an old pastor and colaborer. He is laboring with joy in the Master's field, and will be ready for his reward. Crops are good, rain plenty, and health good; but little talk of exodus. Business nearly stagnant from the return of fever. Here and there a good meeting is held, and some souls are saved, but the indigence to Sabbath and worship is fearful.

W. F. SULLIVAN.

WAYNE CIRCUIT, MISS., Aug. 6.—Have held one protracted meeting with good results—three accessions, and others, I think, will join. The membership was blessed and much encouraged. Other meetings to follow or rapid succession will take in the field. We are looking and praying for great things. For two weeks past we have had abundant showers, and crops promise a good yield. The people are much encouraged, and the financial condition is hopeful.

D. C. W. ELLIS.

WOODVILLE, MISS., Aug. 6.—Hot weather reduces attendance on the means of grace, and something of a drought succeeds. Corn crops in this county are generally cut off by half. Very early and late corn fields will. Local showers and some heavy rains have caused the cotton to bud and blossom, and to promise well. The colored people somewhat feverish about a mythical Canaan (Kansas); have not begun to leave. County quarantined.

J. P. MARK.

MADISON STATION, MISS., Aug. 7.—Bro. Norsworthy, of Canton, is deeply afflicted. He lost his little babe, Josie Barksdale Norsworthy, on the 30th inst., and we buried her on the sixth—her birthday. She was just two years old. His other little daughter, Lizzie, is very ill with pneumonia. The good people of Canton are very kind to their afflicted pastor.

D. C. LANGFORD.

GOODMAN, MISS., Aug. 8.—The corn crop has been greatly damaged by the drought, but there is now a fair prospect for a good cotton crop. Rain enough now for all purposes. The fruit crop is short. Health generally good; several cases of sickness in this place. John Morrow, an old and valued member of our church at Richland, died June 15, in full hope of heaven. The Holmes County Sunday-School Convention, held its second session at Richland on the 5th and seventh instant, on the second day of which there was a mass-meeting of the adjacent Sunday-schools, and a union basket dinner. There was good speaking, good eating and good cheer generally, and doubtless good was done for the cause.

G. W. HACKMAN.

LOUISIANA.

HOMER, LA., July 30.—Our third quarterly Conference embraced the third Sabbath in this month; continued four days. Bro. Stone, P. E., did nearly all the preaching, and with good effect. I was suffering with tonsilitis, not able to preach, and am suffering still. We had a good meeting. Crops are cut off one-half by drought in this parish. Plenty of rain now. Some sickness. The church is prospering.

JOHN A. MILLER.

ARCADIA CIRCUIT, LA., Aug. 1.—Have had two protracted meetings since writing you; one at Mt. Moriah; nine accessions; was assisted by Bro. Joiner, L. P. The other at Antioch; six accessions; was assisted by Bro. Stone, P. E., who did faithful work. Bro. Hart also preached two good sermons for us. This was our third quarterly meeting. The church at both appointments was considerably revived.

THOS. J. UTTON, P. C.

INDIAN VILLAGE, LA., Aug. 2.—A protracted meeting took place here, commencing on Saturday, July 26, resulting in much good. Rev. R. T. Parish, P. C., was assisted by several other preachers. The meeting continued until Wednesday night; twelve accessions to the church. We now number seventy-seven members at our church.

JAS. M. GRIGGS.

FLOYD CIRCUIT, LA., Aug. 4.—We have just closed our third protracted meeting, the last of which was at Oak Grove; lasted nine days. The church was greatly blessed. Many cold and backslidden members reclaimed. Had thirty-five accessions to the church; nearly all of whom claimed to be converted. Some twelve or fourteen new family altars erected, and the meeting broke with quite a number of penitents at the altar. In these three meetings we had fifty-nine accessions, nineteen baptisms, and, I presume, at least as many conversions as accessions. Health good. Crops common; needing rain now.

T. H. M'CLENDON.

BATON ROUGE, LA., Aug. 4.—On my arrival home I find that our repair fund has been increased by generous donations as follows: From Mr. George I. Seney, of New York, $100; from Mr. H. B. Claflin, of New York, $50; total, $150. I take great pleasure in acknowledging these amounts from New York friends, and I see the spirit of real fraternity in their act. Work is about to be begun on the steeple.

JOHN T. SAWYER.

Talk from the Pews.

I want to be heard on this occasion on the great duty of being cheerful, of taking bright views of life; and I wish to advance some considerations which may be useful in gaining this desirable frame of mind.

The first great enemy of cheerfulness is dyspepsia. We are all living too fast in this rapid age. There is so much to do, and we have so little time to do it in, and is so long and time is so fleeting, the world is moving with such seven league strides that all the nerves are in a tension to keep up. Excitement, mental strain, worry, fret are the fiends which the new civilization has evoked to rasp our sensibilities. The old blue headed old died of slow fevers, and chronic wasting consumption. The new era floods the land with a brood of disorders that prey on the spleen and the nerves. The great danger of some men is that they are too perpetually in earnest. A little trifling is needed to temper the fretfulness to action, and to moderate the viral strain. An old poet says:

"To cure the mind's wrong bias, spleen,
Some recommend the bowling green,
Some lofty walks, all exercise
Fling but a stone the giant dies.
Laugh and be well. Monkeys have been
Extreme doctors for the spleen;
And kittens, if the lapdog bit,
It is said, have cured the fit.

Thomas Cranmer used to seek relaxation by flying kites with the boys, and the great Chancellor got the cares of State romping with the children in the nursery. This don't look very dignified, but it is infinitely more sensible than the foolish rivalries that wear men's lives out. Mrs. Vanity sickens with envy because Mrs. Worldly has silk dresses while she wears muslin. And her husband can't sleep of nights because he is worth only ten thousand dollars, while his neighbor has piled up half a million. Dust and ashes all! Looking back to our times of prosperity we see so many opportunities of happiness which we neglected. We couldn't be joyous and happy then because somebody else had so many more opportunities of happiness. What is the glory in a carriage and horses when somebody else has a chariot and four? A friend of ours once went to a ball with a fifteen hundred dollar dress on, and came home in tears because a rival was arrayed in one that cost two thousand. Yet these are the solemn realities of life with thousands who are driving their faculties to the verge of distraction in order to keep up in the race of fleeting ostentation. Yonder is the cool shade, where flowers grow, and the bright waters sparkle; but people won't sit down and rest, but must be out in the garish sunlight, where their unused cheeks fry, sunbeams. Hence the agony of hard times. The times are always hard when vanity and ostentation are clamoring with voracious appetite for more gratification. There is a large-sized sermon in these words of quaint old John Dyer:

"Oh, that I with myself agree,
And never covet what I see;
Content me with an humble shade,
My passions tamed, my wishes laid,
For while our wishes wildly roll,
We gamble quiet from the soul.
'Tis thus the busy beat the air,
And misers gather wealth and care.

But of all follies commend me to that blind and unreasoning passion for glory or fame—the cacoethes of being talked about. This is the main ingredient of our politics. See the outcome of it. To be harassed to death by criticism, to be tormented with applications for favors, to bow and knuckle to an obscene crowd vacillating as the wind, to rush in a maze of excitement and intoxication; this is the true dance of death. And then comes remorseless oblivion, covering all, the puny triumphs, the agitating passions, the unquiet outlook. Sir Thomas Browne says: But the haughty of oblivion blindly scattereth her poppy, and deals with men without distinction of merit. Who can but pity the wonders of the Pyramids. Herostratus lives that burned the temple of Diana. He is almost lost that built it. Time hath spared the epitaph of Adrian's horse; confounded that of himself."

Verily all is vanity. How much better is simple content, and cheerfulness that looks confidingly in the future. By the way we live you would think that there was no promise, no Providence, and that the end of the day is not sufficient therefor. We have new manufactories of trouble, and borrow it from every side. If it rains, we are going to have a deluge; if it is dry, we will have a famine sure. We go to church and hear of the protecting watchfulness that seeth the sparrow when it falls, and go home to bed miserable and dejected, because cotton is eight cents a pound. We teach our children of the parental tenderness that watcheth over us with more than the yearning of an earthly parent, and illustrate it to them by repining and gloom and practical infidelity.

The church should have a good shaking up on this subject. Society should by twilight to forget its cares, the benevolence and neighborly kindness, and all the social virtues, may have a chance to grow. Our social meetings now are surrounded with preciosity ice. Methodists do not visit each other, because they cannot go as they used to go, and because dignity has to be dandled on the knee of pride. No warmth can be struck out of the contact of souls, because souls are too much occupied with cares.

Give to me the reverent spirit of old Isaac Walton—the complete angler. "And many blessings we enjoy daily, and should give thanks. And, for most of them, because they be so common that men forget to pay their praises; but let us do, because it is a sacrifice so pleasing to Him that made the sun and us, and still preserves us, and gives us flowers and showers, and stomachs and meat, and content, and desire to go angling. Yours truly, Shall Our Organic Law Establish Vice?

To the People of Louisiana:

As a long-time member of this commonwealth, who has standed much—though perhaps, vainly—for her advantage; has paid tens of thousands of dollars into her treasury, and never sought for or received favors, I beg leave to protest most earnestly against the action of the Convention on this subject.

In article 171 of the new constitution "gambling is declared to be a vice" which article 167 provides that as many companies as choose to pay certain stipulated sums may carry on the worst and most pernicious form of gambling for fifteen years. There is something for the people to ponder, and the indignity of it rests now upon the voters.

The fifty-two delegates who voted against the clause, with the assurance which great majorities of the Conservatives of the Convention had in overwhelming proportions of the moral and intelligent force. But the vote of Radicals held the balance of power, and it was they that passed on it this vote.

I beg leave to ask why the Convention should decide this question as to the policy and despise the case, which is made up in the United States Courts between the commonwealth and the grantees, and thereby prevent the Federal Supreme Court already pressing on it what they have reserved or in the very case involved.

In Boyd vs. Alabama, 94 U. S. Supreme Court says: "We are not prepared to admit that it is competent for one Legislature to bind by any contract which it undertakes to make, the power of all its successors respecting matters which, when the contract is executed, are clearly and unquestionably within the domain of sovereign power. Such a doctrine would carry us back to the old feudal times, when the people were transferred from hand to hand with the soil, as tenants of the lords proprietors. Such cannot be the law in this country." Article 167, C. C., provides for the revocation of donations, legally irrevocable, may be dissolved by act of the donor, when the donee fails to perform conditions imposed, or when ingratitude is proved. Article 1901, C. C., provides that a corporation may be dissolved by act of the Legislature whenever in their opinion it may become necessary, and even when the public interest requires it, provided that upon the dissolution of any corporation it shall be liable to pay all its debts and liabilities. Article 167, C. C., provides that a corporation may be dissolved by act of the Legislature whenever in their opinion it may become necessary, and even when the public interest requires it, provided that upon the dissolution of any corporation it shall be liable to pay all its debts and liabilities.

In Angell and Ames on Corporations, based upon the principle of public policy to be kept in view: "The public benefit is deemed a sufficient consideration of a grant of corporate privileges, and hence when a grant of such privileges is made (being in the nature of an executed contract), it cannot, in case of a private corporation, which involves private rights, be revoked. The object of creating a corporation is the successful pursuit of some design of general utility." The principle is, as Comyn says, that the design of a corporation is to provide for some good that is profit by the public." See last month's case.

And this we present as the view of our wise and provident legislators of 1825, in recognizing the possibility that a seeming good might prove to be a blistering curse, and providing for such a remedy. So they put in article 167, C. C., the legislative control upon which all subsequent charters including the lottery company's have been granted to pay or repeal one or indemnify, etc. In these cases a mode of expropriation, so to speak, a sort of right of private property, with previous indemnification, is established. In view of this, I venture to hope that the last legislature in its act of repeal, by the two-thirds requirements, has complied with the law, and therefore we will, of course, Article 167, C. C., as to the power of revocation, legally established, may be dissolved by act of the Legislature whenever in their opinion it may become necessary, and even when the public interest requires it, provided that upon the dissolution of any corporation it shall be liable to pay all its debts and liabilities. Article 167, C. C., provides that a corporation may be dissolved by act of the Legislature whenever in their opinion it may become necessary, and even when the public interest requires it, provided that upon the dissolution of any corporation it shall be liable to pay all its debts and liabilities.

In case establishing that when just indemnification, and when dissolution, were ready and willing to tack this monster, the Convention might say to save, should, rush and declare gambling to be a "vice" (Article 171, and in the same breath make it in the Constitution for fifteen years (Article 167).

To put it as mildly as I can, I beg leave with all deference to submit, that the establishment of such an article as the one in question, among the many legitimate and necessary ones that make up our prospective organic law, seems like the case of an artisan, employed to make a chain of gold, who puts in some brazen and cankering, though gilded, links.

PRETENSES AND PRETENSES.

But it is said "the monopoly feature has been done away with." Yes; and it makes Louisiana the gambling hell, par excellence, of the country, if not of the world and the mecca of gamblers, prostitutes, vagrants and criminals—all, in short, who desires fortune without earning it, will so vastly increase the migration of all desirable people, capital and pursuits will be lost instead of in. We are in such a danger of being known of men as a set to gamblers and repudiators.

An ingenious delegate said "the company will bring in and spend money among us;" but the ingenious delegate did not say that the company will demoralize our people, circumscribe facilities and become most potent (as it has been already in our city and State affairs. For fifteen years we are to have a Frankenstein monster, above the legislature, above the law and above even the commonwealth!

Finally, it is said "This is an irrepressible evil, and the efforts to prevent it have been vains; therefore we recognize it and make it pay." All the vices and crimes of society are irrepressible evils, therefore let us recognize all of them and make them pay. I beg leave to say I have never seen or heard anything like this in the writings, speeches or talk of any statesman or jury. We certainly should take all our policy on principle, and aim at promoting the welfare of the State, the people and coming generations. The line between good and evil, virtue and vice, honor and dishonor, is plain, and there can be no doubt on which side all public men and acts should be.

In conclusion I beg leave to press upon our people immediate relegation on the idea of voting for the Constitution except such and such articles; so that they will not be compelled to vote down a great blessing in order to get rid of an unconscionable curse.

Respectfully, B. J. SAGE.

FEAR NOT.

BY MARIANNE FARNINGHAM

[illegible]

Signification of Terms.

It needs no argument to show that God intends to teach mankind that they must be purified or cleansed from the filthiness of the flesh or the sin-stain, corruption of the spiritual nature. It is plain that He never taught that the water itself could do this. The water, therefore, could only refer to something which could wash away sin. The blood of the bleeding lamb constantly taught that the blood of the Lamb of God must be shed and sprinkled upon the altar of Justice that spiritual cleansing and justification might take place; for without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sins.

This great truth is so plain that one may read to learn. God never departs from this great truth in making use of running water, nor by the ceremonial washing of garments and bodies. He taught mighty lessons, which concerned the health of the soul clean. That in the living water is symbolically alluded to or typified by the great cleansing element of spiritual regeneration, the blood of Jesus was as first thought of by God to be sprinkled. This was the case in the ceremony of cleansing the leprosy. (Levi. xiv, 7: "And he shall take to cleanse him two living clean birds, and cedar wood, and scarlet, and hyssop, and shall kill the one of the birds in an earthen vessel over running water: As for the living bird, he shall take it, and the cedar wood, and the scarlet, and the hyssop, and shall dip them and the living bird in the blood of the slain bird, and in the running water, and sprinkle the house seven times." So, also, the water is sprinkled in the ceremony for purification, or cleanness. Numbers xix 1—21. This is all plain, and the sense of it is plain.

The idea of using water in immersion seems never to have occurred in any age for several thousand years. God had established the standard mode, which never conveyed the idea that the blood of Jesus must and would be sprinkled upon the altar of Justice for the remission of sins. No other ceremony was so fit to teach this truth, and, it being so significant, no one ever tried to improve upon what God or Any mode whatever would not have changed this sense. But as God would present himself to the world as forgiving and consistent with himself in His mode of justification, sprinkling was chosen by Him to teach a great truth to all men. Let it be remembered that He seeks to instruct and not to confuse the mind. This idea of purification by the sprinkling of water was well understood when John came to prepare the way of the Lord, to show the fulfillment of prophesies relating to the coming of the Messiah, whose blood in the time would be shed for the remission of sin; and by these impressive circumstances to urge the people to heartfelt repentance for sin, which had caused God to offer His only begotten Son as a bleeding sacrifice for the redemption of mankind, and to declare both their need of being cleansed or purified, and their faith in the blood of Jesus as sufficient to cleanse them; and all who were of these convictions were to come forward and have water applied to them as a visible expression of their repentance and faith. How could the idea of immersion have been conceived here? It had never been heard of as yet. It could not convey the idea of cleansing or purifying any better, and it lacked the harmony of sprinkling the blood upon the altar; consequently there could be no reason for its introduction, unless it were to confuse the mind, and that, we feel assured, God would not do. We should expect, in the culmination of all prophesies and ceremonies relating to Jesus, that He, of all others, would be true to His own mode of teaching.

But John was a priest in the Jewish Church, whose business it was to officiate in ceremonies already established, and not to make new ones, and of all men, would be the last to make any changes that might confuse the mind or excite the prejudices of the people. Besides, it was his duty to explain prophesies—to bear witness of Jesus.

One of the prophesies of Jesus given by Isaiah lii and liii spoke of His kingdom as being composed of many nations who were to be ceremonially received by sprinkling water upon them; and in the days of the apostles, when they were spreading out to preach the gospel to all nations, this prophesy was fulfilled. Philip joined himself to one who had charge of national affairs, and who was reading this prophesy of Isaiah.—See verse 13 of chapter lii and chapter liii. And Philip began at the same Scripture, and preached unto him Jesus; and, when the eunuch understood, he asked to be baptized, without a word of explanation as to mode, for it was suggested by the prophesy: "So shall He sprinkle many nations." No other idea could have been suggested by that Scripture. We are at a loss to know how immersion was thought of here, especially as they were in a desert. It was out of harmony with God's mode of using water; besides, it was directly contrary to the prophesy. Also Ezekiel, prophesying of the kingdom of Christ, spoke of the standard mode of using water in this kingdom. "Then I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean," etc.—Ezekiel xxxvi, 25. With these prophesies, and the practice of the past, can any one conjecture reasonably how John came to think of immersion? He did not have the New Testament to translate from. He had nothing to go by but the Old Testament and its usage. If he turn from this, he must fall of his mission to bear witness of Jesus, and originate the idea, or receive it of God; but God had already introduced sprinkling. Therefore he was relieved of the necessity of originating a mode, and as God had already instituted the standard mode of using water ceremonially, to teach purification, if more instruction was needed, and none was given that we have any information of. There can be no doubt that this was what John was doing.—See St. John iii 25. Besides, the word "baptize" had already been used by the seventy to convey this idea, and Matthew, the inspired writer of truth, would certainly use baptize in the sense which had previously been given, and which really described the circumstances of purification, which was then called baptism. It is useless to talk about the literal meaning of language. This truth existed long before the Greek language, and would require language to bear its sentiment harmoniously to the world. If either had to suffer a change, it must be language. Truth, like a mighty current, forces a channel as it goes. It does not destroy the purity of language to give it scriptural signification; it simply adds to it.

But it will be asked why we have the phrase, "Went down both into the water, and were baptized, and came up out of the water?" We answer: The present translation of the Bible was not by inspiration. It was at a time when Christians were far from a correct understanding of God's word. Just think of the doctrines and opinions, to say nothing of the absurdities of that day! We may presume that were it not for the goodness and providence of God these discordant elements would have exploded. God would have His people to be of one mind and heart, or love, in understanding Him. I do not favor the idea of the necessity of different modern readings of God's word. It is plain enough, and is strictly harmonious. The variations exist only in the natural darkness or blindness, and proneness to wander from God. It is sometimes hard or painful for a Christian to abandon a pet opinion which was conceived in darkness; but, when the light comes, it must be given up, though it be as the right eye. I am aware that some one will say, or may say, you think yourself very wise, but I beg you not to turn away from the truth to attack me. I know I do not know much, but I ask you to think of the truth I have stated, and yield to it.

The original Greek phrase does not necessarily convey the idea of going into the water and coming out of it. Any unbiased Greek scholar, who desired to give the true sentiment of Scripture, who had no opinion of his own to give, would, we presume, readily admit that the phrase referred to means, in its natural scriptural sense, "went down to," for eis means to, at, by or near, sometimes into, as into a mountain, the water, and came straightway from it; for apo means from, generally. If "out of" had been meant, we ask why was not ek used. It means out of.

In conclusion I would say: If teachers and writers were more anxious to hold to the word harmoniously than the peculiarities of language and the opinions of men discordant with the word of God, they would appear more like their Master, at whose feet they should reverently sit until they harmonize the Heavenly Father's word. Oh! that the Christian world would imitate their Master in harmonizing God's word. I do not offer this for controversy, but for the benefit of those who want and desire to yield to the truth, and for the glory of God.

Financial Plan.

MR EDITOR: The following, prepared in accordance with a resolution passed at the preceding session, was submitted by the presiding elder, Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt, to the Vicksburg District Conference at Port Gibson, and adopted:

1. Let the stewards, at the beginning of the year, promptly estimate for the salary of their minister—not what they think he is worth, nor what the people paid the year before, nor what they are likely to pay the present year, nor what they are able to pay (for that would in many instances make the preacher rich), but what they think the people, whose abilities they are supposed to know, ought to pay to the preacher whose wants they should understand, and proceed without delay to ascertain what part of that amount each member is able and willing to pay.

2. Let a collection be taken for the support of the ministry at each preaching-place once each Sunday.

This may be done through envelopes marked with the names of the contributors, or by a hand (not hat) collection, accompanied with a list for crediting each person with the amount paid.

3. Let the stewards call on all who, from any cause, fail to contribute at the public collections, once a month, or at least once a quarter, for their dues.

4. If any steward shall fail to make proper effort to collect something from every member on his list during a quarter, let him be complained of at the Quarterly Conference, under Question 2, for "neglect of official duty."

5. If any member, known to be able, shall persistently refuse to pay anything for the support of the church, let such member be dealt with for "disobedience to the order and discipline of the church," according to directions found under Answer 2 to the question: "How shall an accused member be brought to trial?"—Discipline, page 451.

6. Let the minister be diligent and thorough in pastoral visiting as well as faithful in preaching, remembering that those who attend public worship but seldom will readily acknowledge their obligations for services rendered to them or their families at home, and that the average minister is ready to pay more for one visit than for five sermons.

7. Let all annual collections, as for missions and Conference fund, be faithfully attended to by the preacher in charge. Let him set an example to the stewards by meeting the assessments in full. His success in this respect, so far from impeding, will help the work of the stewards.

8. Let all incidental expenses be met by incidental collections arranged to suit the necessities of the case.

9. In all our Sunday-schools let a collection be taken every Sunday for the purchase of literature, or the support of the pastor, or for missions, or for the Conference fund, or for other proper objects.

N. B.—The above plan supposes the Church Conference to order the collections for the support of the ministry to be made by the stewards.

PRATTVILLE DISTRICT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: The Conference for this district held its fifth session beginning the twenty-fourth of July, 1879, at Wetumpka, which is beautifully situated in the northern portion of said district, and the head of navigation for steamboats on the Alabama river. The houses of a generous and hospitable people were thrown open on the arrival of the Conference. In the absence of the expected Bishop the Conference was presided over by our worthy elder, Dr. A. H. Mitchell, who, with his accustomed care and dispatch, disposed rapidly of all questions submitted. Ten out of twelve charges were represented by their pastors, and twenty-two lay delegates, including local preachers.

The spiritual condition of the church, taking the attendance upon the church ordinances as a criterion, was represented as being good. Very few class meetings, which fact was noted by the chair and the pastors present, earnestly admonished to begin anew this important branch of the spiritual work of our church. No whisky selling reported among church members, though the question was put to all reporting brethren. One missionary field, indicated by a report from the lower portion of the district. Sabbath-schools generally large and well attended, using in most instances our literature. A few Union schools reported. Some churches needing repairs; most, however, in good condition.

Three parsonages reported, all in good condition. The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE taken more or less in every charge. The importance of its circulation, especially with the present inducements offered, was urged by members and concurred in by the Conference.

The journals of Quarterly Conferences were closely and critically examined by a committee appointed for that purpose. A resolution was offered and adopted, requiring the secretary to furnish a copy of this report to each charge, and will, no doubt, go far to correct largely the errors in future of said records.

Dr. John Massey was present, representing the interests of the Alabama Conference Female College at Tuskegee, also Rev. R. S. Holcombe, president of the Greenville Collegiate Institute, Rev. H. Calhart, president of the Auburn Female Institute, and A. D. McVoy, president of Centenary Female College at Summerfield.

About thirty per cent. of the quarterage collected. A large portion of the work being a farming people, they unfortunately wait till the close of the year to pay up the church dues. The individual assessment plan seems to work the best.

Delegates to the Annual Conference are as follows: Rev. C. C. Howard, R. W. Russell, T. P. Whitby and W. W. Drane. Alternates: W. H. Lloyd and S. P. Smith.

The next District Conference will be held at Pine Apple.

UNION SPRINGS DISTRICT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

MR EDITOR: Our District Conference convened at Fort Deposit on the twenty-fourth of July, 1879, with the able and efficient presiding elder, O. R. Blue, in the chair. We had a very respectable attendance. Every charge was represented by its pastor save one. The session was a season of pleasure and profit. The reports as to the spiritual condition of things show some little advancement, but alas! alas! too few family altars. The Sunday-school interest is considerably ahead of last year. One or two new parsonages were reported, one or two almost in a state of erection, others in contemplation, which exhibits very clearly an increase interest in the welfare of the man of God, and a better day coming. Several financial plans were reported. The most successful was clearly shown to be the one of the Discipline; in other words, the assessment plan. It was manifest to all that our financial failures partially grew out of the fact of no financial plan at all. The time allotted to the educational interest was very profitably spent with addresses from Prof. John Massey, president of the Alabama Conference Female College, and Prof. Holcombe, of the Greenville Collegiate Institute; Rev. W. M. Motley and the presiding elder made short addresses in behalf of the Southern University, Greensboro, all of which were listened to with profound interest. Prominence was given the preaching of the word, and we trust much good done in the name of the Master. E. B. Wilkerson, J. A. Giddens, William B. Gilmer and P. Law were elected delegates to the Annual Conference. Troy was elected the place of holding the next District Conference. The following resolutions were adopted:

On motion of E. B. Wilkerson it was resolved that the presiding elder enforce the resolution which was adopted at the District Conference held at Greenville several years ago, requiring delegates to the District Conference to attend promptly and remain till the close.

On motion of R. H. Powell it was resolved that the delegates to the next District Conference be requested to bring up small contributions for the purpose of printing the minutes in pamphlet form.

GEORGIANA CIRCUIT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: On the second Sunday in July I commenced a meeting at Wesley Chapel, and continued four days. It was the happiest meeting I have been in since the war. About thirty conversions and seven accessions, and the church most gloriously reclaimed from a very cold, backslidden condition.

The fourth Sunday was my quarterly meeting at Providence. The church had a fast day prayer meeting on Friday. Nearly all the members of the Quarterly Conference were present. The meeting commenced good, and got better every service; and, although it was rainy and muddy, the people came in great crowds to hear. Bro. Boland, my presiding elder, continued with us four days, preaching and laboring with great power. Many were converted and reclaimed, and seven joined the church. We continued four days, and had to close on account of bad weather and worn-out throats. The prospects for a general revival all around the circuit is very good. The crops are as good as they can be; little too much rain now. From the present outlook we believe Georgiana circuit will pay all the assessments this year. I hope to get many new subscribers when they sell cotton. Yours truly,

MADISON CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: Madison circuit is a small work of four appointments, in the Jackson district, situated between Jackson and Carlton. Bro. D. C. Langford, P. C., is doing all in his power to move the work forward, leaving no stone unturned. I have worked with him at all his appointments, and think the prospects are good for a revival of religion. We are praying, hoping and expecting it. Bro. Langford has recently had long and sore affliction in his family. His little daughter Ella lay with typhoid fever several weeks, part of the time given up to die, but by the blessing of God, and proper medical attention of the family physician, she is recovering. Bro. Langford's protracted meetings begin soon. Mr. Editor, we want your prayers and the prayers of all the brethren, that the Lord may save many souls on this work this year.

Your brother in Christ,

The Lovely Mary.

MR. EDITOR: Rev. Alexander Hoag conducted a meeting at Christopher Chapel, July 27. He was assisted by W. H. Ward, who labored with great effect. The meeting was greatly revived, and all up to our most holy faith. Several joined themselves with the people, some of whom were old fallen professors, others sinners, slumbering in sin, but wounded. May the Lord shield those dear young souls from temptation, and lead them to a life of holiness. Bro. Hoag is dearly loved by the people. [illegible] is intended for a good Methodist preacher, and [illegible] by a large congregation. The next meeting will commence the first Sunday in August. We are looking forward to that time with great anticipation.

Yours in the faith,

LIDIA VASTER PEARCE

BRO. THOMAS NORRIS SISSON, was born in Jefferson county, Miss., September 10, 1810. He was married to Miss Mary Doyle all on the year 1830, moved to Franklin parish, Louisiana in March, 1844. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at that time, and lived a faithful member of the same until the day of his death, which took place at his residence on the fourteenth of July, 1879.

Bro. Sisson was a man of a multitude of excellencies. He was an exemplary citizen and neighbor, a kind and loving husband, a devoted and tender father and grandfather.

Bro. Sisson loved the church, and set a good example to his brethren, in building up and supporting it. He served at steward for several years, and in health declared that he should give it to His honor. As the preacher's home—here the weary traveler found a warm welcome, and all that could be done to add to his happiness and comfort was done. His memory will ever be cherished by those who had the happy privilege of communing with him. The writer had a personal acquaintance with Bro. Sisson a short time before his death, and enjoyed spiritual religion, during which conversation he gave satisfactory evidence that he enjoyed holy Christian religion.

A few hours before he breathed his last he spoke to his wife, telling her to [illegible]. He told her he was ready to go, and was resigned to the will of God. THE TWO WORLDS.

[illegible]

The Spot.

If God has not said, "Blessed are those that hunger," I know not what could keep weak Christians from sinking in despair. Many times all I can do is to complain that I want Him, and wish to be loved Him.

Bishop Hall, in uttering this lament two centuries and a half ago, only echoed the wail which has come down, through a living heart, from the Patriarch whose story is the oldest known literature in any language. A consciousness of the absence of God is one of the standard incidents of religious life. Even when the forms of devotion are observed conscientiously, the sense of the presence of God, as an invisible friend, whose society is a joy, is by no means uninterrupted.

The truth of this will not be questioned by one who is familiar with those phases of religious experience which are so often the burden of Christian confession. In no single feature of "inner life," probably, is the experience of many minds less satisfactory to them than in this. They seem to themselves, in prayer, to have little if any genuine emotion. They can speak of hope in their devotional life that seems to them like lies; of little that appears like the communion of a living soul with a living God. Are there not many closet hours in which the chief feeling of the worshiper is an oppressed consciousness of the absence of reality from his own exercises? He has no words which he can use to urge Herbert says, "heat them." He not only experiences listlessness, but no desire to be otherwise. He has no sense of being at home with God. The stillness of the hour is the stillness of a dead calm at sea. The heart feels monotonously on the surface of the great depths of God's love, as the vessel rides on the surface of the great ocean of calm.

Prof. De Pressensé writes that Prince Jerome Napoleon, who is now the head of the Bonapartists, is even uncompromisingly hostile to the Papal Party in France. The Ultramontanes have found in him an intelligent, resolute and persistent opponent. Nor does he favor the Christian body as it exists in France. He has been regarded as a Voltairian, and not inclined to any religion. No one of the family, it is said, has so much resembled Napoleon I. in appearance. To those who have seen both the resemblance has been at times almost startling. He is also a man of superior mental power, carefully trained, well informed, and courageous, it is claimed, although this was at one time questioned. For years he has avowed Republican sentiments, but then he was second in the line, a young and athletic man being first, and the high probability being that Jerome would never be the claimant of the Imperial crown. His wife is a royal lady, who for some years has lived in comparative retirement in Piedmont. Her health is delicate, and she prefers to avoid the social labors she must of necessity perform if a resident of Paris. She is the daughter of Victor Emanuel, and of course sister to the present King of Italy, and her sister is Queen of Portugal. If Prince Jerome and his wife should open a quasi court it would soon become the center of a brilliant company representing a great deal of good blood, and not a few venerable titles, and also the center of a great deal of intrigue conducted by very able men and women. The Republic is a standing menace to the monarchies of Europe, and they would not be unwilling to see a king again on a French throne, presiding over a constitutional monarchy. Prince Jerome, or Napoleon V., as he may soon be called, may be expected to modify his opinions. He may make advances to the Romish hierarchs and court their good will. The Republic is Protestantism, the Empire is Popery. Already he is reported to have said that he believes in "a crown of great power, able to render great service to the people," and to have declared that he favors a Socialistic Empire, whatever that may be. The death of the young Prince seemed a great loss, a fatal blow to Imperialism in France; it may prove just the contrary. The Bonapartes and Imperialists are led now, not by a boy, but by a man of experience, allied to royal houses, intelligent, fearless, who may draw to himself and his cause the old noblesse, and who is likely to receive a powerful co-operation from the crowned heads of Europe. The hour of chief danger to the Republic may have begun.—Christian Intelligencer.

Wonders of Venus.

Many who admire the beautiful star which now adorns the western sky until more than three hours after the commencement of twilight may not be aware that its splendor is derived from the sun; that in it, like on the earth, night curtains the landscape, morning dawns, and seasons in quick succession come and go. Lofty mountains show their forces similar to those which upheaved the Alps and lifted the summits of the Andes above the regions of eternal snow, ravaged its surface and covered it with hills and vales. Variable spots prove that clouds float in its atmosphere, and gleams of light, when it carries its sky, afford evidence that in it lightning seams the sky and the thunder's roll reverberates through the valley.

But in one thing unlike the earth, and revolving on its axis in nearly the same time, Venus makes thirteen revolutions around the sun while the former makes eight. As the inclination of the planet to the plane of its orbit is at least fifty-four degrees, its tri-decile or double that extent of nine degrees and its polar circle thirty-four degrees from the pole. It therefore has two frigid and uniformly intemperate zones. Since the sun must arrive at the equator and depart from it to the distance of fifty-four degrees twice in each of its years, there must be two summers and two winters annually in the torrid zone and a winter and a summer in each of the frigid. Venus becomes the morning star after superior conjunction, when it appears through the telescope a crescent shaped like the new moon. The orbits of this planet and of Mercury are within the orbit of the earth and consequently they are never seen in opposition to the sun, that is in the east when the sun is in the west, or in the west and the sun in the east. As, in the interior conjunction, Venus is nearer to the earth than any other planet, except the moon, and sometimes when approaching the greatest distance, when it seems to recede from the sun, casts a shadow and is visible in the full light of day. At the period when it is nearest to the earth, the enlightened part were fully turned toward the latter, this planet would appear twenty times as brilliant as it now does, and almost vie with the moon in dissipating the darkness of night. Being situated at a much greater distance from the sun than the earth, Venus receives more light from that luminary than is received by the former planet, and seems not to require the aid of the moon. Nevertheless, several astronomers have affirmed that they have noticed such a body, and have even gone so far as to calculate the orbit of the supposed satellite, but their observations have not been verified.

The transits of Venus, or its passage between the earth and the sun when it appears as a round, dark spot moving slowly across the solar disk, have been made to assist in determining the distance of the earth and the central luminary. The last transit occurred in December, 1874, and the next will take place in December 1882. As this can be viewed in the United States it will awaken a greater interest than the transit which Ritchener and others observed more than a century ago. But four transits of Venus have been observed, and, after 1882, 121 years will elapse before the alternately morning and evening star will pursue its regular pathway across the surface of the great orb of day.—Albany Journal.

"The Spot."

In some of the old cathedrals of Europe observe niches, high above the heads of the people, are filled with statues. These can hardly be seen from below, and the backs of them are entirely hidden, yet when some of them have fallen down, or been removed, it has been found that every inch of the figure was as exquisitely carved as if every part was to be subjected to the closest examination.

The ancient Greeks were trained to believe in the invisible; to be faithful to the abstract principles of truth and beauty; to cut as carefully the stone that was to be hidden for hundreds of years, as the marble that was to face the sunlight in the open square.

Years ago in an iron foundry in South Boston one of the hands engaged in casting the iron pillars to be used for the supports of an immense cotton factory was careless enough to let one of them "float" a very little to one side; that is the liquid iron while cooling ran a little thinner in one spot than in the rest of the bar. It was a very slight imperfection, and when the pillars were examined by the contractors this one was accepted with the rest.

For a long time the building stood the weight and jar of the machinery; then came the hour that was to try to the utmost the strength of the pillars that supported its floors.

"They're busting in some machinery," said one of the overseers, and while he spoke the words there came an awful crash.

The telegraph told its fatal story.

"At ten minutes before five on Tuesday, the tenth of January, 1860, the Pemberton Mill, Lawrence, Mass., all hands being at the time on duty, fell to the ground."

Seven hundred men, women, and children were buried alive, eighty-eight of them dying in unspeakable agony. Think of the wrecks of men and women rescued from that horrible pit!

One of them, helplessly crippled from that hour, told the other day his story of the fall of the Pemberton Mill, and added, to the little listeners who stood breathless around his chair: "Never forget what awful suffering and death came from a little thin spot in a bar of iron. Beware of thin spots in your lives or your work."

DEAN STANLEY'S PROGRESS.—The Dean is quoted as saying recently:

"The most learned of all the living Bishops of England (Dr. Lightfoot) has, with his characteristic moderation and erudition, proved beyond dispute, in a celebrated essay attached to his edition of St. Paul's epistle to the Philippians, that the early constitution of the Apostolic churches of the first century was not that of a single bishop, but of a body of pastors indifferently styled bishops or presbyters, and that it was not till the very end of the apostolic age that the office which we now call Episcopacy gradually and slowly made its way in the churches of Asia Minor; that Presbytery was not a step grown out of Episcopacy, but that Episcopacy was a later growth out of Presbytery; that the office which the apostles instituted was a kind of rule, not of bishops, but of presbyters; and that, even down to the third century presbyters as well as bishops possessed the power of nominating and consecrating bishops."

Religious Intelligence.

PORTUGAL AND PERSECUTION.—In the monthly synopsis of the Wesleyan Annual Report the following suggestive passage occurs: "Mr. Morton and two members of his congregation were a short while ago, followed from their place of worship by a rude and ragged mob, who pelted them with mud, and hooted, and threatened them with personal injury. The mob was composed of ruffians, bare-footed women and some decently-dressed men who were their leaders. The cries were: 'Long live the holy father, Leo XIII!' 'Long live the immaculate conception!' 'Long live the religion of the State!' 'Death to the propagandas!' by which they meant the mission. Nor is opposition of another kind wanting. The archbishop of the province has addressed a pastoral to his clergy, guarding them against the Methodists, and assuming to answer their errors out of the scriptures. This pastoral has been answered by Senhor Dias, a native minister, and both pamphlets have been largely circulated. Thus the brutality of the baser sort and the anger of the learned may be cited in proof that our mission has made its mark, and has influenced that unrest of spirit which confesses that it must be dealt with somehow, either by being confuted, or by being put down."

—From the Annual Report of the American Chapel in Paris, now before us, by favor of a Sands-street friend, we learn that the amount of its missionary and benevolent funds for 1878 was 17,000 francs (or about $3,222. The total receipts for six years $11,062. These meagre have been sent for the maintenance of tract distributers, the education of a couple of children, and gifts to various benevolent societies and some of the yellow fever sufferers in Memphis. In their tract work they assert they have distributed with great good effect a tract on the history of the Christian Sabbath, the only substantial tract of its character in the French States, the blessings that have attended its observance, its influence upon morals and religion, the economy of a weekly day of rest, its position in the family. We are pained to notice, in this report that Rev. D. Hitchcock, pastor of the American Chapel in Paris, is quite in sympathy with Rev. Mr. McAll's mission to the working people in the most destitute and populous districts of Paris and Lyons. The aggregate attendance at these meetings during the year has been 57,253.

—The New York Chinese, for whom Rev. C. S. Brown, of our "Five Points" Mission, has found a missionary who can preach to them, is likely with accessories to find a pastor's hand. Last week the missionary was called upon to bury his dead, and having our service for such occasions translated into Chinese, he read it over the remains of the departed Chinaman, probably the first time such an event has occurred in that great city of the dead, Greenwood. Last Sabbath, July 6, the missionary preached to some sixty or more of the Chinese in the village of Belleville, N. J. From eighty to a hundred or more are occupied in a single laundry in that place. A deputation of them waited upon the missionary last Saturday night, and accompanied him to their place the following Sunday morning. So this is likely to be hereafter one of the appointments on his circuit. Let us hope that the breath of the Lord will accompany the prophesyings of his servants over these strangers.

—The annual Conference of the French Methodists was recently held at Lausanne, and, for the first time in the history of this church ministers and laymen sat together in the assembly. Rev. Matthew Lollevre, who has recently removed to Paris, and become editor of the Evangelist, delivered the opening address on "The moral needs of France and the duty of Methodists toward her." It was officially reported that the doors were being opened in all parts of Catholic France for religious work. The great readiness of the French people to receive scriptural instruction is evidenced by the fact, among many others, that a Parisian recently distributed 500 New Testaments among the workingmen of his quarter, and received but a single refusal. The best means of taking advantage of present opportunities were discussed by the Conference, and great confidence in the increased spread of Protestantism was expressed. The congregations have been increased during the year about 2,000 persons, and their Seminaire Institution for the education of young men for the ministry is in a prosperous condition.

—The matter of church attendance is attracting considerable attention in England. A visit to fifteen churches belonging to the establishment in the east of London, disclosed the fact that in all these edifices, with a seating capacity of 11,478, there were present exactly 905 persons. In four churches of the establishment in Rotherhithe, only 156 persons were in attendance. Many of these churches are built with special reference to the poor population gathered around them, and the "Church Times" declares that their present condition is "something appalling." On the other hand, a recent count in eleven Nonconformist churches of the same size and location showed the presence of 3,700 worshipers. These figures are very suggestive, and in the correspondence on the subject to which the London "Times" has opened its columns they have been skillfully used as arguments for disestablishment.

—Rev. W. E. Sabine writes a letter to correct some of the statements in reference to certain sections of the late Mr. Powers, which have been published. We copied one of them, which, it appears, found its way into one other too many. Mr. Sabine says: "It is quite true that Mr. Powers was a large and generous helper of the cause, and that his loss will be keenly felt, but it is far from being true, as the article referred to seems to imply, that the work at large is seriously embarrassed by his death. The committee on the state of the church reported to the late general council a property valuation much underestimated of not far from $4,000,000 accumulated in the course of five years and a half of financial depression; while the indebtedness of congregations under obligations to the Powers' estate is reported at something over $1,000,000."

—One of the Wesleyan Missionaries in Germany is reported to have been brutally assaulted on his return from an appointment. The assailants were tried in Heilbron, and one was sentenced to three months, and a second to seven months imprisonment. But the local authorities are mostly embittered against the Missionary, and the local clergy denounce him and his work. Frivolous charges are preferred against him, such as of various sibling, etc. and there seems a systematic effort to silence or to drive him away. These trials recall the early days of Methodism in England, and the still earlier days when it was said of the children of Israel, "The more they were vexed, the more they multiplied and grew."

—The receipts of the American Baptist Missionary Union for the year ending April 1, are announced to have been $735,150. The expenditures were $728,393, leaving a balance of over $1,000 in the treasury. There is still, however, a debt of $72,452 from former years.

—The Baptists of London are doing a wise thing, to wit: raising a fund for the purchase of sites for chapels in advance of the time when they are needed. If these lots are found to be unsuitable they are sold, but when the population settles around they are given to those who will erect a church building upon the site.

—The Old Catholics allow priests to marry, but they require that the wife shall be acceptable to and approved by a majority of the congregation and the bishop. Seeing so many perplexity to regulate pastors' wives, probably to let them exercise their vocation from the beginning is wise, but the Pope will, no doubt, be many bachelor priests with such a rule.

—The New York City Church Extension Society has received and expended over $350,000 in eleven years; under its work 5,000 persons have been converted and 25,000 children connected with its Sabbath-schools. Some of its societies are now wholly self-supporting. It expends $40,000 per annum, of which one half is raised by the societies under its care.

Monsignor Count André de la Valle, a distinguished prelate of the Roman Catholic Church, a learned scholar and a poet of considerable merit, has abjured Romanism and joined the Italian Episcopal Methodist Church, of which Mr. Lanza, himself a convert of distinction, is pastor.

—It appears that in the late contest in the Irish Presbyterian Assembly on the use of instruments in the church praise service, the majority of the ministerial delegates were in favor of their introduction, while a large majority of the lay delegates were opposed, and succeeded in maintaining the assembly's testimony against the innovation.

—A sea-shell mission has been invented in London, which proposes that children at the sea-side shall gather up shells to be distributed in boxes of 200 each, among the children in the homes and hospitals.

—Though the English Presbyterians have less than 300 congregations, they raise large contributions. Last year 250 Churches contributed a total of $1,143,635, an average of $1,874 to each congregation.

—The sum of $9,012,213 has been contributed to the sustentation fund of the disestablished Irish Episcopal Church since 1870.

A Wonderful Pet.

You have heard of wonderful dogs and horses, by the score, I dare say, but I fancy you have not often heard of a pet elephant. In India, you know, where elephants are numerous, they are employed in different kinds of service, and I will now tell you a true story of one who was a pet.

Old Sumpter, for that was his curious name, was born more than a hundred years ago, and he lived about two years since in the banks of the River Ganges, near the city of Cawnpore. The story of his life would be a very interesting one, if he could only tell it; but, you see, he has outlived all his early friends, and so there is no one to tell it for him.

When Old Sumpter (or Sumpy, as the native called him was young he was trained for war, and went to battle and hunting with his black masters, and many a savage battle did he live with the brave skinned, one-tusked Rhinoceros. But Old Sumpter, Sumpy now, had long seen so many ups and downs in life, he was glad enough to take it just a little bit easy in these his last days.

But now I must tell you how he came to be made a pet, and I am quite sure that when you have heard the story you will agree with me that he heartily deserves all the petting he can get.

Well, Old Sump was one day, at the time of which I am now speaking, working with a number of other elephants and some soldiers in loading a ship with bags of rice. Major Daly was the officer in charge of the soldiers, and Old Sump and the other elephants belonged to him. This was just about the time of Old Sump's hundredth birthday, and as the elephants, one by one, marched up to the ship's side and delivered their bags of rice, Major Daly's little boy and girl stood watching the old fellows at their work.

What was the reason I cannot say—whether it was the heat of the sun, or the hardness of the work, it is impossible for me to tell,—but all at once one of the elephants began to throw his bags of rice into the river, and the major soon saw that the animal had gone mad.

The mad elephant, having killed his keeper, turned, and ran towards the major's children, who were hurrying with their nurses to get indoors. How they would have fared, if they had been left to themselves I cannot say; but Old Sump was there, and when he saw the mad elephant chasing the major's children, he dashed in between them and fought the mad creature until he had him lying dying on the ground.

It was a terrible fight this last fight of Old Sump's. It lasted for an hour and a half; and though Old Sump was conqueror in the end, he had many wounds to remind him of the struggle. His ears were badly torn, and his head bruised and one of his tusks was broken off short; but he saved the lives of his master's children, and I am not surprised that they made him a pet after that.

But Old Sump became something more than a pet; he became a nurse as well, and often would he take the children out by the hour together, and the major said, over and over again, that he would far rather trust his children with Old Sump than with any number of Hindoo nurses. He became quite a fisherman, and might often be seen on the banks of the Ganges helping his little friends to catch the golden fish which abound in the River Ganges. One of the boys would bait the hook for him and take off the fish, but he would hold the fishing-rod with the tip of his trunk, and would always know when he had a bite and would land the fish as well as any one. Was he not a wonderful pet?—Children's Magazine.

How the Murrays were Helped.

"Father," said poor Jennie Murray, as she sat up in bed to eat the bread her father had brought her, "I can't bear to eat this, for I know that you and mother are just as hungry as I, and what are you going to buy bread with?"

"Don't you bother your head about that, my child," said the father, cheerily, as he stroked the hair back from her forehead. "I have got a penny left, and I'll go and buy some more with that."

"But that was the last penny you had in the world, father," said Jennie, "and what will you do when that is gone?"

"Why, trust in God, as we have always done, my child," said the father, reverently. "He has never forsaken us yet, and I am sure He will not forsake us now. Don't you remember the text, 'Trust in the Lord, and do good, and verily thou shalt be fed?' Now, you eat your bread, and don't trouble your head about anything else."

"But, father, I can't eat it unless you and mother have some too," said Jennie, looking up with tears in her eyes.

"Well, then, we will have some too," said the father, cheerfully, as he went out of the room.

Jennie ate a little of the bread, and then, as her father did not return, she got up and dressed herself, and went into the next room, where her mother was sitting by the fire, looking very sad and anxious.

"Mother, where is father?" asked Jennie.

"He has gone out to get some work, my child," said Mrs. Murray, "and I am glad to get them to bed, for the little ones are getting pretty bad."

"Well, here are two pairs. Mend one, lest you need it, and I will take the other two home with me," said Jennie, as she laid a bright silver dollar on Mrs. Murray's bench, "and one which I finished."

"Darling, it is too much," said Mrs. Murray. "I don't ask more than five cents a pair for such patching as this."

"If you don't like my terms, and the gentleman will take them when they do, I'll call for some more to-day or to-morrow," said Jennie, quietly, as she opened the door and disappeared suddenly as she came. In the afternoon she called for the boots, and paid them down. Day after day she appeared, always with two pairs of boots or shoes, and always arranging the terms herself.

Every pair of boots or shoes that went from her hands was thoroughly repaired, and seemed as if, instead of having been worn by others for many months, they were brought to him that he was kept busy from morning to night.

"It is the Lord's doing," said his wife to him, one day, "and we may trust Him."

The shoemaker was puzzled for a long time to know who his strange benefactor was. On finally getting that his name was Murray, and that he was always on the lookout to help every family by that name.—Child's World.

"A MAN after swallowed a Bible."—"In the days of my boyhood," says Old Humphrey, in his Thoughts for the Thoughtful, "my father told me that he knew an old man who had swallowed a Bible. This had greatly excited my astonishment, and I wished to know how it could be. My father, who had an object in view in keeping me in ignorance of what he and I never exclaimed the matter to be, went with me some time afterwards to call upon the old man. Many a thoughtless prodigal has been cut off since then, and many a pardoned sinner entered into the rest that remaineth for the people of God, yet did I remember it as well as though it happened yesterday.

"O! how graciously do the texts of Divine truth fall from the lips of that aged servant of Christ, for the Holy Scriptures dwell in him richly in all wisdom. His Bible seemed to be a mine of Christian value, a storehouse of precious things, and he drew forth liberally, like one who draws water from a well that he believes to be inexhaustible.

"As we came away, my father said to me, 'Well, and what do you think of this man having swallowed a Bible?'

"'Truly, father,' said I, 'why I think that he has indeed swallowed a Bible; for the Word of God seems like meat and drink to him.'

"'O! that the blessed Book of truth were meat and drink to us all! O! that we had all swallowed a Bible! for then should we find it not bitter, like the little book eaten by John in the Revelation, but sweeter than honey and the honey-comb.'"

HOW THE VELOCITY OF CANNON SHOT IS MEASURED.—The initial velocity of a shot, in other words, the rapidity with which any rifle shot at the muzzle of a cannon is now measured at Woolwich by the electrical instrument. The inventor of Major Boxer, a British officer. [illegible] having the shot to divide so many through two wire screens, placed at some distance from one another. The interval is usually about 1/10 sec. The screen is simply a wood frame work with fine wires zig-zagging across and in these fine wires which the shot cuts. One screen is near the muzzle of the gun, and the other at the distance we have mentioned. No 1 screen is in connection with an electro magnet in the instrument house, and No. 2 screen with a second, the two magnets hanging close together. While the wires in front of the screen are perfect, an electric current passes without interruption, and the electro-magnets in connection with them are endowed with power, but this power ceases as soon as the shot cuts the wires of the screen. Before the gun is fired there is suspended to the magnets two rods of iron, which remain, however, only so long as the magnets are magnets. When the shot is fired, No. 1 screen is torn, and down falls the rod suspended to No. 1 magnet; an instant afterwards, what the shot has reached No. 2 screen, No. 2 magnet also loses its virtue, and down falls the second rod. The time between the falling of the two rods is so small, that ere the first has fallen half its length the second has dropped upon a trigger, which trigger darts and strikes the side of No. 1 rod. When the latter is picked up, the first thing is to examine the surface for the mark of the trigger, for the position of this mark, whether high or low, tells the operator what he wants to know. The rod, being of a given weight, always takes the same time to fall, and according whether it has fallen half a quarter its length, so the time taken by shot to travel between the screens has been long or short. In a word, the rod has only to be compared with a prepared scale in order to read off the number of feet per second at which the shot has gone on its way.

The Constraining Love.

It is Christ's love to us, as exhibited in His death for all. His death for all is the reason why "they which live should not hence forth live unto themselves, but unto Him which died for them and rose again." The inducement and encouragement to labor for the salvation of others lie in the assurance that provisions have been made to save them. The way is open for the rescue of all men from sin and death, and, as God's instruments, we are warranted in proclaiming pardon to every body. There is absolutely no limitation on the divine side. All are dead and Christ died for all. We are in line with the mercy of God, and its free and universal tender, when we give ourselves to this work of persuading sinners to repent.

The love of Christ also appeals to our gratitude. We owe it to Him who died for us that we should no longer live unto ourselves. They who live by reason of His death owe their lives and all they have to Him. The heart that has felt the cleansing blood of Christ must respond to the demand of an unselfish devotion to Him who saves us from destruction. Christ's love to us kindles the flame of love in us, and this love in us is manifested in living unto Him.

Our life centers in self or in Christ. Christ's death has not been felt by those who live unto themselves. His love has exerted no constraining influence where self is in the ascendant. "If One died for all, then were all dead." The love of Christ discloses the universal peril, the perishing condition of the world. It is the most startling revelation of an awful fact, that all are dead, that all are lost. The cross is the most powerful and clear statement of the danger and doom of the ungodly. The fearful state of men in their sins was the occasion of this manifestation of Christ's love. A dying world is seen in the death of Christ, and, as thus seen, the death of Christ is the highest appeal to our love. What drew forth His compassion should excite pity and concern in us. We cannot be Christ-like, and be indifferent to the salvation of others. Of the world's sin we have the statement written in the blood of Calvary. How can the Christian look upon that delineation of sin and not partake somewhat of the Saviour's absorbing love for sinners?

Everything is self that does not center in Christ, and everything is self that does not look to the end for which Christ died. The cross, and its lesson of consecration, are as yet unknown to us if we have not laid all upon the altar of Christ. Self is narrow—limited to our immediate surroundings. Christ is wide and world-embracing and sends out sympathy and effort to the ends of the earth. Self looks to personal welfare, to the family and the neighborhood. Christ takes in that which is near and that which is far off. The horizon of self is bounded by a span, that of Christ encircles all humanity.

Living unto Christ is the only healthy principle of religious action and the only sound basis of religious character. There is nothing fickle or intermittent about it, but it is as steady and uniform as it is strong and glowing. In the development of character it is always uplifting and broad in its ideals, calling the soul out of everything low and enfeebling, and inspiring it with the loftiest purpose. The end of life is seen in Christ, is not self, but Christ and the world's salvation in Christ. As Christ died and rose again for us we are to attain to such an apprehension of Him as to kill self and to enthrone love. It is through Christ that the Christian looks out upon the world, and through Him that he catches the inspiration of a thoroughly unselfish life. The death of Christ discloses our life-work in a dying world, it gives the lesson of it, it awakens the true spring of all noble and generous doing.

The thing to be done for a man is to get him fairly in range with the cross, in order that he may live a true life, and that which is to quicken the whole church into an exceeding great army of living, conquering heroes, is to bring all under the potent spell of the Saviour's love. When the Christian world can truly say "the love of Christ constraineth us," the gospel will then have free course, and the earth will be speedily filled with the knowledge of the Lord.

Those Church Seizures.

Some time in June, of this year, there appeared a communication in the Western Christian Advocate of Cincinnati, from Rev. Dr. Bristor, pastor of Ames Methodist Episcopal Church, of New Orleans, making certain statements in regard to the seizure of our churches by Bishop Ames. From the Western Methodist we quoted the following paragraph, embracing a quotation from Dr. Bristor's article:

[illegible]

In our comments upon the matter we thereby called attention to the observations in Dr. Bristor's statement. That manifestly the whole movement originated with Bishop Ames and the Northern Methodists, that the churches seized were not chosen, that there was nothing in the military order looking to the restoration of the churches "when their regular pastors should return," and that the course pursued by the Methodist Episcopal Church after the war was over showed that our Northern brethren had no idea of giving up the churches except under compulsion. Dr. Bristor probably stated the case as he understood it and as he thought it ought to be. The Western Methodist and this paper were only desirous that Dr. Bristor's errors should be corrected, and that the facts of history should not be misrepresented. The Southwestern Christian Advocate, referring to the article in the Western Methodist and in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, say:

[illegible]

Respecting which we have this to say:

1. It is true, we believe, that similar orders were given respecting other churches. Nevertheless, the seizures were instigated by Bishop Ames and others of the Methodist Episcopal Church. To them belong the credit and glory of the measure, and they should be permitted to remain in possession of their laurels. No other Northern Church, so far as we have heard, ever stooped so low as to avail itself of this opportunity of ecclesiastical spoliation in New Orleans.

2. The Southwestern asserts that it was prudent and right to seize our churches, that they should be "closed, or only loyal men permitted to occupy them." We can hardly believe Bishop Ames, or anybody else, was so stupid as to think that the seizure of the churches would promote a loyal feeling among our people. A more impolitic measure could not have been devised, and, as to the right, it was carrying despotism and tyranny over the religious convictions of people to the extremest degree. Most conquerors, even among the ancient pagans, respected the religion and the temples of worship of the conquered. The course of the United States government, under the instigation and guidance of Bishop Ames and his Methodist advisers, was worthy of the palmiest days of the Mohammedan conquerors.

3. The Southwestern repudiates the idea that the Methodist Episcopal Church has ever claimed any right or title to property because of a military order. The point we insisted on was that they seized the churches and held them by virtue of a military order, and that after the war was over they refused to give them up until President Johnson compelled them to do so. And the Southwestern admits, in effect, that they did not intend to surrender them, and that the purpose was to claim them before the courts. There were those who felt that, as the legal test had never been made between the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as to church property, under the action of 1844, the test ought to be made. We had thought that the decision of the Supreme Court in the Book Concern case had settled the legal question as to all property claimed by us, and possessed under the Plan of Separation of 1844. The purpose, however, to reopen the question was doubtless entertained. And this admission of the Southwestern exposes the true inwardness of this whole church-seizing business. The plea of patriotism was only a cloak to their real designs. These churches in the main Southern centers, built by Southern people, and occupied by them, were first to be taken and held by military authority, and the permanent possession to be afterward contested by law. Here at last was the coveted opportunity, and Bishop Ames and his friends eagerly grasped it. No wonder that there was gnashing of teeth on the part of Bishop Ames, Dr. Newman and others, when the President compelled them to let go. Leaving the legal question out of view, the equity of the course intended by the Northern brethren refutes itself. The principle on which they claimed the colored churches, and which the Cape May Commission recognized, was the principle which they proposed most conspicuously to violate in their endeavors to retain possession of our white churches. Under "the Plan of Separation," and the decision of the Supreme Court, our title to all these churches was beyond dispute, but, as the members of the colored churches had generally joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Cape May Commission, by special adjudication, gave them the property. Here, however, were white churches seized with the intention of permanently holding them, from which the people who built and paid for them were ejected without ceremony. Where there is a shadow of equity in their favor, our Northern brethren are quick to urge it, but, where it is otherwise, they trample upon the equities of the case without hesitation. The seizure of our churches was in fact but the first step in a conspiracy by which they hoped to gain permanent possession of property that both in law and equity belonged to somebody else. We care not upon what ground they claimed, or intended to claim, our churches, the whole thing, from beginning to end, rests as a stain upon all who had anything to do with it.

4. As for the calling up of questions like this, it must be remembered that Dr. Bristor called this up by making erroneous statements about it. We have no wish for the past to be forgotten, if this means that history is to be garbled and misinterpreted. No Southern man who was true to his country cares to conceal the fact, nor does any Southern Methodist wish the record of his church, since the separation in 1844, to be forgotten. It is a history of which he may justly be proud, and which he would, without perversion, hand down to his children. We must interpret motives somewhat by the facts of history, and the admission of the apologists of these church seizures. Bishop Ames and his brethren probably thought it would be for the glory of God to break up the Southern Church, and to possess themselves of the property; and, as to the means, they may have believed most conscientiously, as Bishop Haven happily expresses it, that "they were only stealing their own." Our wonder is, however, that this sort of casuistry is possible with enlightened Christian men, and that their course can now find an apologist so long after the heat and passion of the great conflict has measurably passed away.

Guidance from Precedent.

BY DOUBLE U.

The scene at Sychar's Well is interesting to many. To us craving light on our chief business in life the scene possesses the special interest of personal guidance by the Master of His disciples into the work of converting the world to the Christian faith committed to His church.

The readiness of the world for the gospel was made known by the metaphor of the harvest, and an instance in proof selected was the woman at the well and her fellow-townsmen. The work was conducted by the Master, and the type of conversion like that now prevalent. The features uniting being so modern in aspect, and strictly practicable, and the work being a model of its kind, make it the more desirable it should be known. That which at the outset draws us into sympathy with this scene is the kinship of personal sensitiveness which appears in the notice taken of the usual embarrassment attending private or outside ministerial labor. The situation at the well was embarrassing, the disciples marveled at it, but suppressed any impertinent remark. The more safe is the guidance since it leads us through the most trying of the embarrassments incident to ministerial work, and it is the more closely to be followed because of its complete success, and commendable propriety and charity. The lesson is suggested, and its study must be left where the Master reposed it, upon sound virtue and clear intelligence. But one embarrassment in the ministerial work often gives place or way to another, as the increasing naturalness of this scene displays, for the exceptional amenity of the Master is noticed in a captious retort by the woman addressed: "How is it that thou, being a Jew, asketh drink of me, which am a woman of Samaria, for the Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans?" This piece of haughty rudeness is sustained without rejoinder, with the composure of the Master's habitual dignity, and guides the thoughtful student into the practice of constant self restraint. For will it not be ever so that, presence to presence, Christian obligingness will seek occasion for counselling, which is taken at the instant by the carnal mind as impertinent self-obtrusion, and can this anticipated repulse ever be avoided, save at the suppression of ministerial solicitude? Must it not be faced with a like composure to the Master? Self-sacrificing courage, an ever noticeable characteristic of Christ, is set for guidance to ministers in the more critical and discouraging situations for their calling. Self, although consciously of "the only begotten Son of the Father," is forgotten and subordinated to the one impulse: "To save the lost." "He has found," to bring to a knowledge of God and His gift of life, this obscene dissolute, ravaged by insatiable desire, wearied of the incessant calls of physical labor, and sighing for relief, disquieted, even in the feeble effort, of belief, in the right place of worship. Complaisant in His zeal toward the bruised reed, for the latent susceptibility in that benighted soul to the transformations of a regenerating Spirit.

Is not this the view to be taken of the world, shown in the harvest sign, to be in readiness for the word, by the ministry and also of the work? Its highest intelligence and holier impulses, ravaged by insatiable desire for carnal indulgence, although wearied with increasing and pressing care, fatigued by the recurring labors of every day, yet dubious of any better lot, though not content with this, can we labor in the gospel hope and substitute this disclosure? Still more apt for our guidance is the address of the Master, which is strictly defined by the commonly-known argumentum ad hominem—i. e., a direct address to the interests and passions of the subject. To the woman's captious observation He complaisantly replied: "If thou knewest the gift of God, and Who it is that saith to thee, 'Give me to drink,' thou wouldest have asked of Him, and He would have given thee living water." The cardinal idea in the minister's work is the world's interest in the message of God he has to deliver. But, also, so powerfully self-revealing was the direction: "Go call thy husband," that the now enlightened woman reported: "He told me everything that I did," and through this faithful dealing with her saw and asked: "Is not this the Christ?" Here ends the minister's work, like the tedious but completed working out a hard sum in arithmetic, where the finding agrees with the answer: "It is done."

The Master was familiar with the synagogue service. He was original in His work out-doors, and by His example encourages zeal, and the exercise of liberty of judgment. His precedent is a marvel of propriety, His success a challenge to His sons in the gospel. "Do likewise."

Circulate the Books.

MR. EDITOR: I have often wished that we could have a sort of universal experience meeting among our best old Methodists to ascertain how much they have been benefited, in their Christian life, by reading our church literature. But, as this cannot be, I humbly ask leave to tell my early experience, in reading Methodist books, through the ADVOCATE. Many of my kindred entered into the composition of the first Methodist Churches in Mississippi, but my mother was a good Baptist, and I was brought up under the preaching of exclusive Immersionists and rigid Calvinists, and such had been my teaching from the pulpit that, at the age of twelve or fourteen years, I scarcely believed there was any salvation outside of the Baptist Church. My mind was fully made up to be a Baptist some day. But just at the time of my greatest awakening our Baptist Church was rent in two by a foolish controversy about Free Masonry, and was in no condition to sympathize with an awakened sinner. The little Methodist Church in our neighborhood, however, was united in love, and in good working order. I felt it important to my stability to make, in some way, a public demonstration of my determination to seek salvation and live a Christian life. Just there, as by accident, I learned that the Methodist would receive me on probation as a seeker of religion, and some of them had already manifested so much sympathy for me in my awakened condition, with all my Baptist proclivities, I joined the church. And now comes the history of good books. Soon after I joined the church my class-leader asked me if I would not like to read the Methodist Discipline. I had no recollection of having ever heard of such a book before; but I told him I would like to read it. He handed me a neat little volume bound in leather, and I read it carefully through, finding nothing to object to, and much to admire, especially its culture of deep-toned piety, both in its ministers and members. I now began to feel Methodistically inclined, and for the first time began to give up my determination ultimately to be a Baptist. A very godly lady of our class, who seemed to be all-affection for the unpledged boy who had lately joined the church, said to me, one day, that the Methodists required baptism as a condition of full fellowship in the church, and I must make up my mind to be baptized at an early day. I replied that my mind was made up already. I was going to be immersed, and thought that to be the scriptural mode. She handed me a pamphlet of thirty pages, entitled: "Anabaptism Disproved, etc., in Two Letters, from a Minister to his Friend." I received the pamphlet hesitatingly, telling her that I thought I needed no further instruction on the mode of baptism. I read it through once, and, to my surprise, it opened a field of argumentation in favor of baptism by affusion, that I knew nothing of before. I took my Bible and retired, determined to give it a second reading, examining every text quoted to see if it was done correctly. I arose from that reading a Pedobaptist, and have been sound in the faith about fifty-eight years. William M. Curtis, then a young member in our class, observed I did not partake of the Lord's Supper, and asked me why I did not. I told him I was too unworthy, and feared I might increase my condemnation by so doing. He loaned me Wesley's sermon "On the Duty of Constant Communion," which removed all my difficulties, and made me feel that it was not only my duty, but one of my greatest privileges, to partake of the sacred emblems at every opportunity, which I have constantly done ever since. By this time the great event of my life had occurred. I had been "born of the Spirit," and was a happy young Christian. But my creed as to Arminianism and Calvinism was not satisfactorily settled. I had, however, found the Methodists such safe counselors, I told my class-leader my troubles, and he put into my hands a little book of two hundred and fifty or three hundred pages, entitled: "Doctrinal Tracts," still published by our church. I read it with intense interest, and, in connection with Clarke's Commentary on the "Epistle to the Romans," it swept the last vestige of the "Five Points" forever out of my mind, since which my "heart has been established" in the Arminian faith. The Methodists had won my heart by their loving zeal for my salvation, and had stereotyped me in their doctrines by loaning me suitable books. Now I felt that all was right, and I had little else to do but to serve the Lord and be a happy Christian. Early in 1822 I heard Ebenezer Hearn preach a sermon on the great additional blessing of entire sanctification. My soul was soon all aflame to reach that state of grace, but it seemed as though every imaginable difficulty was injected into my mind. I understood that a lovely Christian woman in our class had professed the enjoyment of the great blessing of "perfect love," and I embraced an opportunity to tell her all my troubles in regard to seeking that higher state of grace. She stepped to the library and handed me a little book entitled: "Hester Ann Rogers," which I read with very great profit, for if it had been written with special reference to my case it could not have removed more effectually all my imaginary difficulties in connection with the attainableness of a clean heart and entire consecration to God, nor led me sooner into the test of "perfect love."

Now you see, Mr. Editor, how the Methodists, under God, made a Methodist of me. It was by placing in my hands at the right moment those valuable little books, which they had bought through their preachers from our New York Book Concern, and which had first been such a blessing to them, that they could fully recommend them to others. My own experience has often encouraged me to see that those under my pastoral care were well supplied with our religious literature. If I have been worth anything for nearly sixty years as a Methodist Christian, and for fifty five years as a Methodist preacher, I owe it mainly to the good start a few lay members gave me by supplying me with books suitable to my capacity, and the different phases of my early experience. With your permission I may write a few more shorter articles on this subject.

Education.

MR. EDITOR: I purpose to write for the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE a series of short papers on the subject of Education. They are designed for your Methodist readers mainly, but may prove interesting to other persons who have children to be educated, or who are in such position and circumstances as to be able to contribute to the diffusion of knowledge among our people. They shall relate to practical questions altogether, and shall steer wide of everything like speculation, of mere rhetorical display, or parade of learning. If in this way I can promote the cause of education by awakening the interest, or quickening the zeal of our brethren in behalf of the literary enterprises of our church, the labor will itself be a pleasure. Even the hope is an inspiration.

In these days of enlightenment no intelligent man debates the question: "Is it my duty to educate my children?" Even the freedmen in the Southern States of the Union perceive the importance of this work and are making commendable and energetic exertions to secure for their boys and girls the benefits of education. But there are connected with this subject some practical questions which demand the serious consideration of parents and guardians. Prominent among these is the question: Will our children be better educated at those institutions which are under the patronage of the State, or at those which are under the patronage of the church? An answer to this inquiry to be satisfactory must have reference to three points: the moral character, the mental development and discipline, and the life-prospect of the student. In all these respects it is demonstrable that education by the church is preferable to education by the State. First, as to morals. We put this consideration foremost, because it is infinitely the most important. It is far better that our young people become Christians, than that they become scholars. If they become Christians they will be more diligent and successful in the prosecution of their studies. Religion and sound learning will in most cases insure them against failure in life.

The only way to be made a Christian is by being converted. The human instrumentalities sanctified to this end are religious instruction and personal influence. Experience shows that those who are not converted in early life generally die without religion. The few exceptions to this rule rarely become eminent for piety or for usefulness. College life usually embraces the period of greatest religious susceptibility—the period in which character is formed for time and for eternity. The question where it shall be spent is one of the most momentous that we are ever called to determine for our children.

A Call to Act.

MR. EDITOR: During the last seven weeks I have been to a number of good meetings in the bounds of the Aberdeen district, North Mississippi Conference. At no time in the past twenty years have I known of such deep and extensive revivals of religion. The pastors are all in an agony of solicitude for revivals. The leading members of the church everywhere I have been are filled with longing for an outpouring of the Holy Ghost. What has begotten this burning desire for a revival in the ministry and membership? Is the revival the result of this desire, or has the desire grown out of the revival? Has God set times to favor Zion, or have we just gotten ready for a blessing always in store for us? What means this Macedonian cry now coming up from all parts of the world for light and salvation? The far-off islands of the sea seem to be reaching out after God. What do these wonderful things at home and abroad foretoken? Are we about to enter upon a new and far more glorious era in the gospel dispensation? Would it not be well for croakers to open their eyes and see how the fields long white unto the harvest are being gathered into the granary of God? What connection, if any, is there between this widespread revival at home and the increasing desire for salvation among the nations so long in heathenish darkness? What should we do for them now that God has so blessed us at home? Shall we stand still longer to see the salvation of God, or shall we press forward as fast as the way opens before us? At several places of late I have seen the whole church stimulated and set on fire by the approach of one mourner to the altar, or the conversion of one soul. If we are thus moved at home by an event of this kind, how we ought to be stimulated when our brothers in heathen lands are coming by thousands to seek after the Saviour, the world's only hope! The way is open now, and opening more and more every day, and we must enter and utilize the opportunities afforded us, or prove untrue to Him who hath sent us out into the world to carry the knowledge of salvation to all men. What am I doing? Am I doing my utmost to win the world to Christ? What are you doing brother, sister, Christian lover of Jesus and lover of men? Are you trying, in one way or another, to bring all men to the knowledge of Christ?

The Missionary Committee of the British Wesleyans has recently, with great reluctance, determined upon retrenchment in the appropriations to mission districts. The London Watchman of July 16, in an article on the subject, says that the Methodist people can have it otherwise if they will. The Watchman concludes as follows:

The letters we have published show how the thing is regarded by the missionaries themselves; by men who have made every possible sacrifice, and have placed their lives in peril, in obedience to the call of God and His church for the salvation of heathen souls. So long as the reduction in the rate of grants was only in posse, some excuse could be found for any apparent apathy on the part of the Connection at large; but, now that it is in esse, we shall hang our heads in shame if the people do not rise as one man and say, 'This must not, shall not, be!' Mission churches must be either abandoned or hopelessly crippled in their work; openings big with hope and promise must be neglected, and a strain and pressure put upon our share of agency towards the world's conversion, which cannot but be all but infinitely disastrous. There never was such opportunity for expansion as there is now. The hopeful prospects of mission work in India and China; the marvelous opportunity vouchsafed in Japan; the promise presented in Central Africa, and other parts of that dark and degraded continent, call in trumpet tones for an advance along the whole line. Will the Methodists of Great Britain calmly acquiesce in the answer to that call of retreat along the whole line? We cannot yet believe it. We will not believe it till it is too clear to be disbelieved. Our Missionary Society has been in many an alarming financial strait; but hitherto the Connection has risen to the occasion, and the clouds have been broken up and dispersed. Is it to be otherwise now? Sons of John Wesley, remember that your founder's motto was, 'The world is my parish!' Remember that, as to opportunity, that motto is more emphatically true to-day than when he first adopted it. We may have the world at our feet, and may fill it with laborers if we will. There is no want of men to go forth in the mane of the Lord Jesus, and imitate their glorious fathers in heroic evangelizing enterprise. We have been praying for years that God "would send forth laborers into his harvest"; and lo! the prayer is answered. The one and only thing wanted now is the supply of means to send them forth, and for a time sustain them.

What heart burning and distress will the committee's resolution produce among the beloved and honored men who are toiling and fighting in the "high places of the field!" Many a heart will bleed; many "rivers of waters" will run down the cheeks of such men when they receive the news. But the Methodist people can have it otherwise if they will; and the first body to rejoice if the people shall determine that it shall be otherwise will be that committee which, amid sighs of deepest regret and protests of the most pathetic earnestness, felt that no choice was left. Let them but see a determination on the part of their constituents to avoid, at any cost, an exclusion which will work disaster and, in many places, absolute ruin, and they will with grateful and joyful hearts reverse the policy which nothing but utter need could have induced them even to think of for a single moment."

If I Stop My Paper.

A breeze or two has been blowing in that direction during the financial troubles; but an opposing breeze delays the fatal order. For, if I stop my paper:

1. I stop the welcome visits of an old friend. Toward half a century he has given me a weekly call. Shall I make the last visit—a week and then another and so on, and I see that face no more!

2. I stop the current of valuable instruction if I give that order. My paper is a small panorama of the world. Nothing interesting in human affairs escapes that one caterer for his patrons, the editor. On one page he spreads his net over this Continent, and on the next over the other; and the isles afar off are not beyond his reach. His nimble fingers pick up facts and items from the whole field of earthly vision. He condenses them, gives the proper heading, etc., all ruling me a bird's-eye view of a good part of creation. A whole squadron of carrier pigeons could not do me such a service. And am I to shut the door in the face of such a vision?

3. I stop the voice of a very valuable commentary on my Bible, if I give such an order. The current events of the day are the lesser and larger wheels of divine providence are therefore full of instruction concerning promises of God performed, and prophecies fulfilled, etc. The histories and fates of individuals, communities and nations, are links in this chain. So is the progress of art and science and invention. There is scarcely a weekly visit of that paper that does not help me to a better understanding of the world of God. And I am to bid these visits cease—am I?

4. I forbid entrance to my house of a vast variety of the most effective stimulants to my Christian life, if I stop my paper. In one column is a short but impressive essay on some phase of Christian character. In another is a striking case of eminently happy Christian experience. In another is a call to faith, hope and labor by an account of a precious revival. In yet another are incidents of missionary labor, faith and adventure, which touch the heart. The great home work appeals, and the great foreign no less eloquently. That sketch of a sermon quickens my spiritual pulse. A new and striking view of some obscure and almost forgotten passage of scripture, gives me a delightful surprise. And shall I stop such a current of such inspiring and sanctifying influences by giving that fatal order: "Stop my paper!"

5. Why, I should rob my loved household—children in particular—by such an order. Parents read; and do not the larger little ones? Does not my paper give a loving glance at the young? Do I not often see the sparkling eye, and hear the rapid, animated appeal to parental wisdom, as some striking fact or sentiment impels the question to the elders for more light? Do not fifty-two such visits to my house in a year make some suggestions about its being wise, or otherwise, to deprive my loved ones of what they would lose by the words to stop my paper?

Stop the baker, stop the butcher sooner. If you get such an order from me, and I am worth asking for, inquire for me among the lunatics.—Congregationalist.

Dr. Linfield sends us an account of the Crystal Springs camp meeting, but it is too late for the present issue. It will appear next week. The meeting was a profitable one.

—We are sorry to learn that William T. Smithson is dead. He was devoted to his church, and an exemplary Christian.

—The Nashville Christian Advocate says:

Prof. J. W. Dodd, LL. D., of Kentucky, has been elected to fill the chair of Latin language and literature in Vanderbilt University, made vacant by the resignation of Prof. Buchanan. This election will be gratifying to all concerned. Dr. Dodd is eminently fitted for the place.

—The good fortune of Vanderbilt University is still waxing. As will be seen by reference to our news columns, William H. Vanderbilt has just given $100,000 for a gymnasium, and the erection of an engine room and scientific hall.

HEALTH OF NEW ORLEANS.—Our city continues healthy. No case of yellow fever since the twenty-ninth of July. The death rate for the past week was less than for the same season for many years. There is absolutely no yellow fever here, and the prospect is good for continued exemption.

—The fever in Memphis has probably about reached its maximum. The following is the official report up to August 11:

For the week ending July 12, 3; for the week ending July 19, 6; for the week ending July 26, 31; for the week ending August 2, 23; for the week ending August 9, 29. Total number of deaths to date, 97.

Not only, says the Boston Congregationalist, is the world opening to the gospel as never before, but God is opening the hearts of His people in a wonderful manner to furnish the money needed for missionary operations. As showing this, we give a few of the recent gifts for foreign missions:

Legacy to the foreign mission work of the Free Church of Scotland, by Hugh Miller, M. D., who lived many years in Edinburgh.....

From Mr. T. M. Durrey, a merchant of Natal South Africa, to Wesleyan foreign missions.....

From Mr. Jones, an English gentleman, to the Church Missionary Society.....

From one of the Secretaries of the same Society.....

To the London Missionary Society, for work in Africa.....

From the Bishop of Newcastle, Australia, to the theological and other schools in his diocese.....

From Mr. Arthington of England, to various societies.....

Mr. Nisbet, to the Presbyterian Board.....

Legacy of Miss Lapsley, of England, to the Presbyterian Board of Missions, to be paid.....

From the late Gardiner Colby, of Boston, to Baptist societies.....

Messrs. Page, of the firm of Page Bros., Worcester, N. H., to the American Missionary Association.....

Dean Aspinwall, of New London, to the American Board.....

Here is more than three millions of dollars to help on in the great work of evangelizing the world, and it is by no means a complete report of the large gifts, to say nothing of the small ones. Who can doubt that the Providence which has inspired these immense gifts is to bring about great things thereby through these various societies?

"To the East by Way of the West," by Bishop Marvin, was noticed by us when first issued by Jas. H. Chambers & Co., of St. Louis. It is no ephemeral publication, but a work of permanent value, and one that should be read by all who are interested in missions, and in the scenery, people and customs of the Oriental world. Bishop Marvin's heart gushes in these pages, and his clear and keen perception of everything sublime, beautiful or tender, is everywhere manifest. The character of Bishop Marvin is more perfectly revealed in these chapters than in his sermons. No Southern Methodist should be without the book. We are glad to know that there is a fresh supply on hand at the book store of Lathrop & Wilkins, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

THE GOSPEL IN RUSSIA.—Christian work performed last year in Paris is bearing fruit in Russia. Prince Galitzin, a young Russian nobleman, who was converted by a Bible given to him at the Exhibition, is going to build thirty Bible kiosks (small perambulatory shops and to equip seven Bible carriages. He has engaged an Englishman, who was much occupied with tract distribution at the Paris Exhibition, to travel with some of these carriages in Russia, and will go with him for seven months to lend prestige to the work. He is reported as saying when making the arrangements, "Since Christ laid down his precious life for me, I will give my whole life and time and fortune to his service."—Evangelical Christendom.

Rev. R. D. Nolsworthy and wife, of Canton, Miss., have met with a deep sorrow in the death of their youngest child, Josephine Barksdale. She died August 4, aged two years. The bereaved parents are sustained by the blessed hope. "It is well with the child." Truly, "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." Another of the children was very ill, but improving at last accounts.

Rev. Inman W. Cooper, writing from Ocean Springs, Miss., says:

This place is the home on the coast for Methodist preachers. "Cherry Villa" is the name of Bishop Keener's beautiful home, and Dr. Walker, Bro. Downer, Bro. J. Nicholson and Dr. Dunbar have good homes, and the circuit preacher makes his home with Col. Stuart, and we think it is very pleasant to live in the little city of the prophets.

VACATION WORK PAID FOR.—It is not an unusual thing to give a pastor who is going out for a summer's journey a purse to help him go and come back, but the custom has just been reversed by a Methodist Church in New York city, which, learning of the purpose of the pastor to continue to occupy his pulpit throughout the heated season, sent him a check of $1 000 in recognition of his faithful work.

Rev. J. H. Scruggs, writing from Aberdeen, Miss., August 4, says: "Bishop Paine is as well as usual." We are gratified to learn that our venerable friend is passing the heated term in quiet and rest. For the sake of the church, he must take care of himself.

RUBIE'S KISSES CROSSES. By Ramsey Beirne & Co.

This is said to be an interesting story. Pansy, we know, has written some good things, among others "The Chautauqua Girls at Home." We do not much like the plot of this story, although the tilting up is religious enough. It may meet the wants of many whose trials are like those which Rubie encountered, and be instructive and helpful to those whose path is strewn with perplexity and sorrow. The volume is beautifully bound, illustrated, and contains 361 12mo pages. For sale by Lathrop & Wilkins, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

—The Theological and Homiletic Monthly for August. Rev. Dr. R. N. Sledd, editor and publisher, Richmond, Va., is a number of decided merit. In it Dr. Samuel Rodgers has a paper on Moody, the Evangelist. Rev. Joseph B. Wells's subject is Pilate on the Bench. Dr. Deems discourses on "The Sign and the Signified." "Preacher's Sons" is a selection from Lutheran Quarterly. Then we have "God's Faithfulness," by Rev. H. T. Bacon; "Workers—Wise and Otherwise—by Rev. F. M. Edwards; "Humility," by Phillips Brooks; Bishop Wightman's Sermon on Sanctification; "A Fireside Homily, by Rev. W. H. Anderson; "The Invisible Kingdom of God, by Rev. John Bayley; "The Last Days of Christ, by Dr. Hackett, in Bibliotheca Sacra.

—The Southern Cultivator for August has been received. This excellent agricultural monthly is published by W. L. Jones, Athens, Ga.

THE air of perfection, cleanliness and comfort which characterizes the Texas & Pacific Railway Company's passenger coaches, and the courtesy and attention of its employés, have won for it the reputation of having the best managed road in the South. Its officers, from President Kimball down to the humblest employé, are gentlemen of the highest character, and the road is fortunate in having such gentlemen as one of their officers.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

POZZONI'S MEDICATED COMPLEXION POWDER is a necessity enjoyed by thousands of ladies, who use it daily for the only reason that it does not injure the skin, as most powders do, or leave black spots in the pores. Mothers may apply it to infants who have the chafed skin a surety of immediate relief. Removes all eruptions. Price, 50 cents and $1 per box. Sold by druggists, and at depot 607 North Sixth street, St. Louis (Lindell Hotel.)

WICKED FOR CLERGYMEN.

I believe it to be all wrong and even wicked for clergymen or other public men to be so foolish as to sell anything to the ladies or children, but when a really worthy article is made up of medicinal valuable properties known to all, and that all physicians use and trust in daily, we should, truly conscientious, feel there is no harm in heartily commend Hop Bitters for the good they have done me and my friends, firmly believing they have no equal for family use. I will not be without them. Rev. ——, Washington, D. C.

NEW ORLEANS, September 4, 1878.

I feel a sincere pleasure in adding my testimony to the great virtues of Mayhew's compounds. Two wine glasses of this preparation gave me new life the next morning after taking it. I was exhausted and very low spirited the evening previous. I have used but one bottle but will never be without it, nor shall my family while I have a dollar to buy a bottle of Mayhew's.

The plant, like all other peppers, will keep in the garden blossoming and bearing fruit until arrested by frost and it dies, pulled and removed by the negro. This species of pepper is found to be very beneficial for fowls, digestive in its properties, and on account of purity, is to be preferred before that kept by dealers. It is not only a preventive of disease, but promotes growth and egg production. Acting as a tonic on the system, it keeps the birds in a healthy condition, without which there cannot reasonably be expected large profits.—Country Gentleman.

NEW BONE CAVERN IN IRELAND.—The bone cave at Shandon, near Dungarvan, in the County of Waterford, accidentally discovered some twenty-five years ago, was the first Irish cave which produced animal remains belonging to the Pleistocene period. In it were found remains of the mammoth horse, bear, wolf and reindeer. Another cave has recently been discovered near Cappoquin, and a distance of about seven miles from the Shandon cave. This new cavern is of large size and appears to have been occupied at a very remote period by bears, portions of whose skeletons are to be met with in the lower deposits of the floor; but the chief interest in this discovery rests in the fact that remains of the great Irish elk (Megaceros Hibernicus) were found in it, in connection with the bones of other deer and of horse, and along with a polished green stone celt (axe adze) and several stone implements. There were also some remarkable and strong evidences met with of the association of man with the great Irish elk, for Professor Leith Adams, in whose presence these remains were taken out of the cave and by whom they were packed up for further observation, says that many of the bones of the megaceros were evidently split for their marrow, and several elk canon bones were found fashioned into awls and gauges, showing that man was not only contemporaneous with the giant stag of Ireland, but also may have in some measure helped to exterminate it. The explorations of this cave are still going on, and they promise to open out a new era in the prehistoric history of Ireland.

TUNNELLING SAHARA INTO A LAKE.—It would be a curious feat if the desert of Sahara could be converted into a lake, but an English engineer has sought out a way by which this might be done, and after all beyond the range of possibility. One of Africa's large depressions, which the French are now exploring, is that of Triton, which is 210 feet below the level of the Mediterranean. The bottom of this depression is composed of a soft, chalky clay, which can be easily cut through. The engineer proposes to cut a channel from the Gulf of Gabes to the Triton depression, and to let the waters of the Mediterranean flow in. The channel would be about 100 feet wide at the bottom, and would require to be cut through a ridge of sand hills 30 feet high. The length of the channel would be about 100 miles. The engineer estimates that the cost of the work would be about $5,000,000, and that it would take about two years to complete it. The lake would be about 150 miles long, and from 30 to 40 miles wide, and would have an area of about 4,000 square miles. The engineer thinks that the climate would be greatly improved by the change, and that the rainfall would be increased. He also thinks that the lake would be a source of wealth, as it would abound in fish, and would be navigable for small steamers.

IT IS WORTH A TRIAL.

"I was troubled for many years with Kidney Complaint, Gravel, etc.; my blood became thin; I was dull and inactive, could hardly crawl about, and was an old worn out man all over, and could get nothing to help me, until I got Hop Bitters, and now, I am a boy again. My blood and kidneys are all right, and I am as active as a man of thirty, although I am seventy-two, and I have no doubt it will do as well for others, of my age. It is worth the trial.—Father. (Adv.)

The Rev. John Brown, of Haddington, was in the habit of proposing, on festive occasions, a certain young lady as his toast. Having abandoned the practice, he was asked for a reason. "Because," said he, "I have toasted her for sixteen years without being able to make her brown, and so I've resolved to toast her no longer."

PREVENT YELLOW FEVER.

It has been well proved that prevention is better than cure. A very simple and effective preventative for yellow fever and other fevers has been found in BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS. They were used during the last season in New Orleans very successfully, the common method of using them was to apply them over the stomach, changing them every week. They are one OF THE MOST ACTIVE ANTISEPTICS and seem to destroy the poison. One reason why they are of such value is that they stimulate the digestion, and thus enable the system to overcome the influence of the malarial poison. They are a cheap and almost certain preventative. Ask your physician about them. Benson's Capcine Plasters are a sure preventative and cure for chills and fever if worn as above. Price, 25 cents.

A JOKE RETURNED.—The Palmyra Enterprise, published in Jefferson county, Wisconsin, relates this new dog story—and a pretty good one. A gentleman connected with the United States Lake Survey, in this city, was engaged one day on the skirt of a wood in Indiana. Near him, sleeping lazily in the sun, lay his faithful dog, Tiger. Thinking to have some fun with the dog, he gave a shout and jump into the thicket as if all the game ever protected by game laws from marauding hunters was thrashing through the bushes. As he expected, Tiger came bounding and barking to the fray, and soon detecting the trick that was played upon him, sneaked back to his lair and lay down again. The surveyor resumed his duties, and was hard at work for two or three hours, when, all at once, the dog rose from his sleep, set his ears and eyes in direction of the wood, gave a bark and made a rush to the furs depths. The surveyor followed the noble brute to a tree up which he was sending emphatic congratulations to the prey, but when the surveyor came and began anxiously to scan the boughs for the hiding game Tiger gave a satisfied "Ar-Wooh!" bestowed a glance of contempt at the surveyor, and striking a dignified gait stalked back to his couch with the appearance of a dog that had squared up all accounts with the Lake Survey, and had left nothing due on either side.

At the cooking lecture, lady solicitquizing: "Now that she's got it cooked, I wish she'd tell us how to use up cold mutton." Next lady overhears and remarks: "I have some infallible recipes." First lady, alert with pencil and note-book: "Will you please favor me?" Second lady: "Six boys!"

DISCOVERY by which hair can be forced to grow on the smoothest heads. The papers all over the country contain notices of the remarkable virtues of Mrs. Hyatt's Hair Restorer, and there are scores of living witnesses in St. Louis who take pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of the Restorer. Mrs. Hyatt's principle is the most reasonable, because she proceeds on the well-based supposition that the hair germ never dies while life exists in the person, and that it is only necessary to stimulate the germ to produce a satisfactory growth. Three bottles for $5. $1 to accompany the order and balance to be paid when medicine is delivered.

A REFUSED.—The young men of this hirsute generation know nothing of the strong feelings of prejudice which a man encountered thirty years ago who wore a moustache. A correspondent of the Boston Journal tells of an experience he had in 1847. He says: I was then a young man just entering business, and had the hare-faced impudence to allow what little beard Nature had blessed me with to grow, not excepting the upper lip. (I do not think there were more than two or three men in Boston who dared to wear a moustache, and they were foreigners.) One day I had applied to the Washington bank for a discount; the president was the father of J. Charles Baldwin (whose residence was at or near the corner of Essex street.) The notes were returned with word that "nothing was done." As I never had been refused before I thought it strange, and I immediately interviewed the cashier, who referred me to the president. I found him in his room, and, approaching him, I asked why the notes could not be discounted. Raising his eyes, and scanning my face, he replied: "We cannot discount notes for a person who wears a shoe-brush on his face." Argument was useless, and, rather than give up my moustache, which has never been shaved to this day, I removed my account to another bank.

It is said that Joseph Cook illustrates motives by saying that when a boy steals apples, the apples are the external objective motive; the boy's love of apples is the internal subjective motive, and his decision to steal them the moral motive. One of the Sunday-school papers adds that if the owner of the apples comes along at the right time the sole of his boot becomes the external locomotive.

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER,

For Malarial Poisoning,

Affections Peculiar to Women, etc.

TESTIMONY OF DISTINGUISHED MEDICAL MEN.

EXTRACT FROM LETTER OF DR. WM. T. HOWARD.

Of Baltimore, Professor of Diseases of Children in the University of Maryland, of August 1, 1878.

Dr. Howard compares these waters with those of the celebrated Greenbrier White Sulphur, West Virginia, and adds the following:

"Indeed, in a certain class of cases, it is much superior to the latter. I attribute to the Alkaline debility attending upon the fatty convalescence from grave acute diseases, and more especially to the anæmia and cachexia incident to MALARIOUS FEVERS IN ALL THEIR GRADES AND VARIETIES, to which it is certainly far superior, and ALL THE AFFECTIONS PECULIAR TO WOMEN that are remediable at all by mineral waters. In short were I invited again to state from what mineral water I have seen the most and most speedy benefit in Malarial Poisoning, I would without hesitancy say the Buffalo Springs, in Mecklenburg county, Virginia."

MALARIAL POISON.

Extract from our own observation of Dr. John H. Pettigrew, of Jackson, Tenn., on the Therapeutic Action of the Buffalo Lithia Waters, at Virginia Mineral Springs, in February, 1877.

"Their great value in MALARIAL DISEASES and SEQUELÆ has been most abundantly and satisfactorily tested; and I have no question that it would prove a valuable and large item in the treatment of the second stage of yellow fever which so terribly afflicted the Mississippi Valley during the past summer. I prescribed it in my own and gave it to a number of suppressed urine yellow fever and decided antagonist to all distressing and dangerous symptoms. The patient recovered, how far the water may have contributed to that result, I will not pretend to say, but a single case I do of course claim much credit for. There is no doubt, however, about the fact that its administration was attended by the most beneficial results."

These Springs are now open for visitors. The waters may be had at the Springs at $5 per case of six gallons, or may also be had of L. LYONS, No. 42 and 44 Camp Street, New Orleans, at $6.50 per case now. Springs pamphlet sent to any address.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 11.—The National Board of Health has received the following telegram from Secretary Thompson, dispatched at Walnut P. Smith, Chief of Marine Hospital Service at Brownsville, Texas, Aug. 10, to Surgeon General Hamilton at Washington, dated August 1, says: We have a yellow fever epidemic worse than New Orleans last year. People dropping dead in the streets. The Government Relief Corps is completely demoralized.

FALL RIVER, Aug. 12.—Wilbur Palmer, third Treasurer of the American Linen Company, has been missing since Saturday, and a deficit of $10,000 in cotton goods and $4,000 in money is reported.

MOBILE, Aug. 13.—From communications received at the Board of Health, it is apparent that the yellow fever epidemic is confined to a few localities, and is decreasing. Reports are received from all parts of the State, and there is no fever anywhere except in Mobile and Bayou La Batre. The Board of Health has issued a circular to the effect that the danger from yellow fever is over, and that the quarantine restrictions against the city of New Orleans will be removed on and after Friday, August 15, 1879.

JOHN MOORE,
Secretary Board of Health.

Surgeon Carnochan has been assigned to the command of the U. S. Revenue Marine steamer Dallas, now at New Orleans, and will relieve Captain Shoemaker.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 12.—Last night's storm was very severe, and many houses were unroofed, and trees blown down. Reports from the interior of the State indicate that the storm was very severe in many localities. Several persons were killed by lightning, and many cattle were killed. Reports from the crops are very encouraging.

RICHMOND, Aug. 12.—Dr. Thomas H. Burgess, a well-known Methodist preacher, minister, died yesterday aged [illegible].

BOSTON, Aug. 12.—Hon. Benjamin Tremain, of Troy, was robbed of the American Bible Society's watch, worth $300, yesterday, between 11 and 12 o'clock last night. Loss [illegible] to $5,000 several thousand were [illegible] in bank notes.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 13.—Fifteen cases in all were reported to the Board of Health to-day. Total deaths since last report, two additional deaths have occurred.

The Tennessee State Board of Health advises well to-morrow to the removal of the sick where yellow fever exists.

Guards will be placed to prohibit communication with the [illegible].

Dr. J. Long, Pittsburgh, fell ill here, and died in Mobile.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 14.—Miss Birdie Hall, adopted daughter of A. J. Hall, Esq., died at the White House, Tenn., was taken sick with yellow fever on Monday.

Dr. R. W. Mitchell, who returned from Bartlett, Tenn., yesterday, reports a negro sick with fever, near that town. His infection can be traced to his family.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Aug. 11.—Daniel Bowers, jr., shot Captain Hall, of the steamer Lord Clive, while on board that vessel, on the 4th inst. Bowers was arrested, and, after examination, committed for trial.

LONDON, Aug. 12.—Dispatches from Constantinople to the Times say that the Porte has decided to withdraw the Turkish troops from Thessaly and Epirus, and to leave the settlement of the boundary question to the Powers.

LONDON, Aug. 13.—Advices from Cape Town, South Africa, dated July 22, say that the Zulus have attacked the British camp at Ulundi, and were repulsed with heavy loss. The British loss was 12 officers and 70 men killed, and 80 men wounded.

LONDON, Aug. 14.—Lord Chelmsford, commanding the British forces in Zululand, telegraphed from Ulundi, July 4, that the Zulus had been defeated with great slaughter. The British loss was 12 officers and 70 men killed, and 80 men wounded.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—There was a disturbance at Langan, Ireland, yesterday between a Home Rule procession and the police, who charged on the mob with fixed bayonets. Many of the police were wounded by stones. The violence of the crowd was so great that the police fired upon them and killed one and wounded two. The mob subsequently wrecked Lord Langan's gate lodges and the house of a Protestant.

NAPLES, Aug. 17.—A stream of lava flowed from Mount Vesuvius Friday as far as the base of the crue, but there was no eruption Saturday.

BELGRADE, Aug. 17.—Eight thousand Albanians are now threatening the Servian frontier.

FREDERICKTON, N. B., Aug. 17.—There was a heavy frost in some parts of the country last night. The weather is cool to-day.

HAVANA, Aug. 18.—One hundred deaths from yellow fever occurred here last week, being an increase of seven as compared with those of the preceding week. If the prevailing drouth continues the present fine prospect of the crop will be seriously impaired.

LONDON, Aug. 18.—A Calcutta dispatch to the Times says: Rain in Cashmere might prevent a free crop and so the famine average crop. The statement made some time ago that this would be enough to support the people rests upon the assumption apparently on values well founded, that all of the inhabitants have either perished by famine or emigrated.

OTTAWA, Aug. 18.—All is quiet to-day. The troops are still under arms. The Royal Rifles were removed from Sarsfield Camp to Quebec's wharf during the night. The rumor that rioters had seized upon the arms stored at Levis as well as the Lower Quebec, is incorrect.

Last night, the Mayor had read on all upon the streets of the city a number of proclamations and handbills of the various military bodies now under arms. It was decided to request the Government to place the whole of the city and county under the provisions of the Riot Act.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 18.—Advices from Apia, via Port Townsend, by the steamer Wilson, say the hurricane of March 16 was followed by the formation of a civil government. It was organized by the citizens of Apia, May the 22d of August, in accordance with the wishes of a mass meeting held July 7. The people assembled in large numbers, and with enthusiasm, with banners, flags and music. Three cheers were given for Malietoa, and three for Queen Victoria, and three for the United States. Captain Mullan, of the United States steamer Adams, was present, and made a speech, and also Captain Hand, of the British steamer Conway. Malietoa was proclaimed King of Samoa, and the Chief Justice administered the oath of office. Malietoa then appointed his Ministers of State, and the Chief Justice administered the oath of office to them. Malietoa then made a speech, in which he said that he would govern the people justly, and that he would be a father to them. He would not oppress them with taxes, but would only require them to work on the roads for a few days in the year. He would not allow any one to be punished without a fair trial. He would not allow any one to be punished for his religious belief. He would not allow any one to be punished for speaking against the Government. He would not allow any one to be punished for his political opinions. He would not allow any one to be punished for his religious belief

WAITING.

I have two little angels waiting for me,
On the beautiful banks of the crystal sea;
Not impatiently wait my darlings there,
For bright robes on their brows so fair,
And their little harps ring out so clear,
So soothingly sweet to Faith's listening ear;
They live in the smile of the Saviour's love,
Who so early called my darlings above.

I have two little angels waiting for me,
On the beautiful banks of the crystal sea;
Forever free from sorrow and pain,
Sinless and pure from all earthly stain;
Never in erring paths to rove,
Safe in the bosom of Infinite love,
Evermore, evermore walk in delight,
Those beautiful angels robed in white.

I have two little angels waiting for me,
On the beautiful banks of the crystal sea;
When my weary heart is throbbing with pain,
And I fain would clasp my darlings again,
I'll look away from the earthly strand,
To the beautiful fields of the Better Land
I'll think of the angels waiting there,
And offer to God a thankful prayer.

I have two little angels to welcome me,
When I, too, shall stand by the crystal sea;
When the Great Refiner His image shall trace
In the heart He has won by His saving grace,
And in robes of Christ's own righteousness dressed,
My spirit all seek the home of the blest;
On the beautiful banks of the crystal sea,
My darling, still waiting shall welcome be.

—Selected.

NOTICE BY THE EDITOR.—We publish the above by request. There is a great deal of tenderness and beauty in the poem. The line, "And in robes of Christ's own righteousness dressed," smacks strongly of imputed righteousness, and is not in accord with our Methodist doctrine.

From the Work.

TOM'S CREEK, LOUISIANA.

MR. EDITOR: The unprecedented revival with which God has blessed this country for the last two months still continues to widen in breadth and deepen in interest.

Last Saturday quite a number of "holy brethren" accompanied me into a French settlement, where I had appointed a two days' meeting. We found a brush arbor erected, and people from all quarters. The attention to the word was profound, their hospitality open and lavish. On Sunday the whole congregation, Americans and French, were swept away with the power of the gospel. I don't think there was a man in the congregation that did not come forward for prayer. To show their appreciation, one of my stewards lifted a collection, and $21 50, for the support of the ministry, was the result. Seven accessions, four children baptized, a society organized by request, is the visible good accomplished.

They are now at work building a house of worship, and Methodism there is a fixture. I have been requested to go ten miles farther down among this people, and preach the funeral of two young men who died recently. I have consented, and appointed a two days' meeting for the fourth Sabbath in August. Let the whole church pray for this work. It seems to me that God has opened the door to this people. The field is now white unto the harvest. From neighborhoods far and near they cry: "Come over and help us." We need nothing but the Holy Ghost in this great work. As a result of the revival, 115 accessions to date, 175 conversions, while more than 100 witnesses bear testimony to the power of the cleansing blood.

JULY 28. W. HICKS.

LEESBURG, ALABAMA.

MR. EDITOR: I have just closed my third protracted meeting. The first, held at McKenzie's Chapel, closed on Thursday after the third Sabbath in July. The Lord was graciously present with us there. The church was revived and made happy in the love of God. Sinners were converted, and united with God's people in praise and thanksgiving. Fifteen were added to the church. On Saturday before the fourth Sabbath in July I began service at Asbury Chapel. The weather was unfavorable, but, thank God, the effort was a success. The church was blessed, and many are glad that they lived to enjoy the occasion. There was but one accession to the church. On Saturday night before the first Sabbath in August I began service at Bethlehem. The weather was still unfavorable, and the fruits of good here were not so manifest as at the other points, but I must believe there was much good done. Sister McKay, daughter of the Rev. H. Huggins, died during the progress of this meeting, and, though she was among strangers, there were true mourners at her grave.

Yours fraternally,

AUGUST 4, 1879. SAMUEL MILLER.

PENSACOLA DISTRICT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I have seen much to encourage me lately. So far, on my third round, nearly all my quarterly meetings have been perfumed with good results. I hear of good meetings at other points on the district.

At Forest Home, on the Monterey circuit, they have just completed a handsome church, which I am to dedicate next Sunday. At Brewton, on the Pollard circuit, there is a neat church going up. As I passed Powelton on yesterday I saw the frame of their new parsonage, and the ring of hammers gave promise of its completion at an early day.

I have just returned from a visit to Perdido mission. Up to last Conference there was no church house or organized society in the bounds of this mission. As it was left to be supplied, I employed Rev. L. A. Jones, a local preacher of experience, to go and survey the field, and organize the work. He selected five points in the territory at which he proposed to build houses of worship. At these points he has been preaching, in the grove or in private houses. He has succeeded in building two churches, another is begun, and he hopes to build two more before Conference.

Bro. Jones began organizing societies by taking 10 members from the Powelton circuit. To these he has added 79 more, giving him 89 members and four organized societies. He has four Sunday-schools and 65 scholars. Up to date 31 children have been baptized. My quarterly meeting for last Sunday was at Ross' Point, on Perdido Bay. We held the meeting in one of Bro. Jones' new churches. The meeting was one of interest. The congregation was large and attentive. There were 10 or 12 conversions, and 14 accessions. The outlook at this point is very hopeful. Bro. Jones is serving this work at great personal sacrifice, only $100 appropriated; but he is doing a good work, and will gather fruit unto life eternal. If some man who has money to spend for luxuries or superfluities would send me $50 for him it would be a good investment, the coupons of which would be good when this world is burned to cinders.

I have also visited the Yellow River and Gravella missions. The Gravella mission is served by Rev. M. M. Graham, who is doing well under the circumstances. A large portion of the territory in this mission is sparsely settled. But the great trouble is the multiplicity of faiths and orders among the people. The Northern Methodist, Protestant Methodist, Congregational Methodist, Southern Methodist, Missionary Baptists, Freewill Baptists, Independent Baptists, Hard-Shell Baptists, Universallats, Campbellites, and the Latter Day Saints, or Mormons, are all there. What is best to do for this territory, or a large portion of it, I am not prepared to say. Of one thing I am persuaded, viz.: It is useless for the Alabama Conference to think of establishing the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in that territory by an appropriation of $200 a year. I may have more to say on this point at another time.

The same difficulty exists in a portion of the Yellow River mission, though, as a whole, it is more hopeful than the Gravella mission. With proper culture I think a self sustaining work might be made out of Yellow River in the course of a few years.

We have two more camp meetings to hold. One at Douglasville, Pollard circuit, embraces the first Sunday in September; another at Asbury, Sepulga circuit, embraces the third Sunday in September.

We are having heavy rains. The crops are badly injured already, and no indication of fair weather as yet.

SELMA DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: The Selma District Conference met in the pleasant and enterprising town of Marion, in Perry county, Ala., at nine A. M., Friday, July 18, 1879.

The presiding elder, Rev. John W. Robb, presided over the meeting to the entire satisfaction of all concerned.

The session was short, but remarkable for its harmony, and the vast deal of pleasure, as well as profit, that it afforded all present. The requirements of the Discipline were all fully met, and the reports were encouraging. The Sunday-school interest, especially, is receiving more attention from the guardians of the church than it ever has. But two pastors out of fourteen were absent, both the charges of whom were well represented by laymen. The Southern University was represented by J. Lewis, Jr., D. D., Vice Chancellor, whose report inspired the friends and patrons of the institution with the hope of certain success.

In the gloom and sadness caused by the very sudden and unexpected death of Dr. L. M. Smith, the Chancellor, the fathers and mothers of Alabama, and the adjoining States, who have sons they wish to educate in heart as well as in head, have occasion to rejoice that Dr. Lewis will succeed him as Chancellor, and who is in every sense qualified to fill the vacancy.

Prominence was given to divine service, and the preaching was instructive and edifying. Marion, for hospitality and intelligence, cannot be excelled.

East Selma was elected as the place for holding the next session of the District Conference; J. R. John, George Fontaine, W. W. Sheppard and B. M. Huey were elected as delegates, and J. C. Dozier and J. M. Jeffries as reserve delegates, to the ensuing Annual Conference.

MONTGOMERY DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: The Montgomery District Conference met in Seale, Ala., July 31. Rev. T. F. Mangum, our presiding elder, conducted the business of the Conference well. In some respects the district shows signs of improvement. All of the interests of the church were looked into.

The Conference was impressed that the Alabama Conference Female College at Tuskegee had the right man at its head; and, more, the patrons of Dr. Massey are pleased and satisfied with him.

The people of Seale were so kind and hospitable, and if they only opened their hearts to receive the truth so faithfully and earnestly preached to them, as they did their homes to receive the Conference, all will be well for them in that day.

Tallassee was selected as the place to hold the next Conference. J. M. Brannon, B. M. Washburn, J. H. Harris and R. T. Davis were elected delegates to the Annual Conference; Isaac Hill and O. D. Smith, alternates.

POPLAR SPRINGS, MISSISSIPPI.

MR. EDITOR: This is truly an outpost of Methodism, situated in the heart of a Baptist community, in the northern part of Marion county. About one year ago a Methodist Church was established at this place with only a very few members. Since that time we have had regular preaching. We have lived on in a careless, humdrum sort of a way until this summer. At the beginning of this year Bro. Brown was sent to us, and we are happy to say that he has waked us all up to a sense of our Christian duty. He has just closed a protracted meeting here, assisted by Bros. Ball and Callaway. We rejoice to say that God was with us, and manifested His power in the conversion of souls, and in rousing the lukewarm. Eleven were added to the church. Several adults and children were baptized. I will say right here that our Baptist brethren helped us a great deal. May God bless us all, and continue His work in our midst.

Yours truly,

Letter to the Advocate.

DEAR ADVOCATE: I've just been thinking what a delightful thing it would be to make a flying visit with you this week to all the dear homes of the ADVOCATE family. The many smiling faces I would see would do me a world of good, and be a joy forever. The many cheery voices I would hear exclaiming: "Ah! here is the ADVOCATE, like an old friend, always welcome," would serve to light up the darkest day with its pleasant memory. If by chance we should find in any of these homes long faces, frowns and crinkers, we would take French leave, and hasten on to find "meals (or faces) more attractive."

But, alas for my novel thoughts, dear old ADVOCATE, for I am not at 112 Camp street, and could not execute these wild wishes if I were so I will only imagine I have been with you for at least one humble cottage home in dear old Mississippi, and help you tell what you saw there. You saw one of God's dear, patient, suffering children. The dear "Invalid" (whose touching articles have so often enriched your columns) stretched upon a bed of pain. You have seen her lying there so many weary weeks and months; and and even years. Lying there without a hope of ever being any better. Lying there with but few of life's comforts, and none of its luxuries. Lying there in sweet resignation to her Heavenly Father's will, praying for "grace sufficient" to bear whatsoever more it pleaseth Him to send upon her. Lying there longing for a glimpse with in the "gates ajar," and sometimes almost realizing the longings of her heart. For in a letter she says: "I have been very ill, but even when delirious I seemed to be in constant communication with Jesus, and never had clearer witness of the power and presence of the Holy Spirit than in those long weary weeks of intense physical suffering, and spirit bliss and peace. Oh! I seemed so near the land of rest that I was almost grieved, and really surprised to find myself back in this vale of tears. But I need to suffer more, or I would not be called upon to pass through the furnace." Again she writes: "I do not complain, nor does my soul often feel 'cast down,' for I 'hope in God,' and in the darkest days of adversity I find some sunshine. For me the Sun of Righteousness ever shineth. Last night I dreamed of being so happy in the love of God I praised Him aloud, and was in 'rapturous delight' when I awoke. I feel that I am nearing the kingdom, and I never expect to lose sight of the promise: 'Follow Me, and thou shalt have eternal life.'"

Thus, dear ADVOCATE, did this patient saint write to me last spring. And still she is lying there on that bed of pain, and still saying: "Thy will be done." Writing on the first of this month (July) she says: "My pastor, Rev. H. H. Montgomery, is gone. He was a good man, a true friend and an able preacher, but I do not feel that he has left me in the spirit. So my friends are passing away, leaving me, the helpless, useless burden, to linger awhile longer. But I cast all my care on Him whose voice I seem to hear saying: 'Let not your heart be troubled.' I often feel that some one is praying for me earnestly. 'Are you praying for me now, dear Patience?' Tell her yes, dear ADVOCATE. "For her I am praying. I'm praying for her." I know what a welcome guest you are in her humble home. Each week as her good, patient mother, loving sisters or noble brother, enters her room with the weekly mail, how she stretches out her feeble hands, and takes you almost caressingly, and smooths out your folds before her. Now her wan countenance is lit up with a sympathetic smile, but oftener the briny tears fall thick and fast as she reads of work done for Jesus everywhere in the world wide vineyard, and she lying there so helpless and burdensome. But, ah! dear "Invalid," they work who only wait, and the prophet saith: "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength." Thos. A'Kempis, that dear old monk, wrote, oh! so long ago, this comforting sentence: "The bearing any affliction for the love of Christ patiently will give us great confidence—we shall die happy." So then let us "be patient unto the coming of the Lord."

Dear "Invalid," whom, having not seen, I love, through the medium of the ADVOCATE, "Patience" sends you this greeting. If in some dark hour, when the flesh is weak, you stand in thought on the summit of Gerizim, and stretch your trembling hands to Heaven and cry, "O Lord, how long!" Just list a moment, for, surely from far-away Mount Ebal will come the satisfying answer: "I will come and not tarry."

PATIENCE.

About Sabine Pass, Texas.

MR. EDITOR: To meet the wishes of various correspondents in Alabama and Louisiana, whose attention was attracted to certain postals in the ADVOCATE by your correspondent, I will give, through the ADVOCATE, a more full description of the region in reference to which inquiry has been instituted, that they and others may be satisfactorily posted, so far as the writer may have been impressed by his observations and reflections in a pretty thorough survey of the country. The coast region about Sabine Pass, and the back country in the adjacent counties of Jefferson and Orange, presented many attractive features in the conception of the writer. In the first place, as to soil, there was the most agreeable surprise. Instead of a cold, crawfish pine marsh land, there was a genial productive alluvion, the deposit of ages from Sabine river and the sea, mixed with sea shell from one to two feet in depth on the coast, to four feet on Sabine river, and, I presume, the same on Neches river, which I did not so particularly examine. This soil is more particularly adapted to the production of the tropical fruits and vegetables, which grow most luxuriantly all the year round—three crops on the same land annually.

Though corn and cotton are the least profitable crops on this genial and prolific soil, there is the yield on those portions, subject to an intelligent and industrious cultivation, from thirty to fifty bushels of corn, or one bale of cotton to the acre. In oranges the same land will produce from $500 to $1,000 per acre, according to age. In vegetables four-fold more than corn and cotton.

Its adaptabilities as a fruit and vegetable region have just begun to be realized, and attention by a few is being given to its indigenous products. It has remained a terra incognita to the outside world, unpenetrated by the great thoroughfares of travel. These fine lands, composing a portion of that small belt of the earth's surface adapted to its peculiar products, have been appropriated to vast herds of cattle, which have supported their owners, without the labor of the agriculturist and husbandman. When its resources shall be developed from the realization of its intrinsic value, this land of nominal value (now from $1 to $5 per acre) will be of fabulous price. No effort in the way of drainage and improvement has as yet been made. There is the prospect in the near future of a proper appreciation and development of this country now being penetrated by that great thoroughfare, the New Orleans and Texas railroad. The climate is most delightful and healthful, the country being fanned by sea-breeze and washed by salt water. The society is good, and schools are being inaugurated. The people are churchgoing, and will compare favorably with any community. The principal drawbacks are musquitoes, and scarcity of timber immediately on the coast. The advantages are as great or greater than any seen by the writer. Come and see for yourself.

Obituaries.

REV. JOHN DETRICK SHYRIGH, a local preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, died at his residence, near Oak Grove, Lee county, Miss., on the nineteenth of July, A. D. 1879, after a very painful illness of nearly two weeks. Bro. Shyrigh was born in Virginia, June 3, 1811. The writer knows nothing of his early life. He was married to Miss Lucia Arnold in 1837, with whom he lived in peace and happiness until it pleased the Lord to separate them for a short while—death, to join his children, all of whom had preceded him.

He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, under the ministry of the Rev. J. C. Harkey. He rose, on the Louisiana Conference, in 1850, but was not ordained until 1854, while following his plow. His call was sudden, powerful, thorough, of which change he never doubted. From change his course was marked, consistently upward. His progress in the ministry and morality was gradual. He was always a diligent student of the Bible. He was without God in preaching the gospel, but he was the right to demon's order—but not preaching with a Bishop he was never ordained. The Church in our vicinity of Oak Grove has sustained an irreparable loss in the death of this good and faithful minister.

His conversion to God and his subsequent ordination were remarkable illustrations of the power of the Christian religion. Truly it was said of him, "He will speak a word in season to him that is weary." Such was the case with Bro. Shyrigh. He preached to the end of the church that he loved. His funeral was preached by the writer from the text, "Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh." His children and their companions, a large concourse of people, were present. He was buried with Masonic honors, of which order he was a member. He will be missed in the community in which he resided and the influence of his quiet, consistent, Christian walk will remain a living testimony to the truth of Christ. He died as he all, those who are the dead in the Lord shall rise first." Were the lines ever more sweetly and confidently sung than by her? Calmly she awaited the summons that would open the gate that could not be closed against her, and, like her sister and others before her, she entered the joy of her Lord.

Dear brother, in your sad bereavement we sympathize. Commune with your God, and He will strengthen you in the trials of the journey. Soon the cold grave and the dark river will be passed, and you will arrive home in the bosom of your own island. The heart-broken children and the sad community are united in the Christian family who have been called to go, recently, to pass through those deep waters of affliction. She has left a dark and rough

JAMES ENGLISH was born in [illegible] Ireland, [illegible] 1807. He was converted to God and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Pine Flat, Wilkinson county, Miss., in the year 1844. He was married to Miss Mary Ann Ellis, of Adams county, Miss., in the year 1847. He moved to Louisiana in the year 1850, and settled in the parish of Tensas, where he lived a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for twenty-nine years. He was a kind husband, a tender father, a good neighbor, and a faithful friend. He was a man of few words, but his actions spoke louder than words. He was a man of prayer. He was a man of faith. He was a man of hope. He was a man of love. He was a man of charity. He was a man of peace. He was a man of joy. He was a man of gladness. He was a man of thanksgiving. He was a man of praise. He was a man of wisdom. He was a man of understanding. He was a man of knowledge. He was a man of counsel. He was a man of might. He was a man of power. He was a man of dominion. He was a man of majesty. He was a man of glory. He was a man of honor. He was a man of virtue. He was a man of righteousness. He was a man of holiness. He was a man of purity. He was a man of truth. He was a man of wisdom. He was a man of understanding. He was a man of knowledge. He was a man of counsel. He was a man of might. He was a man of power. He was a man of dominion. He was a man of majesty.

MRS. HANNAH HORA, wife of William Hora, was born in Charleston, S. C., November 21, 1812; was married by Rev. William Capers (subsequently Bishop Capers) November 17, 1841, and died in Tuskegee, Ala., May 22, 1879.

Sister Hora was a woman of positive decided character, frank and candid in her intercourse, and eminently just and prompt in all her dealings.

In early life she gave her heart to the Saviour, and, being a Methodist, both by inheritance and in principle, she at once connected herself with the Methodist Episcopal Church. When the division of the church took place she went with the Southern division. From the day she joined the church until the day of her death the high moral, evangelistical, doctrinal and spiritual tone of pure Wesleyan Methodism was her ideal of Christian life and character.

The names of many of the earlier preachers of the South Carolina Conference were to her as familiar as household words, and much of her pleasure in her later years was derived from her fond recollections of those holy men. The writer has often seen the tears of sweet, grateful recollections gather in her eyes as she spoke of those who had, as pastors, watched over and guided her early spiritual life.

For several years before her decease she enjoyed much clearer experience of divine grace, and, as if getting ready for the final change, her faith grew stronger and her hope brighter.

Her last illness was long and severe, mostly of a nervous character, induced by severe grief over the death of her husband.

In our last interview with her she made the remark: "I have a natural dread of the separation, but I have no fear or dread of death. My only desire is to die and go to my blessed Saviour and be forever with Him and my loved ones who are there."

In a few weeks the summons came, and she met the foe of death with Christian fortitude, and welcomed him as a kind friend. And with many tears for, and blessings on, surviving loved ones, she bade adieu to all of earth's joys and sorrows, and sweetly fell asleep in Jesus.

SWEET-BRIER.

BY LUCY LARCOM.

Rose, with a fragrance diffused,
Of crushed gums and spicery bruised,
Through petal and stem and leaf,—
Thou art as the presence of one
Through deep glens of Paradise gone,
Far beyond reach of my grief.

Thy soft lamp illumines the dell;
The gray granite smiles in thy spell,
Pink torch of the brown pasture's gloom.
Thy lithe boughs, that gracefully sway,
The delicate colors, to-day
Restore me her womanly bloom.

Wild buds awoke under her hand;
Rare blossoms would rise and expand
In the heaven of her eyes' blessed shine;
And her heart and her being were flowers
That lit up the desolate hours,
And, storm beaten, lovelier grew.

Spirit, that maidest earth sweet,
Across barren hillsides my feet
Go seeking thee, missing thee still;
Yet thy love in my life doth remain
A perfume that pierces to pain,—
A memory, a pathos, a thrill.

If a blessing from heaven could lean,
A rose-bush, a glory of green,
Trailing over the bleak wall of death,
I think it would bring back to me
A waft of fresh woodlands, and thee,—
Sweet-Brier, her soul in thy breath!

—Sunday Afternoon.

The Irish Catholic Church.

A wonderful work, and one evidently inspired by and under the control of Him who doeth all things well, is in progress at the building of the University of New York, Washington square. Here the Rev. Father McNamara, who some time since left the Church of Rome, holds two services each Sunday, during the afternoon and evening, and expounds the Scriptures to a large, attentive and distinctively Irish congregation. The wish of the reverend gentleman is to build up again the faith held so long by the Irish Catholic Church, and which was exerted in its native purity after the conversion of the people of the Green Isle by St. Patrick and his fellow-missionaries. It is well known that the Irish Church did much to spread the true religion abroad, and her sons were to be found as missionaries carrying the truths of the Christian religion to all parts of the known world, until their success awoke the jealousy of the Roman Catholic Church, which thereupon flooded Ireland with its priests, and consequently depriving the people of their true and simple faith—replaced it with that peculiar form of man-worship and Mariolatry, which has since crushed the Irish and kept them debased and uneducated, as no other English-speaking people are at the present day.

Father McNamara and his flock do not style themselves Protestants; far from it, they glory in the name of Irish Catholics; but all their hopes and inspirations are based on, and their articles of belief drawn from, that book of books, the Bible. They protest against the errors of the Church of Rome, but do not wish to be known as Protestants, fearing—and justly too—that the name would deter many from joining their young church. None can attend the services without being struck with the wierd and beautiful tunes which are sung, and where can more beautiful melodies be found than in the native airs of Ireland? These give a distinctively Irish tone to the meetings, and many a person, attracted by the old familiar tunes, such as "The Harp that Once Through Tara's Halls," or the "Exile of Erin," has been induced to remain during the service, and has heard such truths as could never have reached him otherwise.

The reverend gentleman spoke, on Sunday, of the bitterness which he once felt against the hierarchy of the Italian Church, which had done its best to crush him and the small flock who had come out with him from Rome; but he said that then he had ceased to be a Roman and had not yet become a Christian. Since that great change had been effected, and he had given his soul to God, the feeling of bitterness had been replaced by one of pity. He had been accused of madness, and so had the members of his congregation; but there was method in their madness, and before long there would be many more like them. He never spoke unkindly of the priests, for he was one of themselves; but he inveighed in severe terms against the higher orders of the church, who ground the very individuality out of the poor priests. Was it any wonder that so many of them became miserable drunkards? he knew of fifty such in the city of New York to-day. If a man attempted to think for himself he was crushed at once, and when turned out what could he do? His brother priests dare not aid him, and those of the Irish people who are yet enslaved avoid him as if he were an emissary of the devil. Few of the priests even know their own religion, and, as for the people, their's is supplied to them by machinery. In return for their hard-earned money. Everything, he said, was the fear of hell, and not the hope of heaven; for no matter how good you might be, your only hope was purgatory, from which place you could buy yourself into heaven if you were rich enough. The Cathedral was spoken of, and a scathing rebuke administered to Cardinal McCloskey for having turned it into a dram-shop. He dealt out first whisky and then holy water, said the ex-priest, and his audience seemed amused at the queer companionship of the two. Father McNamara said if permission could be had from the police authorities he would preach to his fellow-countrymen in the public squares and parks, and teach them from the Word of God, so that they should abandon their idols and return to the true faith of their fathers. The experience of several of both sexes was given, and there was no mistaking the genuine ring of their testimony rendered in the rich brogue of the "Gem of the Sea." One brother remarked that Ireland would be a very different country were the Bible the text-book of its people.

None can watch this movement without feeling that the reverend gentleman is carrying on a good work, and that he is earnest in his attempt to lead his flock in the right way. The effort deserves encouragement, and the good will of all classes; but so far many difficulties and discouragements have been encountered. It will serve as the rallying point to which priests wishing to leave the Church of Rome—and there are many such—can go for assistance and moral support. We trust this congregation will grow in strength and usefulness, and that the reverend pastor may never be obliged to announce again as he did on Sunday, that the celebration of the communion was postponed, because they had not the requisite plate, and could not buy the wine needed.—New York Weekly Witness, August 8.

Power of Music

Many of us, most of us, have aspirations and emotions for the expression of which in words it is as if he were voiceless and dumb, but which find full and ready expression in music; even though, I have sometimes thought, the words which we freight with them might be mere jargon. Under the right circumstances, and given only a touch, a tone, a sudden remembrance, anything to unlock the emotions, and the song goes forth, telling for every individual singer a different story. Perhaps this is most noticeable in the midst of sympathetic numbers, as in the crowds who need to meet together and sing out all their secret feelings in the strange, unreal light of the Chicago Tabernacle. I shall never forget a face which I saw there one stormy winter afternoon; one which touched me more than any other of the many expressive faces which I used to see there full of emotion day after day. It was only an every-day face, that of a worn old woman dressed in deep mourning; and, with family and friendly groups on every side of her, seeming so alone in her loneliness and old age. Was there anything in the words of the song in the singing of which she joined with her tremulous tones, which could fully express the emotion that filled face and voice. The song was only one of the most commonplace of the many changes rung on the dear old themes, yet the words came to my ear freighted with her loneliness and yearning until I longed to place gently my own in her poor, tired, empty hands, if simply mine could in any measure fill their emptiness; to say a word which might brighten the poor, withered old face, so utterly pathetic in its far-off look of longing. Such a strangely far-away look it was, as if the yearning eyes had sent their gaze over the ocean in search of the lost ones, to where many their graves were made in the Old Country," and failing to find them there had gone straight on into the heavenly land.

Did she find them? Who knows? But the song whose musical strains gave voice that day to her longing for the dear, dead faces, will always be to her, in very truth a "sacred song." To one heart, at least, a cool, critical analysis of its composition would be sacrilege. To one or another of us perhaps this would be true in regard to every one of the familiar old songs. It is too late; we could not criticise them if we would. Love is blind, and we love them every one!—Sunday Afternoon.

Religious Intelligence.

—The London Daily Graphic says of the American missionaries in Turkey: These missionaries, Protestants and Evangelists to a man, have labored in Turkey without let or hindrance for above forty years; they have stations, colleges and schools all over Asia Minor, as well as European Turkey. They have been peaceful, industrious and loyal; no friends to political intrigue against the Sultan, and, therefore, no tools of Russia, not patronized by the Czar under false pretences, and therefore not suspected by the Porte. They have, however, done a large amount of good in an unobtrusive way, as centers of civilizing and refining agencies which worked for the material as well as moral benefit of the people. Their labors throw light on the prospects of success for those reforms in Asia which English influence is bent upon accomplishing.

—The Missionary Herald for July, showing how missions promote commerce says: "A few years ago no artificial light was used in Syria save that afforded by the little wick floating in a cup of olive oil. The people then seemed to have little need for lamps, but now that schools have been multiplied, and the people have learned to read, they desire to use their evenings for study. The result has been, according to Dr. H. H. Jessup, that there has been a great demand for oil for illuminating purposes, so that there is not a village or nook about Mt. Lebanon in which empty boxes, marked 'astral oil,' may not be seen. The first shipment of American oil to Syria was made by a Boston merchant in 1860, and last year the imports at Beirut alone amounted to 1,500,000 gallons. In more senses than one is America giving light to Syria.

PROTESTANTISM IN KANSAS.—Protestant Christianity seems to have found most congenial soil in Kansas. To have built on an average one new church every week is no mean record for a State with a population of only 705,497. There has been in two years a gain of 15,203 church members, and there is now a total of 559 churches and 137,718 members. There are divided among the denominations as follows: Baptists, 69 churches, 15,903 members; Congregationalists, 59 churches, 5,520 members; Lutherans, 33 churches, 4,501 members; Episcopalians, 22 churches, 1,759 members; Methodists, 152 churches, 33,797 members; Presbyterians, 90 churches, 7,961 members; United Presbyterians, 15 churches, 1,181 members.

—Rev. A. D. Vail, says the Northern Christian Advocate, writes from Rome, June 27th: "I have been delighted with the mission work here, and the character of the institute that Dr. Vernon has at work. I doubt if there is another the world that has so many first-class men at work. I can hardly believe what I see. I attended the church last Sunday and heard a sermon by Dr. De La Ville, and expect to hear Dr. Lanna next Sunday. I went to the prayer meeting this evening, and enjoyed it very much. I made an address which Dr. Vernon translated into Italian. I am greatly impressed with the grand ability and piety of Dr. Lanna. We expect to leave here on Monday for Florence, and shall spend July in Switzerland and Germany, and August in England, reaching New York in September."

—The four Presbyterian Churches of Canada, now happily united into one organization, is a strong and efficient body. The Presbyterian Church has a population of about 600,000, as shown by the last census. According to this showing it is numerically the strongest of the evangelical denominations. There are five theological schools situated in five cities of Quebec, Montreal, Halifax and Toronto. Last year a special effort was made to increase the Foreign Mission Fund, and it rose from $15,000 to $21,170 71. For Home Missions the report showed that the receipts were $20 65, and the expenditures $19 739, leaving an adverse balance of $11 01.

—The Baptist Weekly remarks upon the strange inconsistency of thinking use of to carry on its work in Spain, where the preaching or circulating the Bible is so fiercely resisted by the priests, and relates the following: "A company of Christian merchants who were converted in England are now visiting Spain, besides entertaining people with their wonderful feats, are acting as colporteurs, supplying the people with Bibles and religious reading, and having their own regular Bible readings on the Sabbath."

—The missionaries of the American Board in Japan have opened a new station in Okayama, a city of 30,000 inhabitants, about a hundred miles from Kobe. The work in Japan was begun in Kobe, between six and seven years ago, there being present on the occasion but one native. At the meeting in Okayama seventy-five natives were in attendance. Services of a private nature had been held in Okayama for some months. Some of the officials were present at the first public meeting, and thus evinced their good-will.

—The General Synod of the Moravian Church met at Heernhut, Germany, May 26, after an intrival of about eleven years. Fifty-three members were present, of whom eleven were from America, including two bishops. Bishop Edmund de Schweinitz, of America, was chosen president of the Synod." We are glad to see this honor conferred upon our American brethren. The Bishop is a brother-in-law of our brothers, F. J. and C. H. Boggs.

Rev. Dr. Thoburn, of Calcutta, sends both glad and sad news, May 22: "I am in good health, and hopeful. We have baptized a dozen natives since Conference and are building our first village chapel. Times are hard. India is going through an ordeal of terrible suffering. Famine or famine war, a depreciated currency and depressed commerce have paralyzed every interest.

—In Amsterdam, the Holland Church has 10 churches and 30,000 members; the French Reformed Church, two churches and 2,354 members; English Reformed Church, one church; the Armenians, one church and 834 members; the Roman Church, 19 churches and 65,000 members; and besides seven other churches distributed among Mennonites and other denominations, and nine Jewish synagogues, with 6,000 members.

—An extensive revival is in progress in Germany and promises to be fruitful of good results to the churches. The movement extends along the entire Rhine Valley, and at Dusseldrop alone 200 conversions are reported. A Conference has been organized on the English plan and was to be held in that city on June 5-6. Prof. Christlieb has taken great interest in the work, and a little tract written by him and entitled, "The Gospel of Marah" has had a wide circulation and done much good.

—The committee appointed by the United Presbyterian Synod of Scotland to consider the case of the Rev. Dr. Macrae, in the matter of his teachings concerning the future state of the wicked, have adopted a report denying Mr. Macrae the latitude of opinion claimed by him as inconsistent with the standards of the church, and requiring his separation from the people under his charge. Mr. Macrae has filed an appeal to the Synod, which will meet July 22, to make a final disposition of the case.

—In a recent speech on the Education Bill, M. Jules Ferry gave some interesting facts about the growth of Jesuitism in France. The Jesuits are prohibited by law from having any organizations or holding any property in that country. They exist only by tolerance, yet they have now a membership of 1,509, and twenty-seven schools, with 9,000 pupils. By their competition the private secular schools are constantly losing ground.

—The Young Men's Christian Association of St. Louis are doing more evangelistic work this summer than during any previous year. Instead of discontinuing their services as do so many of our churches, the hot weather seems to increase the ardor of these young men. They are now holding seven out-door gospel meetings every Sabbath in different parts of the city, besides their work at the Four Courts, Hospital, Work-house, etc.

—Mr. Spurgeon, at the annual supper of the students of his Pastors' College, said that he intended to arrange for training fifty additional students, and that he had confidence in a Divine Providence supplying him with the funds necessary to do so. The next morning he received by post a letter from a lady in Scotland inclosing $2,000 for the college and an additional $2,000 for the Stockwell Orphanage.

—Persecutions of Protestants still continue in Spain. Two Protestant missionaries in Valencia, visiting Morgadores, recently, were set upon by a mob headed by three priests, and almost stoned to death, escaping, with severe wounds, in a carriage. Other missionaries have been warned off at other places under threats.

—Another open door.—Religious liberty in Russia.—A dispatch from St. Petersburg to the London Daily News reports that dissenters from the orthodox church, hitherto unrecognized by the State, are to have entire liberty of worship. This affects 12,000,000 Russian subjects.

—The American Board has decided to use $25,000 of the Otis legacy of nearly a million of dollars to establish a mission in Central Africa in the Nyanza region. Mr. Arthington, of Leeds, gives the Board $15,000 toward the mission.

—Intelligence has reached England of the death, by poisoning, of a number of the native Christians of Savage Island, who had gone as missionaries to New Guinea. A hostile feeling towards foreigners seems to exist all along the south coast of New Guinea.

—A meeting, presided over by Dean Stanley, was recently held in the Jerusalem Chamber, Westminster, for the purpose of securing a memorial in some form to commemorate the character and work of William Tyndale, the earliest English translator of the Bible.

—In Hungary the government seems determined to provoke a conflict with the Protestant Church. It has decided to place the Protestant school under the exclusive control of the State, the aim being to destroy the Lutheran elements in the numerous German schools.

—There is no lack of candidates for foreign missionary appointments in the Protestant Episcopal Church. The Foreign Committee of the Board of Missions had at the beginning of the present year fourteen applications they could not accept because of lack of funds.

—The Lutherans have, in the States west of Ohio, twenty-seven synods, 1,702 ministers, 3,001 churches and 350,150 communicants. Of the synods, nine are Scandinavian, eight German and ten English.

Dr. Cumming, it is stated, has officially retired from the pastorate of the church at Crown-court, Drury-lane. His congregation are now endeavoring to raise a fund of $25,000 in order to purchase him an annuity.

—The Synod of the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland, in reply to an invitation of the Established Church in respect to union, stated that union was not possible while State control was recognized.

—At Tookh, an Armenian priest threatened to excommunicate some of his parishioners, if they did not withdraw their children from Protestant schools; whereupon they became Protestants.

—A religious movement of considerable extent is in progress among the Malays about Cape Town, Africa, and an effort is being made to establish a special mission for them.

—There have been 3,000 mission churches established throughout the world by the various foreign missionary societies.

A CHEERFUL SPIRIT.

BY MRS. BRADLEY.

Little Miss Madge pouts to-day;
She will not study or read or play;
And all because of the "horrid weather,"
She hasn't a pleasant word to say.

There she sits with a fretful frown,
Puckering up her eyebrows brown,
While one by one, as light as a feather,
Little white snow-flakes flutter down.

Thinking, "It's just too mean, you know!—
Horrible, hateful, ugly snow!
Couldn't it stay away, I wonder?
Fie! no; it must always happen so!

"If ever I want to do a thing,
Summer or winter, fall or spring,
It's sure to snow, or to rain and thunder,
Just for the sake of hindering."

Poor little maid with the fretful eyes,
It seems to me that your trouble lies
All in the lack of a cheerful spirit,
Not in the clouds that darken the skies.

Foul or fair as the weather may be,
It comes from heaven to you and me;
And they are the happiest children, hear it,
Who'll be what comes to them patiently.

From A Little Friend.

TALLASSEE, ALA., July 2, 1879.

DEAR MR. EDITOR:—We have a fine Sabbath-school here. My papa is superintendent. We have some good prayer meetings, and our church seems to be in a prosperous condition. Mr. J. R. Peavy is our pastor this year again, and we think him an excellent preacher. I have one little brother that is not quite large enough to go to Sabbath-school. Little Brother Charlie is a sweet little boy. I will send you in this letter forty cents for the China mission. It is a small contribution, but I hope it will do some good for the advancement of the gospel of our Saviour in the heathen lands.

ROBERT LACKEY.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—Our friend, Robert, has done a good thing in remembering the Chinese mission. We will turn the money over to the mission.

"For Time is the Power."

"I can't do it—it's quite impossible. I've tried five times, and I can't get it right," and Ben. dashed his book and slate away in despair.

Ben. was a most ambitious boy; he wanted to be "head" in the school; for had not the minister already spoken about him, and said such a boy ought to have a chance at college? But Ben. worked at great disadvantage. His mother, though a good Christian woman and a lady in the best sense of the word, had had very few advantages when a girl, and so could not help Ben; and the father, who might have done so, had died, leaving his widow with three little children to support by her needle.

Mrs Hartley gave a little sigh at her boy's perplexity, but only said quietly, "Then you don't believe in the Lord's prayer."

"The Lord's prayer, mother! Why, there's nothing there to help me with this example."

"O yes; there is help for every trouble in life in the Lord's prayer, if we only know how to get at it. I'm afraid you don't know that prayer."

Ben. flushed. If it had been anybody else that had said that he would have been really vexed, but mother was different. Ben. always tried to be sure he quite understood her, for he never for one instant forgot why her hands were never idle.

"Now, mother, you don't mean that. I've said that prayer ever since I was a baby. I couldn't go to bed or leave my room in the morning without saying it. I know I sometimes don't think enough of what I'm saying, but you know, mother, I do try to mean it. I—" But Ben. stopped, his voice half choked. The mother saw that her boy had misunderstood her, and answered quickly:

"I never doubt, Ben., boy, that you are trying and praying; but I was trying a long time before I knew what the last part of the Lord's prayer really meant. I'm no minister or scholar, but I'll try and tell it to you. You know we ask God for bread, to be kept from evil and to be forgiven, and then we say, 'for thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory.' It's God's power we rely on, not our own; and it often helps me, Ben, when I have a difficult new pattern to fit, I say, 'for thine is the power—this is my duty, Heavenly Father, give me thy power,' and he does, Ben., he does."

Ben. sat silent. It seemed almost too familiar a prayer. And yet, that time when he had to stay from school because he had no clothes, he had asked God, and the minister's wife had brought him a suit the very next day.

"But a boy's sums, mother," he said.

"I think that sum is just as much to you as many a grander sounding thing to some one else. You say, if only you get that right you'll be perfect for the month. Now, I care a great deal about that, but I'm quite sure your Heavenly Father loves you more than I do. I would help you so gladly, Ben., if I could, but he can help you; His is the power—ask Him."

There was another silence, and then Mrs. Hartley said:

"Now, Ben., I want you to run to the store for some sewing silk for me. The air will do you good. I believe, my son, that if you ask, you can do that sum when you come home."

Ben. started at once; his mother's slightest wish was law to him. He ran along, enjoying the rest from study and the cool, fresh air. The sewing-silk was bought, and Ben. started home, when he caught sight of Phil. Estile across the street. Ben. gave the whistle boys so delight in, and Phil. looked back and joined him.

"Done your lessons?"

"All but my sums."

"Did you try that fifteenth example?"

"Yes."

"Got it right?"

"No, not yet, but I will."

Phil. gave a provoking little laugh: "You will? I guess not. I've done it, but I never could have found it out alone. I had help."

Ben's heart fairly ached with envy for a moment. It was always so; Phil. had his Uncle George, and other boys had big brothers or fathers to help them, only he was left quite alone. But just then he remembered his mother's words, "It's God power we rely on, not our own." "I'll get help, too," he said to himself.

The boys chatted on, played leap-frog and raced each other; but even as he raced and romped Ben. felt changed. He had begun to believe in his Heavenly Father as never before, and was wonderfully happy.

After giving the silk to his mother, he picked up his slate and book and went up to his own little room. Kneeling by the bed he repeated the Lord's prayer, stopping at "thine is the kingdom," and saying with all his heart, "And thine is the power, Heavenly Father; I want power to unders and this; there is no one to help me; please give me power."

Ben. waited a moment, and then, still on his knees, he took his slate and tried again. Do you ask me, did he succeed? "If any man lack wisdom let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not. Ben. had asked, and God answered. After a little earnest thought he saw what rule he had neglected, and worked the example correctly. The next day he was "head," for he was the only boy who had done his sums without being helped.

"Yet it was helped, mother," he said, "and I shall never forget the last part of the Lord's prayer after this."—Sunday-School Times.

WHO WINS?—Boys, this is a question of great importance. Who will succeed in life? The boy or the man who spends his evenings away from home attending lectures, club rooms, theaters, billiard halls, playing chess, checkers or cards; smoking tobacco or gambling? Or the one who is entirely free from all that we have here named, whose determination and tendencies are in the direction of labor, industry, sobriety, self-culture in the sciences and the literature of the past and the present, of right, the truth and of God? We have in mind a most worthy gentleman of Chicago, who stands high in business circles, because, when but a boy on the streets of Chicago, he chose the right and maintained it. At eleven his father died, leaving a wife and four children. From that time, for seven years that boy sold papers and blacked boots; all the while supporting the family out of his profits. At eighteen he commenced business for himself as a merchant, and to-day is highly respected by his very many friends and acquaintances, and is doing a flourishing business.

Who wins? The boy or man of bad habits? No! The boy or man who can swear, cheat, lie or steal, without being found out? No! But he wins who is not ashamed to pray to God in the hour of temptation for help—for strength more than human when adversity overwhelms. He who reads God's word and trusts it; who is not governed by the motive—is it expedient, but is it right? He wins.—Baxter.

MISS WHARTON'S PIE.—Miss Margaret Wharton was a lady of good family and large fortune. She was one of the Whartons of Skelton Castle, England, and possessed £1,000, one half of which she gave to a nephew. She was well known in Scarborough, where she used to send out for "a penny worth of cream" and a "penny worth of tea-leaves," always paying her penny down. From this little peculiarity she became known as Peg Penny with the Cream. On one occasion, while in Scarborough, she had a mince pie made; it was very large, as it was for herself, some visitors and the servants. She ordered her footman to take it to the bake-house. He refused, saying it was beneath his dignity to be seen dressed up with ribbons and tags, carrying a meat pie. Mistress Peg then desired the coachman to take it; but he also declined. "Bring out the carriage!" was the command. The carriage was got ready; the coachman donned his powdered wig and mounted the box; the footman ascended behind; and Mistress Margaret Wharton, sitting in state in the carriage, bore the meat pie on her lap. "Drive to the bake-house," was her command. In an hour or two, the same slabs being observed, the pie was brought back. "Now," said she to the coachman, "you have kept your place which is to drive; and you," turning to the footman, "have kept yours, which is to wait; and now we will all have some of the pie."—Chamber's Journal.

JAPANESE SHOES.—One of the most striking sights that takes the attention of the traveler in Japan is that of the wooden sandals worn by the thirty-five millions of people. These sandals have a separate compartment for the great toe, and make a clacking noise on the street.

Straw slippers are also worn, and a traveler, setting out on a journey, will strap a supply of them on his back, that he may put on a new pair when the old is worn out. They cost but a cent and a half a pair. They are rights and lefts and leave the foot free to the air. We never see those deformities of the feet in Japan which are so frequent in this country.

They are never worn in the house, being left outside the door; passing down a street, you see large rows of them at the doors, old and new, large and small. It is surprising to see how rapidly the Japs step out of them, and pick them up again with their feet, without stopping, when leaving the house.

The Great Necessity.

There is no difference of opinion among Methodists as to the matter of holiness itself. There are differences as to the manner of its attainment, and different ways of apprehending it in its relations to justification and regeneration. All, however, are agreed that purity of heart must be obtained, that men must be born of the Spirit, that without holiness none shall see the Lord. Our Presbyterian brethren, and some others, believe holiness to be a necessity, and that the work is not perfected until death.

With Methodists complete cleansing from sin is regarded as a present blessing to be had and enjoyed now. A full salvation is the gospel as we preach it. If any one after conversion becomes conscious of sin, in temper, thought or life, that one needs the blood of cleansing, and the work of the sanctifying Spirit. The promise to such an one is: "If we confess our sins He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." It is needful for him to determine whether there was sin left in him after conversion, or whether he has relapsed into sin. If consciously a sinner, he needs forgiveness and the cleansing from all unrighteousness. And this blessing is for him. Without any particular theory or philosophy on the subject, the one indispensable thing with him is that he must get rid of his sins and have a clean heart. For this there is but one way laid down in the Bible. Whether he be a backslider, or self deceived as to his conversion, or whether the sin in him be a residue which the new birth did not take out, repentance and faith in Christ are the conditions. He must believe unto righteousness if he ever become righteous at all, and he must be cleansed by the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost. Christ is mighty to save, and He is able to save to the uttermost. In whatever way we may apprehend the matter, it is clear that we must be holy, and that sin must be taken away by the blood of Christ. If the sin of partial consecration lie upon the conscience, if lack of love condemn, if duties omitted rise up to trouble our peace, there is need of pardon and a deeper work of the Spirit.

There is here a work of justification and also of sanctification. The sanctifying side, however, is not generally enough insisted on. The grounds and privilege of pardon are often expounded, while the inward cleansing is left in obscurity. It is this side or aspect of experience that we think needs to be more explained and emphasized. Our preachers all preach sanctification and holiness; but do they sufficiently insist that believers shall be holy, that they cleanse themselves "from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God?" Do they search out and expose the sin that lurks in the heart, and invite and require us to come up to the standard of inward purity? Every gospel sermon and every religious meeting ought to keep this end in view. If holiness be not the object, then there is a perversion of the means of grace. The central idea of the gospel is a clean heart, and none who pretend to believe the gospel should rest until they have it. This is the only standard or type of religion that can be acceptable to God or saving to man. The pure in heart are the blessed ones, and only they. Whether this be regeneration or something more, conversion or a second blessing, the thing itself must be realized in every true Christian experience. If any one is conscious of living in sin, inward or outward, if his outcry is, "O wretched man that I am!" it reminds for him to seek deliverance, until he can "thank God through Jesus Christ."

There are doubtless thousands of converted people who have not clean hearts. How this is we may not know, but their course is plain; they are not saved from sin, and they must be. Instead of presenting holiness as the highest Christian life, we would rather insist that it is the true every-day Christian life, the religion of the gospel, and the only attitude of safety for any soul. Holiness is the true gospel message, and perfectly adapted to every one of people. It is the message for sinners, for all sinners, in the church and out. There is but one great necessity—"holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord." Less than this will avail nothing for anybody; more than this cannot be required. The fault among us, if fault there be, is that we do not always and everywhere lift up the banner of holiness, and proclaim it to all as the present and necessary state of a genuine Christian experience.

Progress and growth there are, doubtless, in the cleansed and purified heart, and an endless development in all the positive elements of holiness. Without this growth the cleansed heart will fall back into sin, and the first works must be done over. By the neglect of this law of the spiritual life many truly converted people have lost ground and fallen into condemnation. However this may be, we must drive straight at the point, and proclaim holiness as the heritage of all God's people, not only a privilege, but a necessity for all.

The Old Anxiety.

The anxiety of the farmer deepens as the time of harvest approaches. Things have gone well so far, but, if a back set comes now, all the past comes to naught. The favorable season, the vigorous growth, and the absence of untoward conditions, are no better than if an early blight had withered the first shoots, when calamity comes at the end. Is it not really worse? Consider the labor and money expended upon the crop, and the anticipations excited. The outlay is lost, and the heart is made sick by hope deferred. There is anxiety all along, from the time of the first furrow until the crop is gathered and marketed, but the period where this anxiety is sharpest is just when the toil of the year seems about to be crowned with an abundant reward. A storm, the worm, an early freeze may come and ruin all. Our country friends have their cares, and at this time their carefulness has reached its culmination. Thus far the promise is good, perhaps, but who can tell what may happen later on to dash all their hopes? Sure enough nobody can, and this is the case with us all.

City folk are apt to think that the only life exempt from worry is that of the farmer. But in truth, he is just where the root and germ of all temporal prosperity are under his eye. Even the king is served by the field, and the great city depends upon the products of the soil. Its laborers, mechanics, clerks, merchants, doctors, lawyers and preachers all look to the harvest. A universal failure in the crops would stop the wheels of commerce, and want and misery would quickly invade every home. The general concern is seen in the costly arrangements by which the condition of every kind of agriculture is daily telegraphed over the world, and by which the walls of our Cotton Exchanges are covered with maps which indicate daily and almost hourly the areas of rain, of sunshine, and the prospects of every locality. The business of the merchant, the prices of commodities, the rate of wages, the bread of the laborer, and the profits of steamboats and ships, are all affected by the state of the husbandman's field.

Little recks he about the great outside world, always eagerly seeking to know the acreage and the condition of his corn, wheat, cotton and sugar, which he is so carefully nursing. He, he thinking of his own bread, the support of his family, the money to may realize. He watches the clouds, he studies the almanac, notes the phases of the moon, and weighs the probable effect of every change in the weather. He has noted every stage in the development of the plant, for his all is at stake. At which end of the line is the greater anxiety it would be difficult to decide, whether with the planter in Alabama or the manufacturer in Manchester, with the wheat-grower in Illinois, or those at home and abroad, by whom the flour is consumed.

Owing to the inventions of modern science, the exact present state of agriculture is ascertainable day by day. Fifty years ago it took time to hear from distant sections, but now the grace of patient waiting is not required. We know how things are in the remotest part of the world. A feverish excitement is kept up everywhere, and, instead of allaying care, the telegraph only seems to keep it up to its highest pitch all the time. And generally unnecessary apprehensions are excited. The indications are unfavorable to-day, but in the end the crop turns out well. It is little else than exasperating to read these daily reports, how the cotton is shedding here, or the worm has made its appearance there, how the rains have interfered with the wheat harvest in one section, and how the drouth has cut it short in another.

And all this carefulness is about that which comes from the soil, from the hand of God, from the dispensations of a wise and merciful Providence. Care, industry and accurate information are well, but is there no deliverance from this ceaseless worry about things which God alone controls? For those reckless speculators who are in reality gambling upon the Divine Providence there may well be a fearful looking for, but Christian people, whether in the field or the market place, ought to find rest and repose of soul in Him who, as a faithful Creator, careth for them. Surely, when vigilant industry has done what it can, anxious thought can do nothing more.

Birmingham, England.

Birmingham has been called the "Toy-Shop of Europe." It stands near the center of England, and is, therefore, a grand thoroughfare for this populous nation and for strangers, to which its fine branching roads in every direction, and its canals, greatly contribute, and to all of which the additional advantage of railroads, extending to every part of the country, are added. To-day the town contains some 350,000 inhabitants, who carry on almost every kind of hardware manufacture. Sham and real jewelry, elegant pieces of electro-plate, rifles for the sportsman and the soldier, gods for India, dolls' eyes for children all over the world are among their products. Tons of iron are made into steel pens; and many a machine will head 50,000 pins an hour. In this town the one hundred and thirty-sixth annual session of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference commenced its sittings at half-past nine yesterday morning, July 22, in the large chapel, St. Martin's street.

Long before the appointed time for opening ministers, converging from all points, were pouring into the chapel, and greeting old friends and associates. Some 800 ministers were present, including all ages, from the probationer attending his first Conference, to venerable men boasting half a century of service.

The chair was occupied by the retiring president, Dr. J. H. Rigg, who gave out the hymn.

"Lo! God is here! Let us adore
And own how dreadful is this place," was sung. The Rev. M. C. Osborn read the one hundred and third Psalm, and the Revs. Dr. James and Charles Garrett led the assembly in prayer.

The roll of the Legal Hundred was called, and dispensations were granted to a few of the members unable to be present. It was also resolved to send letters of condolence to the Rev. Dr. Jobson and Samuel Coley.

The secretary then announced that no vacancy had occurred in the Legal Hundred through death during the year—a matter of such unusual occurrence as to be almost unprecedented.

The Conference then proceeded to the election of president. With as little delay as possible the votes were counted, with the following results: M. C. Osborn, 3, R. Roberts, 8, Dr. Osborn, 36, E. E. Jenkins, 75, B. Gregory, 301. The announcement was followed by loud cheers, and was at once legally confirmed by the votes of the Legal Hundred. The Conference then elected a secretary, with the following result: M. C. Osborn, 359.

The Rev. Dr. Rigg, formally vacated the chair to the newly-appointed president. As the Rev. Benjamin Gregory moved to take his seat the Conference continued to stand until desired by the president to sit down. Dr. Rigg gave his successor a cordial welcome to the presidency. With pleasurable emotions he remembered that his friendship with his newly-elected friend had commenced more than forty years ago, and had been continued unbroken to this hour.

Few, if any, had served Methodism more faithfully, diligently, ably, and with more entire consecration, than B. Gregory. Wisdom, combined with self-forgetting modesty, had been characteristic of his valuable ministry. He was well aware that he shrank from the great responsibility that day conferred upon him, but God would strengthen him physically and in the "inner man," as He had strengthened others. Two great sources of strength were open to him—the blessing of God in answer to prayer, and the wonderful, tender, loyal, faithful respect and reverence ever yielded to the president by the preachers and people of this great connection. He prayed that the divine favor might rest upon him.

In conclusion, he begged to hand over to him the usual insignia of office—John Wesley's miniature pocket Bible, and the connectional seal bearing his effigy, with the Methodist motto: "What hath God wrought"—believing that they were never placed in worthier hands than those of Benjamin Gregory.

The president, in reply, intimated that the present was the most solemn day of his life. He had deprecated and dreaded that position, but he accepted it as the will of God.

Three great surprises had awaited him in the course of his ministry, viz.: His election into the Legal Hundred, his appointment as connectional editor, and now, the crowning surprise, his election as president. If he possessed any mental power he owed it to a great extent to hereditary influence. He recalled the memories of his early life, and of a former Birmingham Conference, at which he was ordained to the work of the ministry. Dr. Bunting was then president, and among those who had that day stood at his side to be ordained were Luke H. Wiseman, George T. Perks and George C. Harvard, all of whom had passed away. He stood there as a representative not of any particular school of thought, but of Wesleyan Methodism in its entirety. If his physique admitted thereof, he should be a revivalist; if his experiences were commensurate with his convictions, he should be the saintliest man on earth. For their future position he had the most cheering hope. One thing only troubled him, namely: The declining interest in church fellowship; and something must be done to resuscitate it. He rejoiced in the perfect harmony which existed among themselves. Nearly all the disruptions of Methodism had arisen from dissensions in the Conference; now all was peace. In conclusion, he thanked them for the honor they had conferred upon him, and prayed for grace to be faithful.

A vote of thanks was given to Rev. Dr. Rigg for the very able and faithful discharge of his duties during his presidential year, and for carrying so far to a successful issue the Wesleyan Thanksgiving Fund, and of which the total amount promised to date is £174 178 2s. 11d.

I shall have something to say about this fund hereafter. You may depend upon it, Methodism is a power now in the world. After thanking the secretaries, and appointing letter writers, and fixing the place for the next Conference, which is to be at London, the Conference adjourned to meet at six o'clock P. M. Yours truly,

R. S. TUPPETT.

Utah.

SALT LAKE CITY AND THE MORMONS.

On the south of our western bound course, 36 miles by a pleasant railroad, we come to Salt Lake City, in many respects a city of wonders.

We arrived there by night, and went to the Walker Hotel, well kept. In the morning we drove about the city and suburbs. The wonderful tabernacle first attracted attention. They say it accommodates 13,000 people. Its average attendance is about 3,000. The town numbers about 20,000 inhabitants. There are possibly 125,000 adherents to Mormonism in Utah. In many respects this tabernacle is one of the most wonderful buildings in the world. Brigham Young conceived and executed the plan. Its acoustics are simply perfect. The dimensions of the auditorium are 150 feet by 250 feet. It is a whisper gallery. Drop a pin on the prophet's platform, and you hear it at the remotest part of the large room. From the floor to the egg-shaped dome, unsustained by pillars or visible structure, is 70 feet. It has 20 doors, through which, it is claimed, 12,000 people can pass in a minute and a half. Three pulpits in a descending order suggest the different priestly orders. The chief of the apostles occupies the topmost stand. I stood in it, and looked at the empty seats. Here Brigham Young dispensed his wisdom and commands. The organ is a wonder. It is worked by four blowers. It stands 58 feet high. One of the pipes measures 30 feet in length. Brigham crawled through one of them, which will give some idea of its circumference, as he was no diminutive gentleman.

I expected to see more poverty among them. Some of their residences are almost palatial. Brigham Young was reported as worth millions, although it is said of some of his faded wives that to support themselves they were compelled to take in washing. Brigham had the happy faculty of preserving peace and harmony among his numerous wives, almost numberless, but I enjoyed the honor of being housed in the same residence and fed at the same table. At one time, in addition to the other members of his immense household, one of his daughters says she remembers when 16 babies sat around their father's board. The children of the first wife may call their father by that name, but the offspring of subsequent marriage must say brother to their own father. They bear no love for the dead. Their cemeteries are neglected. In fact, this is a modern Sodom. Unbridled lust, under the sanction of religious liberty, has completely demoralized men and women, girls and boys. There is a boldness about their pretty maidens that savors of the impure morals of the people. The men are often shrewd and money-making, but there is a brutishness, the result of their sin, on their faces which is unmistakable in their identification. It is a system of ecclesiastical extortion. One-tenth of all the earnings of poor, industrious farmers or merchants must go into the coffers of the church. Brigham Young, in his day, managed that fund, and it is well understood that he actually defrauded the church out of millions of dollars. Since his death his sons, in order to quiet voices of dissatisfaction and distrust in his financial administration, paid over to the church treasury $750,000. Where did Brigham make all the money which paid for his many harems, if he did not secure it by dishonest methods? He was a terror to the territory. When he died Mormonism lost its back bone.

It is astonishing how the women cling to and support this vile practice of polygamy. When Wells was released from a 48 hours' imprisonment for contempt of court (he has only eight wives) there was a great demonstration on the streets, women and children by thousands, with flying banners, with the inscription: "We believe in polygamy." Polygamy, we often hear, is on the wane. There are various opinions expressed by intelligent persons. But the general belief is that it is not decreasing, but rather becoming stronger, and offering greater resistance every year. The Mormons claim an annual accession of from 800 to 1,000 above each year's total. Their missionaries are in almost every country, even in our Southern States. A large number of Mormons, approximating 1,000, are now on their way to Utah.

The Evangelical Churches have not been inactive in their efforts to reclaim this people. There are three Protestant Churches here, each with fine, costly church edifices. The Methodist Episcopal Church has a membership of seventy. The Episcopal Church is doing good work with its free day school, in addition to its religious services. Bishop Tuttle resides here. The Presbyterians are at work. The pastor of the Methodist Church informed me that the native Mormons never attend the Protestant churches. Their additions are from among those Gentiles who, induced by business or otherwise, make Salt Lake City their home.

The law on Mormonism is such as to make its evasion a very simple thing. Before a polygamist can be indicted for that crime the actual service of marriage must be proved. But this is a manifest impossibility, unless some Mormon, who is sworn to secrecy, breaks his oath.

The Endowment House, a building inclosed and protected from prying eyes, a short distance from the tabernacle, is the place of polygamous marriages. There President Taylor meets the parties. They are secretly admitted. No visible or available records can witness against the parties. They go out into the world man and wife. But the law cannot reach them. It can prove nothing. The law will have to be greatly altered before Mormonism can be crushed by it. Some people are quite sanguine that the Christian influences at work in the town and territory, though quiet and slow, and almost imperceptible now, are gradually leavening the Mormon mind. I do not believe it. They are completely dyed in the wool. They tell those who are bold enough to attempt to teach them that they are the teachers of men, they are God's elect, that it is blasphemy for Gentiles to call into question any of the practices of Mormonism. Their motto is: "Holiness to the Lord," and the "All seeing Eye" is emblazoned on it. Everything is done in the name of holy religion. Some claim themselves to be such subjects of God, that, although they cannot easily make the sacrifice, yet, for conscience' sake, they will take another wife. They are taught to believe that, in proportion to these sacrifices, they will be exalted in their heavenly estate. There are degrees of heavenly bliss, and the highest degree is the cost of sacrifice in marrying many women.

This seems to the outside world a huge burlesque, and the average Mormon doubtless looks at it in the same light as he winks at the law which does not enforce obedience to it.

It is well understood that the policy of the Mormons is simply evasion of the law. Mr. Emory is the territorial governor. The United States army, encamped three miles from the city, in the beautiful barracks of Camp Douglas, is suggestive of the policy of the country toward the Mormons. It will come to martial law at last. As it now is in Salt Lake City, all the city officials are polygamous Mormons, "from the lowest scavenger to the mayor." To admit this territory into the union of States would be a sad and ruinous mistake. To pardon and liberate Reynolds, would be the most ridiculous piece of sentiment committed in any administration toward this people, depraved, insubordinate and lawless.

Education.

BY REV. J. LEWIS, JR., D. D.

SECOND PAPER.

Mr. Editor: In our first paper we took the position that it is better for a young man to be educated at a college under the patronage of the church than at one under the patronage of the State. We assumed that the age at which young men begin college is a critical juncture in their life-history. If they are converted it must be by the divine blessing upon special effort made to secure this result. The question is: At which institution is it more likely that this effort will be put forth, at one the professors of which are chosen without special reference to their religious character, one in which the religious instruction of the student is not made the official duty of the preceptor, one which is patronized by all the enemies of Christianity, because it is not a religious school, one where any attempt to bring the young men to Christ is liable to be resented as an impertinence, or, on the other hand, at one consecrated to God, where the officers are all chosen with special reference to their religious character, where it is made their official duty to labor for the conversion of every student, one patronized exclusively by the friends of Christianity because it is a religious school, one, in short, founded in prayer, and baptized in the name of Christ, and conducted upon the principle that the education of an immortal being must have respect to his eternal happiness? The bare statement of the question ought to be sufficient to satisfy any candid mind. And it might be stated much more forcibly if we were free to enlarge upon any of the points presented. Even those whose duty it is to labor for the salvation of young people—pastors, guardians, parents are sometimes shamefully remiss. And a father who sends his son away from home unconverted, at the age of greatest religious susceptibility, to be exposed to all the temptations incident to college life, without the strong assurance that the instructors of the young man will "watch for his soul as those who must give account," entertains certainly very loose notions of parental responsibility.

We quote the following paragraphs from a timely editorial in the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, concerning "penitents and the church":

"If we are not mistaken, a large number of our younger pastors have utterly mistaken the policy of the church on this subject since the New Orleans General Conference, that met in April, 1866. They mistake, as we suppose, in two points, and they are vitally important. First, in supposing that our church allows no sort of probationary membership; secondly, in supposing that the 'conditions of membership' are different now from what they were fifty years ago.

We have a probation not arbitrarily limited by alluvian dates, but a probation, nevertheless—a probation that may be terminated within an hour, or that may last more than six months or twelve months. The present plan throws heavy responsibility upon the pastor, and this is right—this is, as we see the matter, according to the apostolic plan. Let our pastors study most carefully the nature of our present probationary system.

But while the church should open her doors to penitents, real penitents, not simply to persons who don't want to be damned, but who are not willing to be saved from their sins—who want religion only to avoid punishment but who are unwilling to give up their sins—the church should see to it that all received into her fold "continue to evidence their desire of salvation." We have no right to keep real penitents out; we have as little right to keep utterly impenitent persons in. We have no right to say to an applicant, You must be good enough for heaven before we let you in; we have no right to say to those who are not at all trying to become good enough—who live in sin and love sin—who live just as people do who are out of the church—who are not trying to be religious; you can stay in. We do a fearful wrong to the church and to the cause of Christ, and to the souls we delude into fatal repose, when we leave new members satisfied with simply getting into the church. We should teach them till they understand it, that church-membership and religion are not convertible terms.

If we keep out all penitents we will keep some souls out of heaven; if we ask in and keep in utterly impenitent persons—if we fill the church with unconverted people, who are not even seeking conversion, we will ruin the church.

HEALTH OF THE CITY.—We are still enabled gratefully to record the fact that New Orleans and its environments, including the towns on the river and sea shore, are enjoying the best of health. In the more than thirty summers that we have passed in this city we have known no healthier season than the present. Not only is there no yellow fever, but there is little sickness of any kind. The rains which had been prevailing for three weeks ceased on Friday last, and we are now having bright weather, and very cool for the month of August.

—A Baltimore dispatch announces that Rev. Thomas B. Sargent, D. D., died there on the fourteenth of August Dr. Sargent was, we believe, about seventy-five years of age. He had been in infirm health for several years. We last saw him at Atlanta during the General Conference, in May, 1878. He appeared then in comfortable health, but feeble. His eye was still bright, his voice clear and sweet, and his spirits seemed buoyant. His is, and will be, one of the loved and venerated names of American Methodism. He was a man of popular address, eloquent in preaching, and a Christian gentleman of courtly bearing and polish. But we have not space to write of him now.

—A few days ago we were at a quarterly meeting in a section of country where the cotton and sugar cultures come together and intermingle. The cotton people had had rather too much rain, the sugar-cane growers not enough. Here were dear neighbors with conflicting interests, some deprecating, others wishing for more rain. We were glad that the matter was in wiser hands than ours. In His providential dispensations God has a great many interests and ends in view, and what He does is always best.

—The Northern Methodists are not only discussing the expediency of electing a colored Bishop, but also of electing missionary bishops for Germany, China, India and Africa. The aspirations and hopes of some of the brethren would be blighted by such novel proceedings, and there will be plenty of opposition.

—Rev. T. J. Hough, pastor of our church at Natchitoches, has lately been recuperating from a long and serious illness by holding a very successful meeting at Vidalia, La., and raising the funds to build a church there. Evidently, with him, "labor is rest."

—Rev. S. H. Werlein, pastor of Louisiana Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and Rev. J. M. Beard, pastor of our church in Algiers, Fifth District of New Orleans, have returned to their posts after a few weeks of rest and travel.

—Rev. Dr. Mathews, pastor of St. Charles Avenue Church, of this city, left for a brief trip of two or three weeks on Tuesday, August 19. He expects to visit Wheeling, and attend the great camp meeting at Moundville, W. Va.

—Bishop Kenner started on his Western tour on Monday, August 11. He will return from California in time to hold the Louisiana Conference, December 10.

—Our latest dispatches from Memphis indicate a decline in the fever there. This may be owing to lack of subjects, but we hope that stricken city has seen the worst.

An Element of Strength.

The wide awake and inclusive editor of the Richmond Christian Advocate says:

In Georgia Methodism is a unit. They have one college. They cherish it. Every year the chief men in the church come to its annual festival. Their sons are taught in its halls. It is a Methodist institution in a Methodist town. They take pride in its success.

Another element of strength in the Methodism of the Gulf States is their concentration on their press. If there is any such thing as Conference prejudice or narrowness, it is drowned out by the overflowing and noble desire for the success of Methodism. The bad policy of each Conference attempting to print a paper in its own bounds would not be countenanced. The two Georgia and the Florida Conferences unite on the Wesleyan Advocate. The five Texas Conferences support the Galveston Advocate. The Memphis Advocate has the patronage of several Conferences, and so of the New Orleans and St. Louis papers. If we erect the Ohio a dozen Conferences should behind the great Western Advocate and the vast Northwest champion, the superb Chicago Advocate. What true statesmanship and noble devotion to a great cause! The whole field furnishes superior writers for each journal, while the large list of subscribers gives the means to the publishers of making a choice and powerful organ. They are too wise and too true to divide their patronage, and so bring to a weakly birth, and keep in puny life, a half dozen little papers, the exponents more of local vanity than denominational unity and strength.

Self-respect, concentration of resources, and minimum of Conference bigotry, have made Methodism, in the sugar and cotton States, a growing and giant power.

"Is it proper for a Methodist preacher to sell the books of our publication on the Sabbath day? Is it proper for Bible colporteurs to open out their books after service on the Sabbath and sell them? Is it sinful to do so?"

The above questions are submitted to us by a respected brother, who is as competent to decide them as we are. All buying and selling on the Sabbath should be avoided as far as possible. To justify it, the case must be one of extreme necessity. Because the books sold are religious, is it therefore right to sell them on Sunday? If right to sell them, would it not also be right to manufacture them on the Sabbath, and thus keep the presses agoing all the time? The Sabbath congregation affords facilities for the supplying of the people with the books, but they can be supplied on other days, and, we think, they should be. Where so much laxness and indifference prevail in regard to the sanctity of the Sabbath, it is needful that we avoid even the appearance of evil.

The gymnasium at Vanderbilt University is to be forty by eighty feet in the clear. The building for the department of civil engineering is to be three stories, with a basement, affording rooms for lectures, for models and for drawing designs. The new Wesley Hall is to be a very commodious and handsome edifice. The Nashville Daily American says:

A spacious building is to be erected on that eligible site which, from the first laying off of the grounds, was reserved for it. It will have two fronts—one nearly, and looking to the present Wesley Hall, and the other opening on the fine and boundless view on St. Cloud hill. Its capacity will be for a hundred or more students. Ground will be broken soon after the session opens for the new hall. The old will stand and do its good work until its successor is ready for occupation, then Litton mansion, that has stood there sixty years, will disappear.

A DONATION.—I have received from a brother in Kentucky a draft for $6 000, of which $1 000 is to be appropriated to the erection of a church in Soochow, China, and $1 500 to the erection of the boarding-school so much needed in the same place. The $500 is added to avoid the possibility of dent at the completion of the two buildings, and any surplus is to be applied to the uses of these enterprises as occasion may require. May the blessing of the Lord be upon the donor and attend his offering.

How many there are in our church who might do like liberal things and find a blessing in the doing! To many it would be a source of incalculable gain to their souls thus to make an offering to the Lord. May he put it into their hearts to do such things for his name. Our missions need this sort of liberality, as well as the constant flow of smaller remittances. Bring your gifts to the Lord's treasury.

A. W. WILSON.

The venerable Dr. Lovick Pierce has been very ill of late. The Wesleyan Christian Advocate, of August 9, quotes from the Sparta Times and Planter as follows:

Dr. L. Pierce, the venerable old soldier of the cross, whose name has been familiar to three generations, is at this writing, twenty third ultimo, extremely low. For six days his pulse has been in the neighborhood of thirty beats to the minute. His death would not be unexpected at any moment. He is extremely weak—talks but little, but is conscious. A day or two ago he said to the bishop that he was not able to make a dying statement, but that he might say to the church and his friends that he died just outside of heaven.

The Wesleyan Methodist will be issued in Nashville during the prevalence of yellow fever in Memphis. In the time of trouble its agents and patrons should be more hearty and prompt than ever in its support.

The new British Wesleyan Thanksgiving Fund up to July 1, had reached the great sum of £164 269—or over $825,000.

THE ADVOCATE

FOR FIFTY CENTS TO JANUARY, 1880.

The publisher announces to the thousands of our friends that he will send the paper from date to January next—five months—on receipt of fifty cents in currency or postage stamps. This is done to facilitate securing new subscribers, and, feeling assured that with but slight effort on the part of our patrons, thousands of persons could be induced to take advantage of this liberal offer, many of whom after that time would become permanent subscribers. Will they exert themselves to swell the list? There is no other investment that will supply the same amount of interesting reading matter, fresh each week, as this liberal offer. Let us hear from you as early as possible.

THE ADVOCATE FREE.

To any person sending us four yearly subscribers with $8 the paper will be sent free for one year. Sample copies will be mailed to parties when advised, to facilitate agents in securing subscribers. Address all communications in connection with above to the publisher.

MR. E. E. F. ROSS, of the staff of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, left Wednesday evening, for the West and East, on business connected with the ADVOCATE. We bespeak for him the courtesies which have been so liberally extended heretofore, and which we have not forgotten.

THE air of perfection, cleanliness and home-like comfort which is so apparent at the American House, Boston, is one of the characteristic features of that well-regulated establishment. To this all praise is due. This popular hotel is undergoing a thorough renovation, and when completed will certainly seldom be found at fault in the matter of first-class living, having recently reduced its rates to $3 and $3 50 per day.

OUR SCHOOLS.

HIWASSEE COLLEGE, East Tennessee, makes its fall opening August 31st. Circulars this week. All its faculty work now personally. President Bunn and Prof. Graves, of this city, are among the gifted men to say that Hiwassee College presents a fine opportunity to parents of all who seek sound learning, good health, moderate charges and the best moral influences for their children or wards.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

Clarke College, Williamsburg, Brooklaven, Mississippi, enrolls 160 pupils from Misses Lathrop & Wilkins, the energetic, scholarly and great-hearted Rev. H. F. Johnson, President of College, Brookhaven, Miss.

WINDMILLS.—See advertisement of the Kewaunee Manufacturing Company on the seventh page and send for circulars. 32

GREAT CHURCH LIGHT.—This light is very powerful and well spoken of by the best of our churches, dwellings and banks. See advertisement and send for circulars.

JOSEPH GILLOTT'S STEEL PENS are advertised in another column. They are so well known, and so universally the favorite of the American people, that it is only necessary to say that the name is a guarantee of their excellence.

PASSAIC CHEMICAL COMPANY.—Their Carolina Disinfectant, manufactured by the above company, is considered to be the best now before the public. It is highly recommended by J. M. Verdery, the proprietor of the Howard Association, in a letter to the Passaic Chemical Company, which letter should be read by everybody. T. L. Lyons and Frederickson & Hatton are the agents in whom you can get a supply. We suggest to every one to get the article.

PIANOS.—If any of our readers want a reliable piano, at a much lower price than they can buy the same grade of instrument elsewhere, they should read carefully the testimonials given by Messrs. Lynch & Gomien, of 1321 Broadway, New York, near Thirty-Fifth street, from well-known parties, and then write Messrs. Lynch & Gomien for their terms, after which a piece to their record, and experience in the piano trade. Their instruments are the result of many years' experience, study and improvement, and are constructed in the most thorough manner, of well-seasoned and well-prepared materials. They are remarkable for their durability, retaining their tone and standing long and well in tune. Messrs. Lynch & Gomien are southern men, their ghost standing in New York; and we feel satisfied they will deal fairly with all parties. Don't forget to write them for particulars, and they will answer cheerfully and promptly.

BEST SIX CORD SPOOL COTTON.—Messrs. John Clark, Jr., & Co.'s six-cord spool cotton was the first to be introduced in the United States (as spool cotton), the first consignment of which arrived at the port of New York in the year 1818. Since that date it has held a leading position above all other six-cord threads, and is conceded by many to be superior to any three-cord thread ever manufactured. Many attempts have been made to imitate it, but without success, as the secret of its manufacture is known only to the Messrs. Clark, and is carefully guarded. The late Mr. John Clark, Jr., the founder of the firm of which we speak, who went to Paisley, Scotland, in 1816, to improve the skill of his fellow-countrymen in the manufacture of sewing thread, was the first to introduce the system of paying premiums to the operatives for the production of the best work, which system has been followed by the present firm to the present day. The result is that the Messrs. Clark have in their employ the most skilful operatives in the trade, who, by long practice, have become perfect masters of their art. The Messrs. Clark, Jr., & Co. exhibited through the sale of their six-cord spool cotton in all parts of the world. At the Centennial Exhibition at Philadelphia in 1876 they obtained a ship unit for excellence in color, quality and finish, which was the highest award granted to spool cotton, and in addition to which they have been awarded medals at London, Paris and Vienna. Messrs. Thomas Prentiss & Co., 23 and 25 Mercer street, New York City, are the sole agents in this country, from whom, doubtless, the trade can obtain their goods. See advertisement.

CHICAGO, ST. LOUIS, AND NEW ORLEANS RAILROAD.—In our reports to the Eastern cities we have traveled over nearly all the lines of railroad connecting the South with the commercial cities of the Eastern and Northern, and we do not just now recall to mind any one that we have more enjoyed than a recent trip on the Chicago, St. Louis and New Orleans Railroad. We have observed the character and efficiency of the officers and employees of this line with great pleasure. In the last two and a half years the track has been rebuilt, a distance of four hundred miles, with steel and iron rails, and the equipments are in keeping with the rest. The finest cars in the country, namely, Water Valley and Silver Palace cars, have been placed on this road, and are ordered to be placed on every train. The latter has been the subject of much favorable comment, and the day is not far distant when the Pullman Palace Car Company will be ordered to be placed on every train. When the improvement now in progress is completed, the Chicago, St. Louis and New Orleans Railroad will be one of the finest roads in the country, and will be the favorite route between the North and the South. We shall watch its progress with interest, and shall be pleased to note any other improvements that may be made. All trains stop at Canton, Miss., where connection is made with the Mississippi Central Railroad for Memphis, Tennessee, Kentucky, Virginia, and all points North and East. Through tickets can be procured at the office of the company in this city, No. 112 Camp street, corner of Common.

TESTIMONIALS FROM WELL-KNOWN PERSONS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 21, 1878.

Messrs. LYNCH & GOMIEN:

Gentlemen: I am very much pleased with the Piano you made for me. It really is a splendid instrument in every respect, and has proved to all who have seen and heard it, far to the front, as regards style of finish, and beauty of finish. Many good judges of pianos, who have seen, and have played upon the instrument, have spoken highly of it. It has been in constant use in my parlor, and all pronounce it a first-class instrument. We ourselves are charmed with it. I shall, at all times, cheerfully recommend it to my friends who think, wish to purchase.

I am, very truly and respectfully yours,

ELLEN H. B. STURGMAN,

St. James Hotel, [illegible]

Messrs. LYNCH & GOMIEN:

Gentlemen: I am very happy to be able to thank you for the very kind manner in which you have treated me, and now I think the South and Southwest, at least, should be convinced of the superiority of your Piano. I have been traveling for years as a professional musician, and have had the opportunity of testing the merits of many pianos, but I must say that the pianos of Messrs. Lynch & Gomien, of New York, are the best I have ever had the pleasure of playing upon. I shall, with much pleasure, recommend them wherever I have an opportunity. Very respectfully yours,

ANTHONY WALKER,

Professor of Music St. Mary's Dominican College, St. James, La., October 1, 1878.

[illegible] Hotel,

Dear County, Tex.

Messrs. LYNCH & GOMIEN:

Gentlemen: The two Pianos have safely arrived, and on their first day of being here drew together a crowd of about one hundred and fifty persons, who were delighted beyond measure with the instruments. For many thousand miles they have been carried, over rough roads, and in all sorts of weather, and yet they have not suffered in the least. Their tone is full, round and rich, and yields to the touch with the utmost delicacy. In fact, in every respect they have given perfect satisfaction, and I shall take pleasure in recommending them to my friends. Yours, respectfully,

[illegible]

Director of Music.

How to Raise Ducks.

With all young poultry, the natural mother is the best calculated by nature to take charge of her own offspring, inasmuch as there are many requirements which instinct teaches them, and which are only adapted to both mother and progeny, when both are of the same kind. A hen is not a suitable mother for young ducks. Ducklings are considered by the majority of people as hardy birds and easily reared, and so they are with their natural mother, but when a hen mother it is quite a different thing. A hen is an uneasy, restless creature, first on the move in the daytime; whereas, a duck mother is quiet, and her movements are slow and cautious with her young ones, seldom treading on them, while the hen frequently trumples on her brood, but when of her own kind, they soon learn to keep out of reach of her outspread toes. With the cries of her own offspring she is familiar by instinct, while she is often dead to appeals from the duckling or gosling.

A sitting chucking hen, or one with young, is apt to pick quarrels with the other fowls; and in a more full liberty, will have frequent battles with her neighbors in the great distance of her beat. In a measure, her chicks are somewhat accustomed to these pugnacious proclivities, and from not suffer so much as the gosling does. The duck mother seldom fights, but she is more of the poultry yard generally speaking. She is a quiet, contented sort of a body, and during her seclusion from water with commendable fortitude. As ducks do not like a stagnant pool or stream of running water, they are quite as well without as with it, thrive with only sufficient water to drink. The duck mother sits most assiduously on her brood of either or sexes, and is very careful of their insect foes as the latter always require long watching and petty of hatching.

Nearly a week sooner than hens, or even ducks, we are wise people in our generation, but not from all examples. Geese are even wiser than we, and hens were left to do the hatching and bring up their chickens, and ducks to rear young ducks." Drakes are pretty egg-stealers, generally making a nest on the ground, in a private place, not far from home. It is useless to undertake to keep ducks or ducklings from the range of a large running stream. The water makes them almost oblivious of everything else, and they frequently drop their eggs in the water, and, if not kept up, they will be lost. Ducks are not to be compared with the hen in the matter of eggs, for the latter will lay from 150 to 175 eggs in a season, and the duck from 50 to 75, while the cost of maintaining a duck is about the same as that of a hen. Besides, the duck requires a pond or stream of water, which is an evil with which many have to contend, and which is a great drawback to the profits of duck raising. The flesh of the duck is also inferior to that of the hen, and the latter is more easily reared. The eggs of the duck are also inferior to those Scientific.

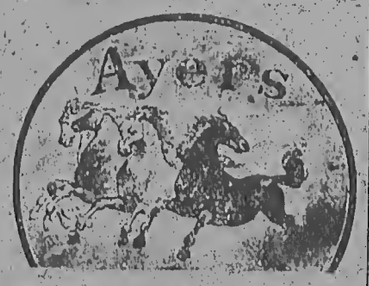
HEARING THE PULSE.—A new instrument, an adaptation of the telephone, called sphygmophone, has been invented, by which the beating of the pulse is transmitted into audible and even loud sounds. The needle of a Pond's sphygmograph is made to traverse a metal or carbon plate, which is connected with the zinc pole of a Leclanche cell. To the metal stem of the sphygmograph is then attached one terminal of a telephone, the other terminal being connected with the opposite pole of the battery. When the whole is ready the phygmograph is brought into use if a tracing were about to be taken, and when the pulsation of the needle from the pulse strokes is secured, the needle, which previously was shoved back, is thrown over, so as to make its point just touch the metal or carbon plate, and to traverse the plate to and fro with each pulsation. In conveying three sounds, one long and two short are given out from the telephone, which sounds correspond with the first, second, and third events of sphygmographic reading. In fact, the pulse talks telephonically, and so loudly, that when two cases are used the sounds can be heard by a large audience.

ELECTRIC PHOTOGRAPHY.—The idea of photographing by the electric light has long been entertained, and many efforts made toward its accomplishment. The trouble has been that so intense a light, emanating from a small point, produced intense and disagreeable black shadows. Mr. Van der Weyde has devised a process which is being used in London and Paris with great success, and it has become quite the fashion in Paris for parties of ladies and gentlemen to resort to photographic studios after dinner or before the opera, for the purpose of sitting for photographs. The light used for the purpose is that of the voltaic arc, the lamp being placed in the large concave reflector, supported by a system of pulleys, levers, and counterweights, so that it may be readily adjusted or moved about. The reflector is made of sample porcelain, lined with paper silvered, which is tinted blue. The carbon points, between which the voltaic arc is formed, are placed almost at a right angle to each other. The light has normally a power equal to about 5,000 to 6,000 candles, but can be made more powerful by increasing the speed of the Gramme machine. The rays of the voltaic arc is twice reflected. A small reflector, placed in front of the lamp, throws the light upon the interior surface of the large reflector, whence it is thrown in any direction, according to the will of the operator. The cartoons are kept out of the direct rays, so as to obtain a maximum effect of current, may be regulated, and flickering and variations in the light avoided. Low figures, like profiles are also obtained, in every way those obtained by sunlight.

STEEL FOR THE EAST RIVER BRIDGE.—The contract for supplying the steel for the two great spans of the great suspension bridge to cross New York and Brooklyn, was, a few days ago, executed between the trustees of the bridge and the Edgemoor Iron Co. The contract is for 6,000 tons of steel wire, and is said to be a series of transverse bolts, set about 6 inches apart. These materials are coming from the Edgemoor Works by means of two steamers, one being placed on each river front, and two by railroad. The manufacture of the steel cables is to be begun at once, and will probably occupy a year. The bridge will be 1,600 feet long, and 135 feet wide, and will cost $15,000,000. Its towers will be 275 feet above the water, and the cables will be 15½ inches in diameter. The bridge will be completed in 1882.

Ayer's



Cathartic Pills

Combine the choicest vegetable products in the market, by a process original with the chemist, by which their curative properties are retained in the highest degree of concentration, and their operation rendered certain and uniform. Being the result of years of careful study and practical investigation, they are offered to the public with the confidence that they will be found the best and most reliable purgative that can be employed for the cure of disease. Every dose makes itself felt, and invariably produces the effect required. They are sugar-coated, so that the most delicate can take them pleasantly, and they are entirely free from calomel or any other dangerous drug. Containing no alcohol, they retain in perpetual preservation the full medicinal virtues of the roots, herbs, barks, and berries from which they are derived, and hence are the most effective remedy that can be employed for the cure of all diseases originating in a disordered state of the digestive organs.

As a Dinner Pill they have no equal.

While gentle in their action, these Pills are the most thorough and searching cathartic that can be employed, and never give pain, unless the bowels are inflamed, and then only in proportion to the existing necessity for their use. They stimulate the appetite and digestive organs, they operate to purify the blood, and impart new vigor and health. A cure for the whole human race.

BRUSH'N STUFF.

How many children and women are slowly and surely dying, or rather being killed, by excessive doctorfing, or the daily use of some drug or drunken stuff called medicine, that no one knows what it is made of, when can easily be cured and saved by Hop Bitters, made of Hops, Buchu, Mandrake, Dandelion, etc., which is so pure, simple and harmless that the most frail woman, weakest invalid or smallest child can trust in them. Will you be saved by them? See other column.—Adv.

"Have you given electricity a trial for your complaint, madam?" asked the minister, as he took tea with the old lady. "Electricity!" said she. "Well, yes, I reckon I has. I was struck by lightning last summer and love out of the window; but I didn't seem to do me no sort of good."

PREVENT YELLOW FEVER.

It has been well proved that prevention is better than cure. A very simple and effective preventative for Yellow Fever and other fevers has been found in BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS. They were used during the last season in New Orleans very successfully. The common method of using them was to cut a hole over the stomach, thus losing the virtue of the Plaster. Many in every week. They are one of THE MOST ACTIVE ANTISEPTICS and seem to destroy the poison (the reason why they are Capcine is that they stimulate the circulation and thus enable the system to overcome the influence of the malarial poison. They are a cheap and almost certain preventative. Ask your physician about them. Benson's Capcine Plasters are a sure preventative and cure for chills and fever if worn as above. Price, 25 cents.

A well known liberal clergyman relates that lately talking to some youngsters on the coming vacation, and diverging into the necessity of kindness to animals, he incidentally remarked: "Boys are often cruel to frogs and toads. I remember when a boy of wickedly filling up a toad with fire crackers, and then lighting the fuse match." He was horrified to see this remark received with the liveliest emotions of interest and delight, and utterly prostrated as he passed out at hearing one urchin say to another: "Jings, that's a new note. Won't we have fun blowing up the 'mill paddies down in the meddel?"

An old gentleman of Lumpy's acquaintance was somewhat disgusted on his eightieth birthday, which occurred the other day, to receive from some of the younger members of his family a book of sermons with the agreeably suggestive title, "Go up Higher."—Harvard Lampoon.

FREE! A Treatise (200 pages) on Compound Oxygen, with many testimonials to its most remarkable cures, sent free. Address DISCOVERY by which hair can be forced to grow on the smoothest spheres. The papers all over the country contain notices of the remarkable virtues of Mrs. Hyatt's Hair Restorer, and there are scores of living witnesses in St. Louis who take pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of the Restorer. Mrs. Hyatt's preparations are most reasonable, because she progresses on the well-based supposition that the hair germ never dies, while life exists in the person, and that it is only necessary to stimulate the germ to produce sentimentory growth. Three bottles for $5; $1 in accompany the order and balance to be paid when prediction is delivered.

How Sin Grows.—A few years ago a little boy told his first false hood. It was a little solitary thistle seed and no eye but God's saw him as he planted it in the mellow soil of his heart. But it sprang up—O how quickly! and in a little time another seed dropped from it to the ground, each in its turn bearing more and more thistles. And now his heart is overgrown with a bad habit. It is as difficult for him to speak the truth as it is for a gardener to clear his land of the ugly thistle after it has once gained a rooting in the soil.

ANSWERED.

BY PHŒBE CAREY.

I thought to find some healing e time
For her I loved; she found that shore
That city, whose inhabitants
Are sick and sorrowful no more.

I asked for human love for her;
The Loving knew how best to still
The tolled yearning of a heart,
Which but blindly could do ill.

Such sweet communion had been ours,
I prayed that it might never end;
My prayer is more than answered, now
I have an angel for my friend.

I wished for perfect peace to soothe
The troubled anguish of her breast;
And, numbered with the loved and called,
She entered on untroubled rest.

Life was so fair a thing to her,
I wept and pleaded for its stay;
My wish was granted me, for lo!
She hath eternal life to-day.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

MOBILE, Aug. 19.—The fever quarantine along the Mobile and Ohio Railroad north of this point has been discontinued, and the line is now open through from St. Louis to New Orleans.

VICKSBURG, Aug. 19.—The State Board of Health established a quarantine station at Commerce, Miss., where downward bound vessels must land for inspection, and the issuance of certificates to passengers. A similar station was established at Fort Adams, Miss., for upward bound boats.

NEW YORK, Aug. 20.—An Atlanta, Ga., special says: A reliable report has been received here to the effect that the various Mormon congregations in Northern Georgia are organizing for immediate exodus to Utah. Against many native Mormons will go. The movement creates some excitement in the country, but the deed will be abandoned for a while.

BILOXI, Miss., Aug. 22.—A terrible storm passed over the Seashore Camp Grounds, Tabernacle and other buildings were blown down. So far as known, only two persons were hurt.

OCEAN GROVE, N. J., Aug. 21.—Twenty-two thousand persons attended services at the Methodist camp meeting yesterday.

PENSACOLA, Aug. 25.—The Pensacola Board of Health has re-established quarantine against freight and passengers from New Orleans.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 25.—Thirty-four cases in all were reported to the Board of Health to-day—20 whites and 14 colored. Among the names reported this afternoon are Mrs. Dr. S. H. Collins, William Richardi, O. B. Wilkie, and A. C. Hepburn. The fever has apparently taken a fresh start, especially in the northern portion of the city and the Bend.

No additional deaths have been reported since noon. Squire Hoegel and family are down with fever, one mile south of Camp Mathes. Dave Cockroll, is also prostrated with the disease, five miles east of this city, on Poplar street boulevard. Dr. C. D. Bradford has been sent to White's Station, Tenn., to isolate the case of the negro sick with fever at that point. The thermometer to-day ranged from 63 to 81.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 24.—The Teutonia Relief Association, representing the German societies of Memphis, have appealed to their countrymen throughout the United States for help. All remittances should be sent to A. Goldschmidt, President, or Jno. C. Eichberg, Secretary.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Aug. 20.—The Paris correspondent of the Telegraph announces that M. de Lesseps has sent to Central America several expert engineers to examine plans for the Panama Canal, and ascertain the probable expense of building it.

CITY OF MEXICO, Aug. 11, via Havana.—The State of Vera Cruz is in a feverish condition of revolutionary excitement, and Government troops are rapidly concentrating. In Vera Cruz city the Spanish element is accused of instigating disorders, the cause of their dissatisfaction being the laws against smuggling. It is alleged that Diaz is having a bill of impeachment prepared against Senor Valtell, President of the Supreme Court and Vice President of the Republic. A majority of the Cabinet had resolved that the constitutional amendment against the re-election of the President should be repealed in order to save the country from anarchy. A movement for the repeal of this amendment has already been made in the legislatures of Michoacan, Puebla and Morelos. Opposition papers say the Cabinet is paving the road to a dictatorship. President Diaz continues to declare his unwillingness to serve another term.

LONDON, Aug. 22.—The Times, in its leader this morning, announces that the authorities have decided that the evidence taken before the court-martial in Africa does not justify the conviction of Lieut. Carey. The findings of the court are accordingly quashed, and Carey retains his rank. He will be released from arrest to-day. The sentence of the court was dismissal from the service.

LONDON, Aug. 23.—The London Missionary Society has received a telegram from Aden, announcing that Dr. Mullens, formerly foreign secretary of that society, died of peritonitis on July 10. Doctor Mullens had gone, at his own urgent request, to assist in establishing a mission on Lake Tanganyika.

The Times publishes a dispatch from Newcastle, South Africa, dated August 3, which says: One tribe Zulus who have not yet felt the brunt of war, are massing towards Slobane. A detachment of the corps of British troops, which was under orders to return home, is being hurried against them.

QUEBEC, Aug. 24.—The Irish section of the ship laborers society has reduced the rates of wages to the same figures as the French section.

DUBLIN, Aug. 25.—The correspondent of the Freeman's Journal reports that destitution amounting almost to a famine prevails in Western Ireland.

LONDON, Aug. 25.—The Standard's Paris dispatch states that Prince Jerome Napoleon has purchased L'Ordre. It will hereafter advocate autocratic Republicanism and repudiate hereditary imperialism.

The Calcutta correspondent of the Times reports that starvation and misery still prevails in Cashmere.

LONDON, Aug. 25.—Mr. Scott, the well-known agricultural authority, in his annual letter, reviewing the crops, estimates that the outcome of the grain crops will be one-third less than the average, and that the deficiency will entail a loss of £25,000,000, and that 16,000,000 or 17,000,000 quarters of wheat will be required from abroad. He also estimates that the deficiency in the potato crops will cause a loss of £15,000,000 and the deficiency in beans, peas and rye a loss of £3,000,000.

RAILROAD SALE.—Mr. Henry J. Leovy returned yesterday from New York, where he has been representing the interests of the Morgan Railroad and Steamship Company in connection with the purchase of the line of road from New Orleans to Donaldsonville. A representative of the Picayune called on Mr. Leovy and learned the following particulars of the transaction: In May, 1878, by order of the United States Circuit Court for Louisiana the railroad and franchises belonging to the New Orleans, Mobile and Texas Railroad Company were sold by the United States Marshal, and bought by the holders of the first mortgage bonds. Finding themselves unable, or being unwilling, to extend the road from Donaldsonville, they have for several months offered it for sale. Last month the Morgan Company made an offer for it which was accepted. Some details remain to be perfected, but it is understood that the Morgan Company are now the owners of not only the road to Donaldsonville and Bayou Goula, but also the rights of way and franchises beyond Bayou Goula and beyond Vermillionville.

They now have the choice of routes to Alexandria, and it is believed that they will prefer that from Vermillionville, and build a road to Alexandria at an early day to connect with the road to be built to Marshall or Shreveport. The road to Donaldsonville will be put in first class condition and its southern terminus extended to the Morgan depot at Algiers.

The road to Vermillionville will be completed before the 1st of December. New Orleans Picayune Aug. 26.

FIELD NOTES.

ALABAMA.

LITTLESVILLE, Ala., Aug. 13.—We have just closed a four days' meeting at Ebenezer, resulting in two conversions and two accessions to our church, and the church revived. Crops very much cut off by drought, though we think there will be corn enough for home consumption; the season since July 19 cotton shedding since the rains commenced.

J. M. COLEMAN.

LAFAYETTE DIST., Ala., Aug. 15.—During my last tour on the district we had four quarterly meetings; some twenty or thirty professed faith in Christ, and several joined the church. Are raising means to pay off an old district parsonage debt of seven years' standing; expect to succeed. I think we have more Methodist Sunday-schools this year than have ever been in this district heretofore. The general outlook of the church is decidedly hopeful. A decided forward movement in finances will make this one of our best districts. Some are seeking holiness of heart.

JOHN B. STEVENSON.

LANGSTON, Ala., Aug. 15.—The results or fruits of a protracted meeting here, which closed last night, is twenty conversions and fifteen accessions. The people throughout the country are interested seriously. A sweeping revival is being prayed for and expected. The health of the country tolerably good. The country is in a hopeful condition, spiritually and temporally.

JAMES COX.

Tennessee Valley circuit, North Alabama Conference.

BAY'S MILLS, Ala., Aug. 13.—Our crop interest has been much injured; first five weeks drought, since by numerous and heavy rains. Have just closed a good meeting at a new appointment in the bounds of Maplesville circuit, served by Bro. W. A. Montgomery, of the Alabama Conference. I think about twelve professed to have found peace. Six accessions to the church; membership powerfully revived. Bros. Montgomery and L. C. Calhoun joined me on Monday.

E. A. MIKELL.

TUSCUMBIA, Ala., Aug. 11.—I have been spending my spare time, for six weeks, with the brethren in protracted meeting. The result has been very gratifying. Bro. Thos. F. Davis, of Russellville circuit, has enjoyed a great work of grace in his charge. He will, no doubt, send you some account. Is doing well on the work. Several engagements await me for the summer and fall. My own charge I regard in a prosperous condition.

Z. A. PARKER.

PLEASANT SITE, Ala., Aug. 17.—Our third quarterly meeting was held, August 15 and 16, with good results, and now we are protracting. The C. P., Baptist and Methodist Churches are represented in the meeting. We had a good time to-day. The health of the country is good. Crops are coming out since the rain set in.

C. C. ONEAL.

LOUINA, Ala., Aug. 17.—We have had three meetings in the Louina charge, and have received twenty-four into the church, and thirty professed to have found Christ in the pardon of all sin. Crops were never more hopeful. Rain plenty. Bro. B. F. Larrabee, of LaFayette, has been up, and did some good preaching for us.

R. D. EVANS.

HARTSELL, Ala., Aug. 18.—I have just returned from a visit to the third Quarterly Conference of the Danville circuit, North Alabama Conference. The presiding elder, Rev. W. R. Kirk, from some cause was not present, but the pastor, Rev. Wilson Williams, presided to the satisfaction of all present. The love-feast was a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Some twelve or fifteen persons were shouting the praises of God at one time. The meeting is being protracted. The late rains have greatly increased the calculations of the farmers with regard to their crops.

O. P. REED.

MISSISSIPPI.

CHUNKY STATION, Miss., Aug. 14.—Corn crops good; excessive rains now, making too much weed and cotton shedding. Four Sabbath-schools, all doing well; condition of the church gradually improving; thirteen children baptized; accessions by letter, eleven; by experience, 2; collections ordered by the Conference attended to. Hope to get our assessment. Health of the country good.

THOS. Y. AUSTIONG.

Shady Grove mission.

PHILADELPHIA, Miss., Aug. 15.—We had two glorious revivals on the Philadelphia circuit within the last three weeks. Sixteen accessions to the church, and all the members revived. This is the fourth revival in six weeks, with an increase of forty-five members. We have, I believe, about forty subscribers to the ADVOCATE. It should be double that number.

J. C. HUGGINS.

CORINTH, Miss., Aug. 19.—A glorious revival of religion, in this city, between the last of July and middle of August. Services were held at the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and conducted by a minister of that church. Between twenty and thirty professions of faith, and a number of reclamations. Eight persons united with our church last Sunday, and as many with the Cumberland Presbyterian and Old Presbyterian. Crops were never better. Health good, and our people are hopeful.

JOHN PANCROFT.

PEARLATCHIE, Miss., Aug. 19.—I have just closed a very interesting meeting at New Providence, in the bounds of my mission (Prairie), which resulted in eight or ten conversions and nine accessions to the church, and the church revived and built up. I also organized a church at Ludlow, Scott county, Miss. Think the prospect very flattering for a good church there. Have received twenty members in all to date. Finances tolerably well up. Crops ordinary.

A. D. MILLER.

LOUISIANA.

WEBSTER CIRCUIT, La., Aug. 3.—I have just closed a protracted meeting of seven days' length, at Bush Pool Church, on this (Webster) circuit; had a glorious revival. The Holy Spirit was manifest in His to my offices. Penitents flocked to the altar. Several converted, five added to the church, and believers were strengthened. Have received fifteen members altogether on the circuit. Corn crops short. Cotton prospects good. Finances short. Health tolerably good.

R. S. COLLIER, P. C.

BOSCOMB CIRCUIT, La., Aug. 10.—Rev. John L. Williams has just closed a protracted meeting at Summerfield, and glorious Herd Church, which resulted in the addition of ten members to the church, and many conversions. God seemed to be present in saving power. Eternity can only reveal the good accomplished; and still the work goes on. Corn is a failure. Cotton prospect fine. God is with us.

W. F. STEVENS.

GREENSBURG, La., Aug. 11.—Our meeting at this place was successful. There were sixteen additions to the church and several bright conversions. The meeting continued nine days. Brother R. T. Davis and our beloved presiding elder, Rev. A. A. Godfrey, remained with us to the close of the meeting, preaching with great power and earnestness. We have just closed a very interesting meeting at Davis Chapel. Three additions, and the church greatly blessed.

J. S. PARKER, P. C.

NATCHITOCHES CIRCUIT, La., Aug. 12.—The spiritual condition of the church on my work is now tolerably good, and improving. Revivals good, many conversions and accessions to the church. The prayer meeting work is building up. The weekly prayer meeting of my neighborhood is doing finely.

H. M. BLOCKER.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ALBANY, Ore., Aug. 6.—Having some interesting meetings at various points. The weather has been very hot for Oregon for a few days. The rust has injured almost totally ruined the spring wheat; millions of bushels short. Sad, pitiable state of things for those in debt. Will future Oregon millions of dollars, and arrest to some extent the tide of immigration. Read the ADVOCATE with keen relish. I now take a few days of rest on the seashore.

T. H. WHITE.

DOWNEY, LOS ANGELES CO., CAL., Aug. 8.—Our College opened the sixth instant with very flattering prospects. Students are coming in rapidly, notwithstanding the hard times. Rev. C. B. Riddeck, D. D., is president, and his good record in the East will, we believe, brighten in the West. He has to contend with many difficulties, but he manages them with a masterly hand. A gracious revival meeting in our church here has just closed. Ten have already joined our church, and others will. The writer rejoices that his two eldest daughters are among the ingatherings of this meeting. This intelligence will make glad the hearts of many of your readers in the East. We have encouraging news from many of our churches.

S. M. ADAMS.

Jack Hargrave.

From earliest boyhood something of the marvelous has always been associated with the life of the frontier scout or trapper.

Their courage, at times reckless, and kindness have been interwoven in many a thrilling story, and, though much of the fiction life of the "yellow-backed novel" is highly colored, there is truth in much that we read of the adventures of these brave, strong men.

Jack Hargrave has a large, honest, blue eye, set in a pleasant and smooth round forehead. His skin is reddened by exposure, which harmonizes with the light, heavy, half beard moustache, which covers a strong but kind mouth.

During the campaign of Generals Sherman and Crook, against the Sioux in the Black Hills and Big Horn range, from 150 to 250 miles from the railroad point, where the Black Hills are first seen, Hargrave and another scout were the guides of the United States army. You can see the honest, brave man written on his face, and at first glance I was drawn to him, not suspecting the individuality and history of the man.

After Custer was killed by Sitting Bull's warriors, Hargrave led the army of Crook to the canyon where lay the unburied bodies of three hundred brave Americans. Nine-tenths of them were scalped. The body of the brave, handsome Custer lay, his hand firmly clinching his sword, and his hair, long and graceful, was still gore. He was not scalped. The Indians left him as they killed him. They admired Custer. One of Sitting Bull's Indian soldiers told Hargrave how reluctant he was to kill Custer. But this gold soldier would not be captured. After he had shot away his last cartridge he drew his sword and defied them all. He repulsed every effort to seize him alive, and thus really invited the bullet which killed him. "Long Hair," said Sitting Bull, "was a brave warrior." The soldiers dug a long trench and wrapped their dead comrades in their blankets, and sadly turned the soil upon them. Custer's body was subsequently removed.

To my curious inquiries about Indian habits, the kind trapper made willing answers.

The chief is elected at a convention of all the braves, assembled in a brush temple on the evening of the first new moon in May, providing the place has been vacated by death or otherwise. The duties of the chief are to maintain order and peace in the tribe, to negotiate treaties with nations, to declare war, to lead in battle. He receives no salary, and in the distribution of booty enjoys no special preference. Disobedience to the chief causes the forfeiture of all the culprit's horses, which are turned over to his squaw or wife. The riches of the Indians consist of horses. Money has no value. Whisky is mighty; sugar and tobacco are great luxuries.

The Indian will sell anything for whisky and horses. A poor warrior will give his daughter for a pony. A chief's daughter costs three horses.

The bark of the native, wild cotton tree supplies horse feed during the winter months.

The Indians are great gamblers. They use the game, common among our little folks, of placing a little piece of ivory or bone in either hand, and guessing in which hand the piece is. In their enthusiasm they risk and often lose all they possess, even their wives. Horse-racing is a favorite pastime. Sometimes they run twenty miles in trial of speed.

The women are noddings. They are seen, but they have learned silence. They do what they are bidden, unquestioning, unmurmuring. What of woman's rights here? They are despised as slaves. The warrior will take his squaw hunting. She rides a horse and leads another. He kills an antelope, but does not deign to notice it after dead. The woman manages all the rest, carrying the game to the camp, preparing food, dressing hides, and attending to all household economy. She is the hostler, curling altogether for her lord's beast. He smokes his pipe, takes a hunt, goes to battle, attends councils of war. He is king.

Polygamy is a common practice among them. They usually have one wife for every two horses; sometimes an equal number of wives and horses.

Their tents are conical-shaped. The skins, impervious to water, are used as covering. The men dress in animal skins. The women now make cloth gowns for dresses. They are well armed. Winchester rifles, shooting fourteen times, and other of the best made arms, are numerous. These are secured through traders.

It should be an offence, against the government to sell Indians fire-arms, as it only emboldens them to hold out opposition to advancement. Hargrave states that the missions among the different tribes are feeble and almost fruitless. He has met Roman Catholic and Methodist missionaries. It is doubtful whether they will ever be Christianized. The few may be, but the most of them, in addition to their natural depravity, have no confidence in the white man. They do not understand their white brethren. They have eyes, but cannot see; ears, but they hear not.

Rev. John C. Burruss.—A Fragment.

BY MRS. MARY B. MCGEHEE.

John Crenshaw Burruss, the son of Charles Burruss and Mary Crenshaw, was born in Caroline county, Va., October 7, 1786. His parents were nominal members of the Church of England, and he was baptized by a clergyman of that church, but I am under the impression that he was never confirmed. I have often heard him speak of the neglect of the flock by these strange shepherds, many of whom were eager to return to England—of their indulgence in card-playing and such amusements, and of the general irreligion of the people, until the advent of Asbury and those godly men of the new sect, called Methodists. These Methodists preached in dwelling houses, and wherever a house was opened to them, and a great religious awakening followed upon their ministrations. John C. Burruss, then twenty-four years old, gay, worldly, living in pleasure, and utterly godless, was convicted—whether under the preaching of the Methodists, or by some other means, I do not know—but in his distress he sought the advice and the prayers of the only deeply pious woman whom he knew, and she was a Methodist. He made a visit to the family without mentioning his religious convictions, and his presence in the house produced some perplexity in the mind of the daughter who always led the service. While the family were on their knees, at the hour of family prayer, his sorrow was turned into joy; he knew that God, for Christ's sake, had pardoned his sins, and he rejoiced aloud. With the ardor and enthusiasm which always characterized him, he mounted his horse the very next morning and rode ten or twelve miles through a snow-storm to the nearest Methodist society, and had his name recorded among that despised and then persecuted people. His family were grieved and astonished beyond measure, but his zeal, tenderness and ardor, his love for God, his evident peace and joy, the new life which animated him, overcame all indifference, and changed opposition into sympathy.

He very soon had the pleasure to see his widowed mother and his two younger sisters received into the same communion with himself, and within a few years his elder sister and his brothers. Six months after he professed conversion he received license as an exhorter, and at the end of twelve months was admitted into the Conference on trial. His first circuit was Gloucester, Va., if I remember rightly. There he was, indeed, like a flame of fire. Light and warmth followed his presence everywhere. His winning address and gracious manners gave him access to the community, and his preaching was universally attractive. Endowed by nature with a fine face, and with that best gift of the orator, a good voice of great flexibility and compass, and of marvelous sweetness, the young evangelist, with the grace of Whitefield and the earnestness of John the Baptist, called sinners to repentance, and told them of that Saviour whose dying love and perfect atonement had won him, from the ways of sin and folly, to himself. Forty years after the events I am now relating had occurred the writer met with persons at the different springs in Virginia who, upon hearing the name of Burruss, inquired if the writer knew anything of the Rev. John C. Burruss.

In 1810 Mr. Burruss removed from Lynchburg, Va., to the vicinity of Huntsville, Ala. A large emigration from Virginia that year and the following formed a colony of friends and relations, such as constituted a community of intelligent and mostly religious people. Among them may be named the widowed Mrs. LeVert and her sons and daughters. Men of honor and of superior culture, and women of grace and goodness. Of the sons, Rev. Eugene LeVert, of the Alabama Conference, is, I believe, to this writing, 1879, the sole survivor. The families of Booth, Caldness, O'Fallenden also, settled in this neighborhood. The venerable Rev. Alexander Sale, uncle to Rev. Jesse Butler, brothers-in-law of Mr. Burruss, were also pioneers of religion, virtue and patriotism about this time. They settled in Lawrence county, near the village of Courtland, and in that vicinity the families of John Pickstaxter and of Richard Norment, also brothers-in-law of Mr. Burruss, found homes. The country was lovely to the eye; the tall grass waved beneath the forest trees in unbroken verdure. Deer might often be seen leaping through the glades. The grass was gemmed with myriads of wild flowers, such as the bonella, the gay butterfly weed, varieties of milk weed, marigold, lady's slipper, cucurbita, sunflower, wild honeysuckle and others. From Huntsville Mr. Burruss removed to the neighborhood of Courtland, where his brothers-in-law, the Rev. A. Sale and J. Butler, had settled. Preaching, prayer meetings and class meetings were held from house to house.

But, lovely as was this new home, there was one objection to it—the want of water. During the summer all the springs failed, and water was hauled some miles for domestic purposes. The following year found Mr. Burruss located in Franklin county, and within a quarter of a mile of the village of Russellville. Here was a place of hills and valleys, of brooks and springs of water. Here he erected a large dwelling house of hewn logs, pointed or filled in with stone, burned lime from the rocks around him for building purposes, built chimneys of neatly hewn stone, and had floors of planed plank, the first floors of any other sort than of split puncheons or rough sawn plank, since they had left their Virginia home. Here Mr. Burruss opened a school for girls, taught by Mr. John F. LeVert, and one for boys, taught by Dr. Samuel A. Cartwright. In the courthouse of the village of Russellville I remember to have heard Mr. Burruss, the then youthful Benjamin M. Drake, the earnest Thomas Stringfield, and Mr. Lambuth, the father of our missionary, preach.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—The above unfinished sketch of Mr. Burruss was found among the papers of Mrs. McGehee after her death. We are indebted to her daughter, Mrs. Mary L. M. Snowden, for the interesting fragment. It was evidently Mrs. McGehee's purpose to furnish a complete biographical sketch of her father, but her sudden and unexpected death, in 1873, left it as above. After his sojourn in Russellville, Mr. Burruss lived in Mississippi, and moved in Caddo parish, La., in 1848, where he died in 1864.

Death of Kwe Ta Ta.

A private letter to the editor from our brother, Jr. Y. J. Allen, contains several points we judge to be appropriate to these columns. Bro. Allen says: I should tell you of the death of Kwe Ta (Ta) Ta r, our chief Bible woman. She was one of the first fruits of our China mission, having joined the church October 7, 1855, in the forty-seventh year of her age. Her names stands third on the record, the first and second names being those of our late native preacher and his wife, Lien Ya-koh and Lien Mei-lya. James and Mary Lew, who were received in January, 1851, about two and a half years after the arrival of Jenkins and Taylor, the pioneers of our missions. Mrs. Kwe (Quay), or old lady Kwe, as the Chinese called her, in respect to her age and virtues, was the first convert received into the church by brother, now Dr. Cunningham, of Nashville, and to the last, notwithstanding his long absence, seemed to cherish the strongest possible attachment to him and his family. When I was leaving last year she charged me particularly to gaou-soung Kung Sien Sang (that is, remember her to Dr. Cunningham), and when I returned she was exceedingly delighted to learn that I had met him and was the bearer of a hearty reciprocal remembrance. I know the doctor's heart will soften when he hears of her death, for while she lived and so faithfully served the church he had helped to plant, he could not feel otherwise than strongly attached to the China mission, and must in her death mourn our loss as in some sense personal to himself.

I cannot in this brief letter attempt any details of her interesting life. Suffice it to say the gospel was the power of God unto salvation to her. It found her a heathen devotee, serving day and night the idols of her country, and made of her a very daughter of Pharaoh, who never ceased, to her latest breath, to speak of the Saviour to her country women, and commend to them the salvation she had found in Christ. She was widely known and sincerely respected in mission circles, and her type of Christian piety will long endure to impress the young women whom she was indefatigable in trying to lead forward in the work to which she had so earnestly devoted the last years of her life. She died at Nanking, some sixteen miles from Shanghai, while she had gone in her capacity of bible woman; and just before her death, which was rather sudden, she spoke of her approaching departure with joy akin to rapture, for said she, I have had a vision of the "happy land," and I am going there. I know that my Redeemer lives now, and tells me so. This was her strong fortress, and she died happy in that consciousness. Her life and death, triumphant as they were, constitute one of the strongest possible pleas for the gospel in China, and when such women are multiplied here, and the homes and families of this idolatrous nation through them become accessible to the gospel, the progress of Christianity will be rapid and enduring.

Woman's work for women has in China a vast and hopeful field, and every year the outlook in this direction extends and brightens. Confucianism still says, Mold the country and dictates its manners, but women mould its character and keep it idolatrous. Confucius ignored the heart and exalted the intellect. Women are all heart, have no sympathy with Confucianism, mix it with them. Christianity is what they need, and when it gets access to their hearts they will keep it. To check Confucianism and exalt the women of this nation is reserved for Christianity. Here there is work for your strongest men and your most devoted women.—Western Christian Advocate.

Vanderbilt University.

The next session of Vanderbilt University begins September 1, 1879. The opening sermon will be preached the day before, Sunday, August 31. We are happy to state that it is to be preached by that eminent divine, the Rev. Dr. Wadsworth, presiding elder of the Mobile district. The doctor has troops of friends in Nashville, who will be glad to see and hear their old pastor. A large attendance of students is expected the next session. Nashville is very healthful, and bids fair to remain so. The law department opens at the same time with the academic and biblical. Its prospects are good. The philosophical lectures begin at the same time. The medical department (which has the prospects, and also the dental, open October 1. The lectures in philosophy and criticism also begin October 1. Candidates for the biblical department must bring their license and recommendation. For particulars see the Register, which will be sent to all applicants.

THE REPENTANT SINNER TO THE SAVIOUR.

BY TRANSIENT.

With a prayer-lifted hand with a tear-streaming eye,
Do I turn me, to Thee, O Thou Saviour divine!
All comfort, all good, and all blessings are Thine.

All light for Thy own through the mazes of life,
All support in temptations and Christianly strife,
And all hope ever-abiding, all peace ever rife.

And Heaven, more than fancy and thought have e'er told,
Ever new, everlasting—eye scarce will unfold
Even the blush of its bliss ere the cycles grow old.

And they tell me no soul but is welcome to Thee,
And bright in Thy Scripture the lesson I see—
But oh, no! Shall receive me, a sinner like me?

Me—the sallow votary of sin and the world!
Me—an arm where the wicked their flag have unfurled!
Me—a voice where their challenge to God they have hurled!

As Thou hadest the soul be as loveliness rare,
And the all-leaf of corruption as infancy fair,
And the blister of death as the life-breathing air,

Will Thou bid them be true these wild footsteps of mine?
These passions be fires to furnish Thy shrine?
This will be the shining reflection of Thine!

To me—reft of the earth—will Thou open the skies,
In the light of Thy presence with angels to rise,
The ineffable joys of Heaven my prize?

O all-gracious, all kindly, all merciful Three!
Will Thou own me, Thy ransomed, Thy penitent now?
Low, low at the foot of Thy cross do I bow.

All Thy tasks are but joys that I gladly embrace;
All Thy strokes are but signs where Thy mercy I trace;
All the earth is my home in the cheer of Thy grace.

Reform Needed.

Mr Editor: In the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and especially in the Louisiana Conference, we need living witnesses of the power of Jesus' blood to cleanse from all sin, and who will boldly tell what the Lord has done for them. When we are admitted into full connection we solemnly assert that "we expect to be made perfect in love in this life," and, not only so, but that we are groaning after it. Now, dear brethren, if we are intelligently groaning to be made perfect in love in this life, surely you would not have stood groaning before the gracious Redeemer all this time, in full expectation, without realizing perfect love. Now, above others, a minister is a witness for Jesus. The Lord wants you, brother, to testify in no uncertain words what He has done for you in the redemption of your soul. Now we have numbers of ministers in our connection who have been in regular work for ten, fifteen and twenty years, in giving in their testimony for Christ in experience never testify to perfect love, but simply to pardon of sins. Mr Watson, in his Institutes of Christianity, chapter 29 page 611, says: That a distinction exists between a regenerate state, and a state of entire and perfect holiness, will be generally allowed. He says, further, on page 614, same chapter: Not only the time, but the manner also, of our sanctification, has been matter of controversy, some contending that all attainable degrees of it are acquired by the process of gradual mortification and acquisition of holy habits, others alledging it to be instantaneous, and the fruit of an act of faith in the divine promises. That the regeneration which accompanies justification is a large approach to this state of perfected holiness, and that all dying to sin, and all growing in grace, advances us nearer this point of entire sanctity, is obvious; that on these points there can be no reasonable dispute. But they are not all inconsistent with a more instantaneous work, when the depth of our natural depravity being more painfully felt we plead in faith the accomplishment of the promises of God. The great question to be settled is whether the deliverance sighed after be held out to us in the promises as a present blessing. And, from what has been already said, there appears no ground to doubt this, since no small violence would be offered to the passages of Scripture already quoted, as well as to many others by the opposite opinion. All the promises of God which are not expressly, or from their order referred to future time, are objects of present trust, and, their fulfillment now is made conditional only upon our faith. They cannot, therefore, be pleaded in our prayers with an entire reliance upon the truth of God in vain. The general promise that we shall receive "all things whatsoever we ask in prayer believing," comprehends, of course, "all things" suited to our case, which God has engaged to bestow; and, if entire renewal of our nature be included in the number without any limitation of time, except in that in which we ask it in faith, then to this faith shall the promises of entire sanctification be given, which, in the nature of the case, supposes an instantaneous work immediately following upon our entire unwavering faith.

Now, according to our own vows, and also Mr. Watson's Institutes of Christianity, which all these dear brethren study and indorse, they are living willingly, and consequently at ease in Zion, below their privileges in the gospel of Christ. Hence there is failure in the work of the professed traveling ministry. I say professed, because it is well known that on account of a lack of perfect faith in God's promises many of our brethren engage in some worldly business for support, and are regular ministers only in name, and hence they cannot go anywhere the Bishop, in his godly judgment, may see fit to send them. Another result of their failure to seek entire holiness is in their social mingling (it is not pastoral visiting.) They tell yarns and anecdotes, and altogether fail to impress the world that they are embassadors for Christ, and that they are come in Christ's stead. Was the Master holy? Then it is enough for the servant that he be as his Lord. Let us pray for a reform in the ministry.

Truly yours,

PHILIP ALLEN.

"Under a Juniper Tree."

The prophet of Gilead stood alone on Mount Carmel—yet not alone, for God was with him. Ahab and his court, and the priests and the chief men, were against him, while the multitude was ready to float with the strongest current. In this contest with the priests of Baal God vindicated his honor, showed his pre-eminence, and saved his prophet's life. It doubtless seemed to Elijah a glorious triumph of his cause. For people, schooled to believe they must not think for themselves in matters of religion, like the weather-cock that turns with the wind, declared in favor of Elijah's God. After years of labor, and prayer, and waiting, the old prophet now rejoices in the hope of the speedy reformation of Israel. But the grand display of divine power upon Mount Carmel did not lead the opposers of God to repentance. Ahab had sold himself to do evil, and the covetous hands of Jezebel, his queen, were reeking with the blood of Naboth. Instead of being brought to repentance, the proud and relentless Jezebel was enraged to desperation. She utters a threat, and Elijah flies for his life. The man who stood undaunted before a multitude that had sought for three years to deliver him to death, who challenged eight hundred and fifty haughty priests to controvert their religion, who showed himself to the king, seeking his life, could not stand before the fierceness of this woman's resentment. How strange, how sad. In the darkness of the night the man of God, weary and dispirited, throws himself under a juniper tree, and exclaims: "It is enough; let me die."

In like manner, there are times in the history of many who are zealous for the Lord of hosts when they weary in well-doing, and repine that the wheels of reformation move not, unless it be backward. In a fit of despondency, one says: "I can do no more. This is the hour of Satan and the power of darkness. Oh, that I had the wings of a dove; for then would I fly away and be at rest. I have had enough of life with its vain hopes and bitter disappointments. Let me die in a solitary place, away from the follies and crimes and miseries of my people."

So prayed the greatest of the prophets, and so many who work and suffer for Christ, in seasons of trial and despair, would shun the dark and dread realities of life. We point those we love to the Saviour of sinners. But, through the pride of their countenance, they will not seek God, for God is not in all their thoughts. They are filled with all unrighteousness. We could wish that our "head were waters and our eyes a fountain of tears." "For there is none that seeketh after God. They are all gone out of the way. There is no fear of God before their eyes." Our prayers and tears and warnings will avail them nothing; for, like Ahab, they are "sold under sin."

How the Christian's heart sinks when he sees the stream of sin and folly rise and swell, and sweep in its devastating course over the fairest fields of virtue and purity and godliness, and lash with its filth and scum the strongholds of Immanuel's kingdom, till they seem to be deserted and giving way. The murky and chilling vapor closes in upon his own soul, and damps down its very flame to smoke.

But it is not always thus. "What doest thou here, Elijah?" And he said: "I have been very jealous for the Lord of hosts; for the children of Israel have forsaken thy covenant, thrown down thine altars, and slain thy prophets, and I, I only, am left, and they seek my life." And here the Lord taught the great prophet one lesson that all need to learn. The Lord caused him to stand upon a mountain, and, as he passed by, a great wind rent the mountains. Then followed an earthquake and fire. But the Lord was not in the wind, or earthquake, or fire. "After the fire a still small voice said to Elijah again: "What doest thou here?" The silent, working forces of God's Spirit are not in tempests and commotions and fires. These are emblems of His wrath.

The manifestations of God's glory and power are occasional and exceptional. The still small voice of redeeming love is the ordinary and effectual means of reforming and saving men. And the Saviour's dying love can be successfully presented only by those whose hearts are burdened and breaking with the weight of perishing souls. Christ himself conquered only when His soul was sorrowful, even to death, and the Roman spear cleft His side. This is the power that will draw men to God, and subdue their stubborn wills.

Under a juniper tree! Make it a blessing! It will give you greater spiritual power. No man is truly eloquent whose heart has not been mellowed by sorrow. Stay in the wilderness of despair no longer than you learn this lesson. Elijah had more power with God after he heard the still, small voice in his lonely cave, than when fire from heaven consumed the burnt sacrifice upon Mount Carmel.

Port Gibson Collegiate Academy, and Other Things.

Mr. Editor: The past week has been one of unusual interest with us at Port Gibson. One District Conference, two Quarterly Conferences, and commencement occasion, all within seven days. Our District Conference convened here on the third instant. The attendance was good, but not so large as expected. Leaving it to others to furnish you with general statistics, I will merely add the much-used phrase: "Reports generally good, and outlook encouraging." The Fayette Quarterly Conference held an adjourned session here on the fifth instant, when Aleck, son of Dr. W. H. Watkins, was licensed to preach. On the Monday following was held the third Quarterly Conference of this station. During this time the examination and commencement exercises of the Port Gibson Collegiate Academy were going on. This was up to similar occasions I have witnessed. The examination was highly satisfactory, while the essays, recitations and compositions would have done credit to any rostrum. The address delivered by the Rev. C. B. Galloway excelled in appropriateness, elegance and eloquence, while the commencement sermon by the Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt was full of thought and wholesome instruction. The pupils enjoyed greatly the ice-cream festival given by lamp-light amid the beautiful grove surrounding the college, which re-echoed with innocent merriment and string music discoursed by the home brass band. The college buildings are brick, commodious, comfortable, and well situated. After close observation, for six months or more, I have come to the conclusion that a better, regulated and a more comfortable school, especially for boarders, will be hard to find. Port Gibson, the town in which the college is situated, is surrounded by a rich farming country, with a population of refined and intelligent people. The cars run regularly from the river at Grand Gulf to our town, and from Natchez to Martin, from which our town can be reached by stage in an eight or ten-mile drive.

The Ladies' Aid Society of our church have just made the last payment on the parsonage, making a total cost of $2500 for house and grounds, besides what they have spent in putting the whole in good repair. Our ladies truly deserve much credit for thus furnishing the church with one of the most comfortable parsonages in the Conference.

Upon the return of the pastor, after an absence of six weeks, on account of ill health, he was surprised by a pound party, during which the company was refreshed with ice-cream, etc., and the pantry was replenished with provisions.

Comments on a Report.

Mr. Editor: Will I be allowed to criticize, in a Christian spirit, the report of the last District Conference held at Marianna, Fla.?

Bro. C. B. Anderson reports as follows: "Some pastors report spiritual condition good, and everything else bad; others report everything bad, at a low ebb, while others report medium. The support of the ministry up to date has been very meager, viz.: Calhoun circuit, $68 60; Greenwood circuit, $90; Holmes' Valley circuit, $24 40; Geneva circuit, $11 40; Big Creek circuit, $14.12; Gordon circuit, $30; Cerro Gordo mission, $8 65; Chipolo mission —; Freeport station, $63; Marianna station, $125; district paid presiding elder, $39 64; total, $374 81."

The report shows that this district has been established nearly fifty years, and yet the average pay to the pastors the present year is only $33 51, and $39 64 to the presiding elder.

I sometimes think such reports ought not to be published, but we are, however, commanded to let our light shine." Are we not in danger of denying Christ by refusing or neglecting to provide for his ministers? "I was an hungered, and ye gave Me no meat; I was naked, and ye clothed Me not," etc. We may be guilty of denying Christ without cutting off a soldier's ear, or waiting for the cock to crow.

The report is a bad one for the Marianna district. Ten faithful pastors, and one of our best presiding elders, have been compelled to live on $374.81 for more than six months, and yet we are told in this report that the district is alive upon the subject of building parsonages. The church feels much interest throughout her entire borders upon the parsonage question, and doubtless will be glad to know how the district can build parsonages with its finances in such a condition. What use is a parsonage to a Methodist preacher, with nothing to put in it except children? What use would we have for a flour barrel with no flour in it? Perhaps they have young men as pastors on the Marianna district, or the brethren may be engaged in the timber business, and may be waiting for a good chance to sell before they pay the Lord what they owe him.

There is, perhaps, one saving clause in Bro. Anderson's report. He says: "At the closing of the Conference several were soundly converted, and the entire church was made shouting happy." We may expect good fruits from such results.

Mr. Editor, come to our District Conference at Troy next summer, and our pastor, Bro. S. A. Pilley, will, no doubt, show you our nice new parsonage now in process of completion.

Obituaries.

God, with His own hand, has this year plucked a cluster of choice souls from the vine in this part of his vineyard, Freeport, Fla.

Mrs. Eliza Davis, consort of C. W. Davis, was born June 26, 1833, and died March 18, 1879, of consumption. It was my privilege to visit this good woman frequently. I always found Christ and the New Testament her daily companion. When I first met her she was in bed, around which I stood when she breathed her last. The morning she died, nearly unable to speak she uttered my name. I was immediately sent for, but arrived to hear her speak no more, but I witness a scene I can never forget. Her only son placed his arms around the neck of his dying mother and said: "My dear mother, I'll meet you in that better world." His mother looked up, as it to beckon him on. Her pulse ceased to beat, breath nearly stopped, when her weeping husband said to me, "Bro. A., pray God to receive her spirit." While we were kneeling in prayer around the throne of God on earth her spirit winged its flight to its eternal destiny, to bow around His throne on high, where they cry: "Holy, holy, holy." It seemed that the very air was full of angelic music.

Miss Rebecca White was born August 15, 1816 was married to James A. Gholston June 8, 1837 and died July 7, 1879, with paralysis of the throat and tongue. She was a true follower of Christ for half a century. She suffered great pain, but patiently bore it all, as one who believed that "in every condition, in sickness, in health," God's grace was sufficient for her. She left several children who are journeying toward the great city. She lived a Christian and died triumphing, going down to old age she would, like a ripe sheaf, be borne in the bosom of her great Shepherd.

Mrs. Ann Scoggin died in February, 1879, with pneumonia, in the age of thirty years. She leaves a husband and infant three. Her illness being of a short duration, and living in the country, I failed to see her before her death. Friends say that she died in faith, triumphing in the hope of the glory of God. Precious are the death of His saints.

Mrs. Emma Evans, wife of James Evans, and daughter of Capt. N. and Mrs. Sarah Baker, of this place, was born July 1, 1854, and died March 25, 1879, with consumption. She leaves a husband and two children. She was a consistent and devoted member of the church only three years, and lived consistently to the hour of her departure. I visited her very often, and always found her longing for suffering, which were great, with patience and godly fear. She was just in the bloom of womanhood, and clung to life. She wanted to live. But God said: "Come to me," and she went without a murmur. She listened to her arms are and her devoted mother's neck, and said: "My dear mamma, it is hard for me to leave my little children, but, if God will it, all is right." And, while human arms were around the mother's neck her spirit, in Heavenly arms, was tenderly embraced, and made to rest upon the bosom of her God.

Miss Willis, twenty-two years of age, died on Sunday, April 20 1879. This young lady being absent for some time on account of bad health, had returned to this community but a few days previous to her death. Her departure was a sudden one. In the spring time of life God took her to himself. "The maid is not dead, but sleepeth."

Mrs. Henrietta Reeves died May 14, 1879, leaving husband and five children. She was a faithful Christian twenty-five years prior to her death. She beautifully exemplified the spirit of Christ in loving all good Christian people. She was ever hopeful in her disappointments, and sweetly patient in all her affliction. Manifesting a mother's tenderness, she desired to live only to train her children for God. She was a loving, faithful wife, a good and careful mother, and a true and generous friend. Her memory will be as "ointment poured forth" upon her husband and his dear motherless children. A life of such genuine, earnest piety will be followed by heavenly fruition.

Mrs. Fanny McClellan went from earth to heaven March 2, 1879. She died of consumption after a protracted and painful illness. She leaves a husband and seven children. Her sufferings were indescribable. They were fought. I have made her a good woman. Her suffering been needed for the purpose. She was good before. Without affliction. But God chose to try her. She "came up through great affliction. She was one of the purest, noblest Christian women I have ever known. I visited her nearly every day for two months, and always received at her bedside spiritual strength. Her affliction was a savor of life to my soul. I always wished for the hour to come for me to visit her. On one occasion near midnight while the rain was falling in torrents, she sent for me. I hastened to her side. As I entered her room I saw signs of great pain, but a face all aglow with heavenly light. She said: "They think here that I am afraid to die, but I am not. I only sent for you to talk with you and to tell you that I am not afraid to die. All things in Christ are ready now." She said: "I may die to night, and I may not, just as God wills. If it be His will for me to die, I'm willing, or, if He wills for me to suffer longer, I'm willing to do it without a murmur, or, if it be His will for me to die to-night, I am willing." Her desire to please God was as perfect as I ever knew. She would frequently say: "Thy will, and not mine, be done." Oftimes, while singing and praying with this dying saint, she would get shouting happy, and with a weak voice which sounded like music in the distance, she would give praise to God. After an affectionate farewell her soul took its exit for the Paradise of God.

William Thomas, son of Thomas B. and Bell McCullough, died in Pensacola, March 13, 1879, where his mother had carried him for medical treatment. Another tie is loosed from earth, and a new hope is born in heaven. Another treasure is taken away and placed on high to allure stricken ones thither.

J. B. ANDERSON.

Stuart Ashby Jones, aged six-teen years and eleven months, son of the late Rev. Richard and Mrs. Asenath Foster Jones, died at Lake Charles, La., on July 28. Very often, when so young a person as Ashby is taken from this life, there is not much to recount which would prove of real benefit to the world, or remain as a lasting bequest to the young, especially to those with whom there has been constant association and friendship. It is a pleasure to say, that in this dear boy's life, there is so much of goodness, purity and truth, that it is more than a pleasure, it is a duty, to help others by showing what religion can do for the young. Though always a pleasant, kind-hearted boy, truthful, obliging and courteous, the finest traits of Ashby's character were not developed until religion had become a part of his daily life. He was converted at the seashore camp-meeting held in 1878. He joined the Methodist Church as soon as he returned home to New Orleans, and from that time until God took him home to Himself, he was a faithful, earnest Bible-reading young Christian, never ashamed of his religion, but living it, in the midst of a busy life, in a city full of temptations; he was a constant attendant at Sunday-school, church and prayer meetings, in one loved the hymns and songs of the church more than he. Though full of life and energy, and one of the brightest and merriest of boys, enjoying boyish amusements as heartily as possible, he allowed nothing to interfere with the performance of his religious duties, and where pri-ylege or duty were involved, there was no indecision. I think his life certainly proved to his young friends that religion can be a happy, cheerful, joyous thing. Three months before his death, he left New Orleans to go into the piney woods of Lake Charles, and here he felt, among perfect strangers, the need of a pure, blameless Christ as his life was in keeping all as upright, earnest, diligent disciples, serving the Lord; and what wonder when he sickened, that nearly every one who had met him, and even those who scarcely knew him at all, watched anxiously every fluctuation of the disease, and prattled hope to nurse, himself and doctor, for him so many good friends are expected to do, and when he died, many came to do him honor and weep over the dear young stranger who had made them love him, for ages his own beautiful life. During his pain-full illness he was quiet and calm, never a fear of death, but perfect trust in Christ. He wanted to live, because he was young and life was pleasant and for the love him, but he said God's will was best, and he could give up all for Christ's sake. And died with these words on his lips: "I give up for Christ's sake." Though in losing Ashby, for those who loved him, life has been robbed of much that is sweet and precious, that our hearts are full of sadness, we can but realize in part, that his dear young feet will never be worn or tired with life's journey, and his warm, loving heart will never know a sorrow, while it is freed with mingles its happy songs of praise with those of his dear father and mother, to the Saviour who lived and redeemed him, in the land where trials and partings are unknown.

"AUNT NELLIE."

Sister Mary Gibbs was born in Dallas co. Ala., December 19, 1821 and died at her home in Sabine parish, La., June 14, 1879. Sister Gibbs professed faith in Christ, and joined the Methodist Church at Pea Ridge Church, Alabama years ago, when quite young, she was married, May 16, 1841, to J. M. Gibbs, who still survives her. They moved to Louisiana the same year they were married, settled near this place (Pleasant Hill), where they have lived and prospered ever since. Their names appear with the few who organized the first Methodist Church among this community. Sister Gibbs has ever lived and practiced the religion she professed when young; she loved the church, "attended upon its ordinances and supported its institutions."

During the last years of her life she suffered as but few are called upon to suffer in this life. About four years ago cancer or lupus appeared on her face which reminded her, and those about her, of a terrible, that the end was near. She was ready to meet it, no special preparation was necessary in her case, to speaking to me of her early conversion, she said she had never doubted it, she had no doubts or fears as to the future as it had always been the one great object of her life to live a consistent Christian. said that God had been very good to her in permitting her to live to see all her children saved) able to care for themselves, regretted that some of them had never professed religion, but he was glad that God would, ere long, call them out by them. She was not entirely without hope of at least a partial recovery, until about six months before her death. At one time she told me that nothing could relieve her suffering but death, and that she was contented to suffer and to await the pleasure of the Lord.

It was my privilege to visit her frequently during the last several months of her illness. She never murmured or complained, but often, while singing and praying with her, she would rejoice and praise God. He was the preacher's friend, and her home a preacher's home. While exhorting her children to meet her in heaven, she told them to always open their doors to the ministers of the gospel.

Mrs. Eliza M. White, (nee Kenny,) relict of Benjamin R. White, was born in South Carolina, May 17, 1804. When very young her parents removed to Williamson county, Tenn. She professed religion in her girlhood, and was a consistent, exemplary Christian. She was married to Benjamin R. White, August 8, 1822. They lived happily together nearly fifty-two years, and were the parents of nine children, all of whom survive save one Rev. Joseph E. White. I say that my mother was a model Christian is sufficient, but for the encouragement of mothers I would specify. She "looked well to the household," she admonished, fed faithfully to their wants, spiritually and temporally; she raised her children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord," always arranging for them to attend Sunday-school, and every other means of grace possible; she defended them immorally in any of their forms, and held up truth, virtue and holiness as watch-words for her children. Often have I witnessed the commingling of her prayers and tears in our behalf, and while she lived I felt there is one that holds me up daily before the throne. She gave us all to the church, and best of her sons in the ministry. Rev. J. E. White, for many years a member of the Tennessee Conference; Rev. T. B. White, of the Columbia Conference, and Revs. R. F. and H. C. White, of the Louisiana Conference. Mother's home was always a home for the ministers.

She was naturally of a brilliant mind, but after my father's death, which occurred on the thirtieth of December, 1873, she was not the same mentally. She seemed to wish to depart, if it were the Master's will, as she had nothing now to live for. Often she did not know her own children. When interrogated concerning the dealings of God with her heart, or when the Scriptures were read in her hearing, or hymns sung, she would be perfectly rational and would often shout the praises of God aloud. Her last hours were calm, peaceful and bright. She seemed to know her time for departure was at hand. One remarked, at her bedside, as she was launching out on the chilly tide, "Grandma will soon meet grandpa and Uncle Jim." She smilingly assented, and gently fell asleep. Thus our dear mother passed away on the fourth of September, 1878, at the residence of her youngest daughter, Mrs. M. M. Hayes, in Opelousas, La. Peace only rest, our darling mother, and may we all meet "beyond the river."

MARY A. DAVIS.

Mrs Fanny A. Boswell, wife of Mr. Willi m H. Boswell and daughter of Mr. Burrell J. and Mrs. C. E. Fort, died near Summerfield, Ala., August 2, 1879, in the forty-ninth year of her age, after a painful illness.

The deceased was born near Marion Junction, Dallas county, Ala., February 14, 1831. Besides her surviving husband, she has left three sons and one daughter. She connected herself with the Cumberland Church in 1852, and removing to Selma, Ala., joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1867, of which she was a consistent and faithful member when she died. She loved and enjoyed the service of the sanctuary, and often regretted that the distance of her residence deprived her to a great extent of this privilege.

She was a true and loving wife, a kind and devoted mother, and table, genial and pleasant toward all who entered her household, esteemed and beloved by all who knew her.

During her last illness she expressed strong and abiding faith in her Saviour, manifested her resignation, and assured her willingness to do that were the will of God. She left solemn injunctions, and her dying counsel to her children to live in the service of God and so live and die, that they might be united again, an unbroken family, in heaven.

Mr. Matthew Bowman was born October 26, A. D. 1801, in Sumter district, S. C., and died July 15, A. D. 1879, in Salt Sabine county, Texas. Some of my first recollections are of this good man, and they are pleasing recollections. He lived for a number of years in East Feliciana parish, where he remove to Morehouse parish just prior to the war. About five or six years ago he removed to San Saba county, Texas, where he ended his earthly pilgrimage.

Uncle Matt Bowman possessed some singularities traits of character, and they brightened every circle about him. He believed in the moral law as a man's rule of conduct, and exhibited that faith by his works. I never knew a man of stricter integrity in dealings with others. He was twice married, and his family bears testimony to the genuineness of his social relations and duties. He lived to the age of seventy-nine years, but in the strength was labor and sorrow. Reduced from all ease to poverty, his old age was spent in labor for a support. There were sorrows, too, for he was almost totally blind during the last eighteen months. But he was a professed Christian hope in my recollection, and the gracious aid of the Lord enabled him to hold fast until the end. His last hours were cheered and brightened by the presence and ministrations of his pastor, to whom he said that he had no doubts about his ever entering the saints' rest. A day or two before, he requested his daughter to write for the undersigned to prepare a notice of my death for the Advocate, so that my friends may know I died in the faith; not that he can write any epitaph for me only the blood of Jesus cleanseth from all sin. Oh, blessed religion, how it abides with us in the darkness of death! May all his acquaintances who read this imperfect sketch imitate his virtues.

Sister Eliza G. Brown, wife of Thos. Brown, and daughter of Wm. and Sarah Waugham, died, in Washington county, Ala., July 14, 1879. The subject of this memoir was born in Macon county, Ga., September 5, 1847. She moved with her father to Henry county, Ala., in early life, and lived there until the year 1865, when her father moved to Washington county, Ala. In April, 1871, she was joined in wedlock to Thos. Brown, with whom she lived in peace and comfort until God in His wisdom saw fit to call her to her reward on high. Sister Brown connected herself to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the year 1870, and ever remained faithful to her vow as a member of the church of God. Sister Brown has been in failing health for several years, and was a great sufferer. Amid all other infirmities I have told she endured not. Those who stood by her dying bed witnessed to me that she rested sweetly and quietly to sleep in the arms of Him in whom she had trusted.

In the death of Sister Brown we feel that we have sustained an irreparable loss. In every relation of life she characterized the true Christian. As a child she was obedient, and always thought she could best honor her parents by living a devoted Christian. As a wife she was kind and affectionate, ever doing what she thought would comply with the wishes of her husband. We miss her in all of her relations.

Resolutions adopted by the Sabbath-school of the East Selma Methodist Church, South, Alabama.

Whereas, God in the dispensation of His providence has deemed it best to call from our midst our esteemed Sister Robert Keaton,

Be it resolved, That in the decease of Mrs. Rachel Keaton our Sabbath-school has lost one of its most efficient, valued and active members, the church one of its zealous supporters, and the community at large one of its most exemplary Christian workers and kindest friends, whose memory as such will be treasured by all who had the privilege of knowing her.

Be it resolved, That as sincere sympathy as we can offer we tender to the bereaved husband, the sorrowing children and relatives a copy hereof to be published in the New Orleans Christian Advocate with request for publication.

Sister Julia Ann O'Donnel, daughter of Thomas and Margaret Algy, departed this life at seven o'clock, July 31, 1879. Her sufferings were intense, yet she bore them with Christian patience. She was born in Jackson parish, La., in the year 1861, and was married to Mr. Patrick O'Donnel December 31, 1878.

Sister O'Donnel was a member of our church since an early date in her life, and ever since lived an exemplary Christian life. Her last words were to her mother and husband, asking them to go home with her to Jesus. May God comfort the hearts of the bereaved ones.

JAS. M. JAMES.

After a long and painful illness of several months, during which time she manifested all the patience of the true believer in Jesus Christ, Sister Lucy Morgan took her departure for the "House not made with hands, eternal in the heavens," in Clinton, La., August 1, 1879, aged sixty-nine years, eight months and fifteen days. The fight fought, the race run, the faith kept; the crown won. Patience had its perfect work.

PASTOR.

Willie B. Mellon, son of Prof. S. S. Mellon, died at Mt. Sterling, Ala., August 15, 1879, at five o'clock, about two months and he was converted and joined the church, at that time he was in good health. His death was a victory over the last enemy. He was not quite fifteen years of age, but was a youth of excellent mind, and well educated.

W. B. WILEY.

Robbie Nicola McVoy, son of Rev. A. D. and Anna D. McVoy, died at Smithfield, Ala., July 2, aged seven months and twenty days. Robbie was a little, sweet child. He came and stayed on earth while he went to heaven.

Lowry Wist, youngest son of William P. and Annie Beard, aged one year and eleven months, died near Cedar Mound, Denton county, Texas, June 14, 1879. God loved him best, and took him to His fold. Boys,

LOOKING ONWARD.

BY ANNIE LAURIE.

All life's brightness comes not in the sunshine,
Or its sweetness all in summer flowers;
Deepest joy is not in outward seeming,
Truest rest is not in empty hours.

If the shadows deepen just before us,
Not a cloud but is with silver lined,
Though we cannot see the waiting blessing,
While our downcast eyes with tears are blind.

Hours, for which we wait with anxious longing,
Come and go,—nor bring the peace we sought,
And we almost murmur in our weakness
That our asking has been all for naught.

Seeming to forget the tender kindness
Of the Hand that leads along the way,
Turning all our sighing into singing,
Changing all our darkness into day.

God, who notes the growing of the lilies,
And who even marks the sparrow's fall,
Will not leave His chosen in the darkness,
Nor will fail to hear their faintest call.

For He knows the path His children journey,
No unmeaning sorrow will He send,
Known to Him is every weary footstep,
Wise, from the beginning, see the end.

If we will but trust His loving kindness,
If we do but clasp His outstretched hand,
Safe through life—its sunshine and its shadow—
He will lead us to the better land.

Advancement in Religion.

BY WAYLAND HOYT, D. D.

Concerning advancement in religion, I have learned three lessons from the story of the Magi seeking the infant Christ. First, God is true to His own Word. His word is something you can rest on, as men may stand on granite.

It is in one of what are called the minor prophets that the prediction of the birth of Christ is to be found. The prophetic word was uttered seven hundred years before the birth took place. God did not forget that word. Christ was born in Bethlehem. More than that—the mightiest earthly power was laid under tribute, that this word might be kept to the last letter. Mary, the Virgin, was at Nazareth, a village of Galilee; but she was brought to Bethlehem in Judea, and there the Lord was born. And how? Cæsar Augustus was a link in the chain of that fulfillment. He issued a decree of universal taxing. This decree compelled the visit of Mary thither. Even Augustus, on the world's topmost throne, must lend his aid, though all unwittingly, to the accurate keeping of the Divine promise. God's word is a sure word.

Now it is right to reason from a certainty of the Divine word here to the certainty of it in other places. When God says that "unto the upright there ariseth light in the darkness," when we are told that "he that is willing to do His will shall know of the doctrine," we may be certain that behind such utterances as well there is the unchangeable veracity of God. If we but yield our hearts and lives to such divine direction, we must get on into the shining. He who so carefully kept that word concerning the birth of Jesus, will keep also His other words.

This is the second lesson: Advancement in religion is not altogether dependent upon external advantages. We would say that the likeliest man in all Judea to find the Lord would be Herod, the king. He need take no long journey as the Magi must. He was in Jerusalem, and Bethlehem was but six miles distant. Before him were the Scriptures, pointing, through all their prophecy, to this great advent. Besides, he could consult learned doctors of the law, who knew concerning what they spake. Herod held all possible advantage in his grasp, and yet Herod did not find Jesus. The Magi found him. External advantages are not needful to advancement in religion. People often think they are. How many times they say: "If I were but a person of more leisure; if only I were not driven quite so much by work; if I were not tangled in such perplexities or burdened with such duties. If I were a minister; if I had an hour now and then for retirement and meditation; then I might get on into the shining. But it is impossible to expect one like me to do it. From Monday morning to Saturday night I am driven as balls are from a cannon. I have hardly time to pray—scarcely time to think. Everything is against me. Other men can be religious. I cannot." But Herod held all these advantages in his hand, and did not find the Lord. The Magi found him. It is not on what we call external advantage that advancement in religion hangs.

This is the third lesson: On what then does progress into the shining depend? Here is the answer: "Unto the upright there ariseth light in the darkness." This uprightness includes two things: resolute setting of one's soul toward the light, and resolute using of all the light vouchsafed. That is to say, we need absolute and utter self-surrender to the light we have. See these Magi. They came from the East, five months' journey from Jerusalem, following the shining in the sky, hoping it to be the augury of the Messiah. They saw that light, and yielded themselves to it. And, though the radiance passed out of the heavens for a time, still did they surrender themselves to its memory, and went on whither it had seemed to point. Through all that five months' journey, over desert places and along rough and rocky ways, they followed the gleaming, surrendering to it, and using the light they had. From Jerusalem they went forth to Bethlehem, and then again the light shone out; and this added light they used, utterly determined and utterly sincere, with faces set toward the tip-ting of the promised Christ. "Unto the upright there ariseth light in the darkness." To those who, following the light they have, thus go on in using it; the dimer light shall pass into a brighter, and that into a light more radiant still, until at last they, with the Magi, fall before the very presence of the Lord.—Standard.

Essentials in Christianity.

And when all is said, what a diminutive notion these Boston saints must have, of the ideal of Christian manhood. The typical Christian in their estimation is a man who does not smoke nor drink wine, nor go to the theater nor dance, nor play at cards. When they have found a man who does none of these things they have found their model. Not only is their "consecration" wholly a negative thing, it is limited to the pettiest negations. Just think of it brethren! You can keep this solemn five-fold pledge of yours with all fidelity, and yet break every one of the ten commandments. Very likely some of you are breaking a good share of them every day you live. "We do desire and will consecrate ourselves by putting away every conscious evil within us," you say. And then you go on to particularize the evils that you will put away, and the only ones that your minds rest upon are those five mentioned above, to not one of which, probably, you are or ever were addicted. These are other people's sins, not yours. When you had written down this catalogue, and mailed all these circulars, did you not go up to the temple and stand and pray thus with yourselves: "Lord, we thank thee that we are not as other men are." In all sincerity, brethren, if you had really wanted to consecrate yourselves, "by putting away every conscious evil," do you not suppose that you would have found some sins of your own to put away, far more heinous than any of these.

Have you no other gods before Jehovah? Your money, your family, your ambitions—do you not exalt them above Him? Some sectarians put their sects before Jehovah. Men whom they cannot deny to be workers with God they will not suffer to work for their sect. Is there no "conscious evil" of this sort for you to put away?

Do you not sometimes steal? Cheating is stealing. Do you not sometimes kill? Hatred is murder. And many a man who has been as rigid as you are in the keeping of your five commandments, has been so hard and merciless in his treatment of his work people, that they or their children have died by slow starvation. Are there no sins of extortion for you to repent of? In your heart are there not lurking demons of impure desire? Do you never bear false witness against your neighbors, never speak unfair and censorious words, for example, about those who dance, or smoke or play cards? Do not envy and jealousy and wrath and uncharitableness still find a home in your hearts? If all or any of these things are true of you, then it would seem that you have business on hand so urgent that it might well detain you from preaching a crusade against cards and dancing. Solemnly, now, are not the sins that you are inclined to a great deal worse than these you mention, which you have no mind to?—Sunday Afternoon.

A Strange Funeral Sermon.

The deceased had long been renowned throughout that part of the country for his wickedness. His intellectual abilities were of no mean order; his property was considerable, and he had belonged to a highly respectable family—advantages which he used most assiduously in the service of his master. By the practice of every kind of dissipation he had achieved an evil notoriety, and gloried in being considered the most fascinating and dangerous roué in the country. This being so, his associates resolved upon giving him a funeral worthy of his reputation.

As one means of insuring this, they invited one of the most eminent Presbyterian ministers in the region to deliver the funeral discourse. To the surprise of many, after some little hesitation, he consented. On the day and at the hour appointed the country church was crowded to overflowing by an assembly composed of the relatives, friends and companions of the deceased, together with a mixed multitude drawn from far and near by curiosity to hear what such a minister could find to say of such a man.

Punctual to the moment the tall form of Rev. Dr. ascended the pulpit, and the service began. There was first the reading of the Scriptures; then followed a prayer, subdued and tender, for the family and relatives of the deceased. But the announcement of the text fell like a clap of thunder upon the assembly. It was from Luke xvi, 23: "And in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torment." The sermon was a most pungent and powerful exhibition of the character, course and end of a wicked man. It held the assembly spell-bound to the very last word; but there was in it not a single direct allusion to the person whose obsequies they had come there to celebrate.

In silence and in deep solemnity the congregation dispersed after the sermon was finished. Some were indignant, but the attempt to excite odium against the preacher was a failure. It was generally thought that in what he had done he was governed by a sense of duty. He was said to have stated afterward that when he was invited to preach on that occasion he had determined to decline, but, in answer to prayer, received a message, which he believed to be from God: "Go and preach the preaching that I bid thee."—Presbyterian.

Two old Texas rangers, who had just helped bury a neighbor, were talking about religion, and one asked the other how pious he thought it was possible for a man to get in this world if he was in real earnest. "Waal," said the other, reflectively, "I think of a man gets so he can swop steers or trade horses without lyin', 'at he'd better pull out for the better land afore he has a relapse."

Religious Intelligence.

—Our New Zealand exchanges states that a very damaging admission concerning Spiritism comes from Melbourne. Mrs. Hardinge Britten has been giving a series of lectures there, which were evidently intended to be a much greater success than they have turned out to be. At the end of the last Mrs. Britten, naturally desirous of accounting for her failure, told her audience that it had been brought about "because of spills in the Spiritualist camp, and that there were those who believed in the doctrine, and rejoice in the uprooting of old institutions, and made use of the new creed as an excuse to relieve them from all restraint and indulgence in licentiousness." The Spiritists are annoyed and shocked at this unexpected revelation finding its way through one of themselves to materialist outsiders; yet, do as they may to explain and arrest it, it will travel a long way in the direction of confirming certain suspicions previously in existence, that the inner circles of Spiritism were none the sweetest.—New York Christian Advocate.

—Sir Moses Montefiore, in pursuance of his plan to restore the Jews to Palestine, has ordered the land in front of the Judah Touah houses in Palestine to be prepared for cultivation. "The rocks will be removed, terraces built along, as it used to be in the time of King Solomon, and divided into twenty-two partitions, so that every inmate may cultivate the necessary vegetables for himself and family. Sir Moses has also caused a very large cistern to be constructed in the center of the field, which will secure a full supply of water for all of them. There will be a beautiful veranda in front of all the houses, so as to protect the inmates from the glare of the sun. The veranda was sent direct from London. He has also had a new entrance made in the center of the boundary wall, built a lodge for a watchman and had a large bell affixed to one of the houses to give the alarm in case of emergency." A German paper is authority for the statement that the Rothschilds hold, among other securities for a loan of two thousand million francs to the Sultan, a mortgage upon the entire land of Palestine.

—According to a recent number of the Baptist Missionary Magazine, the foreign work of the B. M. Union is divided into Asiatic Missions and European Missions. To the former there are, in Burmah, eleven stations with 83 missionaries, 443 native preachers, 440 churches and 20,811 members. There have been 1,309 baptisms during the past year. There are, in Assam, seven stations, 11 missionaries, 45 native preachers, 15 churches and 1,207 members, with 171 baptisms. There are in India, among the Telegoos, seven stations, 19 missionaries, 32 native preachers, 11 churches and 15,064 members, with 1,601 baptisms. Of these baptisms, 9,601 have been at the Ongolestation alone. There are in China four stations, 19 missionaries, 43 native preachers, 28 churches, 1,328 members, with 101 baptisms; while there are in Japan, 2 stations, 6 missionaries, 2 native preachers, 2 churches, 96 members, with 28 baptisms. All the Asiatic Missions have 31 stations, 141 missionaries, 548 native preachers, 594 churches, 35,466 members, with 12,300 baptisms. In Europe there are stations in Sweden, France, Spain, Germany and Greece, with 136 native preachers, 409 churches and 1,209 members. There have been 2,689 baptisms.

—The Council of the Reformed Episcopal Church in Canada opened its sessions at Ottawa July 30, Bishop Lafane presiding. The Council was called to consider, among other things, the expediency of electing a bishop. The following resolution, adopted August 1, seems to have disposed of that matter, and of the rumors relative to the separation of this church from the American branch and its union with the English body of the same name: "Resolved, That we are satisfied to remain in our present position with regard to the General Council, and under the Presbytery of our present beloved Bishop W. R. Nicholson, D. D.; and that we deprecate any separation from the Reformed Episcopal Church as it was originally organized by the late Bishop Cummins." The annual convention of the clergy and lay delegates will be held in the future at Montreal.

—According to the recently issued year book of the Texas Baptist Publishing House, the first Baptist Church in Texas was formed in 1836. Now the white Baptists number about 70,000, and the colored about 50,000. There are also schools under the care of the Baptists, the number having been increased by three or four within as many years. The State Convention is conducting missionary work among the Germans in the State, with good success. Similar work is also done among the wild Indians on the frontier. There is a Sunday-School Society, whose agent has established seventy schools within a year. There is also a Freedmen's State Convention, which is a missionary organization, but which has also for its object the founding of a "State University," for which a considerable sum of money has already been raised.

—The Irish Wesleyan Conference held its session recently in Belfast, where Methodism is said to be strong er than in any other part of Ireland. It consisted of two hundred and forty members, ministerial and lay, and was presided over by Rev. Dr. R. H. Rigg, the president of the British Conference. The session was considered the most important Conference ever held in Ireland, being the first session after the union with the Primitive Wesleyans, and the largest ever held. Seven young men, who had completed their four years' probation, were accepted for ordination, and twenty-nine were continued on trial. Seven ministers volunteered, and were accepted for foreign mission work. The returns of membership showed a total of 25,478.

—The Irish Wesleyan Chapel Committee report that during the last year the Committee sanctioned an expenditure of £2,379 on new erections and repairs. The amount of properly acquired was six chapels, four ministers' residences and two school-rooms. The amount of debt paid off was £1,850, and the amount now remaining, £8,803. The number of separate trusts now reported is 511, being an increase of 128 on the returns of last year. Of this increase 117 belonged to the last Primitive Conference, including 105 chapels, 18 ministers' residences and 11 schools. The remaining 11 trusts were new property acquired during the year either by erection or purchase. There were 408 chapels, providing 80,240 sittings and preaching-rooms, not church property, providing 2,480 sitting, so that Irish Methodism now furnish chapel accommodation for 80,720 hearers.

—The United Presbyterian Church of this country has extensive and successful missions in Egypt. The chief missionary agency is education. The various schools have had an unusually prosperous season in the year just closed. In the training institution there has been a monthly average of 118 pupils. The Moslems and Copts, so long deterred by religious convictions from sending their children to the schools, are now surrendering their prejudices and allowing their children to get a good education. In the congregational schools in Upper Egypt, in which last year there were 670 pupils, there are now 926, and the sale of educational books advanced from 938 to 2,025.

—In the discussion of the Irish Conference of the question of the numerical returns for the year, it was stated the net loss in numbers was only apparent, arising in a great measure from the loose way in which the late Primitive body (now happily united with the Conference) had made their former reports. No members had been lost by the union of the two bodies, and the elements of success are more numerous now than ever. The figures show the loss of 313 by emigration, 466 by death and 1,152 by correction of former reports. Against this apparent decrease of 1,931 there were returned 719 on trial.

—Some of the missionaries of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel are meeting with great success in British Guiana. The Hindu coolies are beginning to come. Last September the coolies, of their own accord, held a public meeting to discuss the question as to which was the true religion. With but one dissenting voice, the assembly voted to accept the Christian religion. They then sent for a teacher, and one was given. The coolies say that they will build a church and support it themselves. There is also a similar movement among the 20,000 Hindus in Trinidad.

—The matter of church attendance is attracting considerable attention in England. A visit to fifteen churches belonging to the Establishment in the east of London disclosed the fact that edifices, with a seating capacity of 11,478, there were present exactly 905 persons. On the other hand, a recent count in eleven Nonconformist Churches of the same size and situation showed the presence of 5,500 worshipers.

—The Universalists have now a total of 737 churches and 710 ministers in this country. During the past year the denomination made some important gains, and met with some losses. Forty-six churches, 2,570 members, 45 Sunday-schools, 20 church buildings and $70,000 increase in the value of church property are reckoned among the gains; and 11 ministers and one college among its losses, while its benevolent contributions have fallen off $400,000.

—Senator John B. Gordon is a member of a Presbyterian Church near Atlanta, which last Sunday admitted a colored woman to the communion table. The Senator and Congressman Candler were among the members who took the communion at the same time. The Atlanta report says that the matter caused some talk, but was generally approved.

—Mr. Spurgeon's congregation has 80 colporteurs engaged in the work of the church, resulting in visits every month to about 75,000 families. During the past year 162,000 tracts were distributed gratuitously, and over $11,000 was realized from the sale of 927,000 separate publications. The total number of visits for the year was 926,200.

—The Scotch Evangelist, Dr. Somerville, is laboring among English-speaking people in Paris, and has his son to assist him. He is encouraged by the results already reached, and intends to hold meetings in many other cities on the continent by and by.

—Seven of the chief Missionary and Bible Societies of London received this year a total income of $1,879,605, which, notwithstanding the hard times, is an increase of $675,000 over the receipts of the same societies in 1869.

—The Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of London have recommended to their clergy to use the "prayer for fair weather" in their churches. It has lately been very rainy in England.

—The English Nonconformist states that Mr. Francis Fry, of Bristol, has collected more than a thousand editions of the English Bible printed before 1700.

—There has been an increase of about 50,000 members of the Established Church of Scotland since the last return five years ago. This increase has been at the rate of twelve per cent., while the population of Scotland has only increased four per cent.

—It is claimed that the Teloogoo language equals the Greek in precision, flexibility and force, and is spoken by 18,000 people.

—Nearly $10,000,000 have been contributed since 1870 toward the sustentation fund of the disestablished Episcopal Church of Ireland.

—The English Catholic Union has resolved to petition the Pope for the canonization of several English "martyrs," Sir Thomas More being of the number.

LITTLE JOE.

What will the birds do, mother, this spring—
The little brown birds that come to the door?
Will they tap on the window or hop on the step,
Asking why little Joe comes out never more?
What will the kitten do, mother, alone—
Will she skip in her frolic a day,
Or lie on the rug by the side of my bed,
As she did when I once went away?

And Rover—oh, mother! love Rover for me,
For I know he will mourn for me true;
So keep him when idle and useless he grows,
Sleeping all the summer days through.
And now him my coat so he will not forget
Little master who then will be dead,
And speak to him softly and often of Joe,
Stroking slowly his shaggy black head.

And what will old Tiptoes, the gardener, say
When you ask for white blossoms for me?
Will he gather the rose he has tended so long,
The first that has bloomed on the tree?
I've seen the tears come in his honest old eyes,
(This he told me the wind brought them there
As he looked at my cheek growing thinner each day,
While his hand trembled over my hair.

And dear Uncle Fritz, in the far-away camp,
Will look sad o'er the letter you'll write,
Only say, dearest mother: "Joe's gone to the front,
Marching nearer and nearer the fight."
And you, mother darling, you'll miss me awhile,
But in heaven no larger I'll grow;
So my kind angel will know when you ask
At the gate for your own little Joe.

Making Beauty.

Some school girls were using the last golden moments of recess in bright, playful talk. Madame Roget's table was near enough for her to understand the remark, though she seemed otherwise engaged.

"Which would you rather be—rich or beautiful?" asked one.

"Beautiful, of course!" they all exclaimed, with the exception of a girl who ventured to say, "Rich."

"You're not likely to be either," whispered one girl, contemptuously.

Madame Roget glanced toward the group, and began rapidly to make mental comments. Those girls, with their soul-lit faces, were like so many open books to her. She watched lovingly the sweet play of generous feeling, and turned away sorrowfully from flashes of envy and insincerity.

"Madame Roget says we can make ourselves beautiful or otherwise," said one. "All our feelings leave an impress, not noticeable at first; but by and by the lines will appear, and before we are aware, our faces will have taken expression from our character."

"Mamma says the same thing. She knew two sisters long ago, one of whom everybody said would be beautiful, and the other very plain. But as they grew older the beautiful one became more and more selfish, and the plain one more and more generous and noble in every way, till the face of one lost its beauty, and that of the other was almost heavenly. Papa says it has been just so with boys he has known."

"I'd like to have a beautiful soul," said one, thoughtfully.

"It is sure to shine out of the eyes," said another.

"Nonsense!" exclaimed a girl who knew quite well that she had faultless features.

"Certainly, Isabel; we don't expect you to think anything else," whispered her next neighbor. "By the way, your cousin doesn't look the least like you."

"Girls, what do you think of her?" inquired Isabel, eagerly. They glanced toward a girl, the center of another group.

"She's pretty, and yet she isn't. She has a bright, open look that one can trust, and that's better than the most regular features without the trustworthiness."

"You should not choose for me," said Isabel, angrily.

The girls looked surprised at this sudden outburst. Just then the bell rang, so that a blunt girl had only time to say, "Look in the glass, my dear, and you will see several ugly things in your face—pride and envy—if I may believe my eyes."

Isabel pushed her aside angrily, sending at the same time no very amiable glance across to the missionaries cousin, who had just come to live with her. At the close of school she kept aloof from the others, in the dressing room and also during the walk home. She even ran up stairs without waiting to speak with her father and mother. No one suspected the cause, and yet throughout the evening every one felt more comfortable at a distance from her. The children gave her sly glances, and turned to make friends with the new cousin.

As she sat before her toilet-table brushing her long hair for the night, Isabel was really startled at her own face in the glass. There were some things in it she had never seen before. "Can it be that Madame Roget is right?" she exclaimed. But it was not in the least agreeable to think so; and gradually the discontented look passed away, leaving only a self-satisfied expression that rested on her face, and did some silent work before morning.

Next day, almost the first sounds she heard were the children's loving words to the new cousin. "They care more for her than for me, their own sister," she exclaimed bitterly, the bright look in her beautiful eyes giving place to an expression of envy, so that little Elsie passed in the impulse to kiss her, and Jamie exclaimed, "Oh, sister, what makes you look so?"

Isabel was smiling upon them in a moment, however, and the bad feelings were pushed out of sight. Still, they were in the heart; ready, on the slightest provocation, to come out and do more work upon the face that might have been so lovely. Alice, the new cousin, was soon made to feel that she could expect little affection from Isabel; still, she met coldness with kindness, and waited patiently. Meanwhile, Isabel was growing very miserable; wrong feelings were becoming to her strong as iron bands. Even she could see that the beauty was going out of her face, leaving none of that beauty of soul she had so heartily despised.

Alice's patient kindness won her at last. She began to watch her with loving eyes and to wish to be like her.

"How did Alice grow so lovely, mamma?" Isabel asked one night.

"Alice would tell you that all the good in her is a gift from God, and, that the strength by which she lives so loving and beautiful a life comes day by day from the Lord Jesus Christ."

"Just the old, old story you have been telling me all my life, mamma; and yet it seems like something very new just now."

"That is because you are willing to take it, my child. Christ can do nothing for us until we receive and rest upon Him alone for everything; then we shall know what it is to be helped."

"Dear mamma, one great mistake I see in myself that I thought so much of the outward, forgetting that I could never have the right unless I were beautiful within. But now I see the folly of this. I will let it go, and seek to be beautiful in God's sight."

Dear girls, it is so natural to want to be beautiful; and apart from the vanity that accompanies self seeking, there can be no harm in the desire. Only be careful not to make a mistake just here. Value holiness of character for its own sake, and not alone for any outward advantages it may give. In the end, however, you may look to the world in general, you will be very beautiful in the eyes of those who know you best.

Let me say to you, in the good words of another: "Christ offers to make you beautiful. He offers to give you help to fill the place where he has set you with the beauty of heaven. O young maidens who would be beautiful, there is no other way. You must go to the pierced heart of Jesus for true beauty. Christ is the true beautifier. It is He alone who can put pride and self and sin away from your hearts, and make you shine like sweet flowers in the homes in which he has planted you."—Sunday School Visitor.

Three Short Prayers.

I laid my baby in her bed last night—she is only a year and a half old—and this was her prayer. Looking up into the blue sky through the window she waved her little hand, and when I said, "Now I lay me," she added, "Dwuney seep. Amen. Dood night." That was all.

It was a very little prayer to be heard way up in heaven; but I do believe Jesus listened and was pleased to hear it.

Cousin Choate is older, four years old.

He is always glad when the hour for morning prayer comes, and when his grandfather is from home he never fails to call the family together and to repeat his own little prayer, for he is the "head of the house," he thinks when grandpa is gone.

One day grandpa was sick away up stairs, and Choate went for a little visit to his room. "I'm sorry you're sick. Don't you want me to pray for you, grandpa?" he said. Then kneeling down by the bed he prayed, "O Lord, my grandpa is sick; please make him well. For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever and ever. Amen."

You see he asked for just what he wanted, and nothing else; so must we do when we pray.

A little drummer boy had been badly wounded, and lingered along for weeks and months in the hospital, so brave and patient under his suffering that all came to love him. He spoke often of his mother, who was looking for him in her little cottage among the trees. "When I am a little stronger I shall go to her." But his nurse knew he would never be stronger, so she said to him, "Robbie, if you knew that you were going to another home, up yonder, would you be sorry?"

When he knew he had not long to live he cried, "O I wish I had loved Jesus better! I wish I knew how to pray to Him!"

"Can't you say, 'God be merciful to me, a sinner?'"

"O yes, is that praying?"

And after that he would lie for hours with eyes closed, hands clasped and whispering that earnest prayer. Soon the sweet smile and quiet brow told them all that God had sent His own peace into his soul, and so the drummer boy went to Him.

When daily I kneel down to pray,
As I am taught to do,
All does not care to what I say
Unless I mean it too.

"JUST AS I AM."—Some time ago a poor little boy came to a city missionary, and holding up a dirty and worn-out bit of printed paper, said: "Please, sir, father sent up to get a clean paper like that." Taking it from his hand, the missionary unfolded it, and found it was a page containing that beautiful hymn of which the first stanza is as follows:

"Just as I am, without one plea,
But that thy blood was shed for me,
And that thou bidd'st me come to Thee,
O Lamb of God I come."

The missionary looked down with interest into the face earnestly upturned to him, and asked the little boy where he got it, and why he wanted a clean one. "We found it, sir," said he, "in sister's pocket after she died. And she used to sing it all the time while she was sick; and loved it so much that father wanted to get a clean one, and put it in a frame to hang it up. Won't you give us a clean one, sir?"

This little page, with a single hymn on it, had been cast upon the air, like a falling leaf, by Christian hands, humbly hoping to do some possible good. In some little mission Sabbath school, probably, this poor girl had thoughtlessly received it—to find in it, we may hope, the gospel of her salvation.

Having All Things Common.

One of the very first fruits of Pentecost was the destruction of covetousness in the heart. The community of goods was, no doubt, exceptional and temporary in its application to the entire properly of the Christians. It would generally be unwise and inapplicable, and it seems to have existed but a short time. It met a temporary and local emergency, and afterward contributions for religious and benevolent purposes were made without merging all property, or its proceeds, in a common fund. The principle, however, in Christian giving, remains the same. The same baptism of the Holy Ghost, and the same love, will lead to the expression of a like liberality. The converted man will not sell out, neither will he actually give away all, but he will devote all. Of any truly Christian company it may be written: "Neither said any of them that ought of the things which he possessed was his own."

The expression of this consecration of property may differ from that of Jose, who, "having land, sold it, and brought the money, and laid it at the apostle's feet," but it will be equally entire. The occasion demanded an extraordinary expedient, and the grace of God was sufficed to bring the believing company up to it. If we could conceive of such a requirement now, how many professed followers of Christ would be equal to the demand? There was wonderful spontaneity in this primitive liberality. There were no calls made by the apostles, no anniversary meetings, no special addresses on the subject. The situation was plain to all, the needs of the church were manifest, and the love for Jesus and His cause did the rest. It was not an unwise zeal, a reckless enthusiasm, but the fruit of the Spirit in the overthrow of avarice and selfishness.

Has the Holy Spirit lost this power of making men unselfish and liberal? and is there no longer anything in the love of the Saviour to inspire the desire to give? Christians still have a community of interest in the poor, in the church, and in the spread of the gospel. In some sense, and to a certain extent, there should be a community of goods for the support and furtherance of these objects. Certainly it is the duty of the Christian to divide his substance with the poor, and to contribute as much as possible for the spread of the truth. So far as believers can give to these purposes, they are to have all things common, and to regard their property and income as belonging to Christ and His cause. In principle we have in this record the key-note of all religious finance. The principle was that of complete consecration of property as well as of person. Circumstances made it proper that there should be a literal surrender of individual proprietorship. But while this literal surrender of all may not be proper for us, the principle applies in all its force. A man's property is not his own, his income is not his own. In their productive power to do good, to support the institutions of religion, and to send salvation to the ends of the earth, they are his Lord's, and to be had in common with all that may be benefitted by them.

There was in this giving no other compulsion than that of love. Ananias and Sapphira died, not because they refused to give all, but because they falsely pretended to do so. The lesson of their death is not against withholding what is due to God, but against hypocrisy in giving—professing to do more than we really do. It was not against covetousness in itself so much as it was against that hypocrisy and falsehood to which covetousness often leads. Here is a man who wishes it understood that he gives according to his ability. This, we believe, is the general profession of all who pretend to be Christians. But is it so? The greater sin is in this lying to the Holy Ghost, and against God. While the voluntariness of the giving is made clear, the divine disapprobation and hatred of falsehood in giving are made fearfully emphatic.

Under the fresh inspiration of the Pentecostal baptism we have an exhibition of property consecration, and of the principle which the love of Christ and the grace of God implant in the heart. Suppose this principle were to fully imbue the hearts of the millions who now profess to be of the company of the sanctified? Would there be emptiness in our missionary treasuries, would there be straitness in our home work, or embarrassement in our institutions of learning? It would be a terrible conclusion that the sin of Ananias and Sapphira, which lurked so early in the bud of Christianity, and which received such an appalling rebuke, has become a general blight. And yet how else are we to account for this falling away from the true and primitive standard of duty? Have the grace of God, and the work of the Spirit, and the pathos of the cross, lost their power to overcome sordidness, and to inspire the heart with an unselfish devotion to Christ?

"Subject to Like Passions."

When we read the biographies of the illustrious men of Scripture history we are apt to regard them as quite unlike ourselves, and occupying and moving on a plane far above the level of other and ordinary men. We are inclined to think it was no difficult thing for those ancient worthies to be spiritually-minded men. That while it was most possible and proper for them to recognize their obligations to God, it is quite different with us, and that while irreligion would have been most blameworthy in them, it is quite excusable with us. Thus some apologize for their prayerless lives. In considering the circumstances of the prophets and apostles we should always remember the two-fold relation they sustained—the official and personal. Officially, they were inspired to teach and govern the church, and to foresee and predict future events, and were kept from error and mistake; but in their personal relations they were conditioned as other men. Paul, speaking of himself, says: "And now, behold I go bound in the Spirit unto Jerusalem, not knowing the things that shall befall me there." In another passage, while he was in bonds at Rome, and his fate undetermined, he says: "So soon as I shall see how it will go with me." The apostles and prophets were probationers, just as we are walking by faith and giving diligence to make their calling and election sure. We may be quite sure the all-wise and all-gracious God makes no mistakes in the remedial scheme. It is adapted to man as he is, and not as he was—an unfallen and sinless creature. Personally, all men have the same nature, modified it may be by various outward influences. Elijah, the greatest of the prophets, the worker of miracles, the restorer of the law, who was translated that he should not see death, and rode in a triumphant chariot to heaven, was a man of like passions. All the sainted dead were once sinners—had to deny themselves, repent, believe, be born again, and run with patience the race set before them, just as ourselves. They all had temptations, and were personally as ignorant of what a day might bring forth, as we are. They were as liable to, and as keenly felt hunger, thirst, weariness, pain and death, just as we. Such being the real circumstances of the ancient and honored servants of God, we are left without any legitimate excuse for our irreligiousness, drawn from our supposed inferior circumstances.

There are, however, many who make no such excuses, but who are, nevertheless, discouraged, in view of what they think are our real difficulties—afraid to take any heavenward step, lest through their weakness they should fail. Now we would try to encourage such by calling them to consider that Elijah, and all the eminently holy and useful in all ages, were men of passions like our own. They had the same nature, and substantially the same circumstances that we have. If they could successfully seek God, and faithfully serve Him, so can we. Does any one plead the depravity of his nature? So was Elijah's and all men. Do we urge that we have strong passions that impel or allure us in the direction of sin? So had they passions violent, and tempers hasty. Peter, for example, was constitutionally impulsive and rash. Paul was a man of fixed purpose and stubborn will, a man of violent and bitter prejudices. Are we ambitious? So was Paul, naturally, and so all the apostles before their regeneration, and disputed among themselves which should be the greatest. Do we feel that we are naturally inclined to love the world, and seek our chief good in the things which perish in the using? So all men have felt. Do we think our surroundings are unfavorable to a consecrated life? Could not nearly all the saints, whose histories are recorded in Scripture, have said the same, and with far more justice than we? Let us be assured God's ways are equal, that He is no respecter of persons, and the Judge of all will do right. That as He gave these ancient saints grace according to their day, so His grace shall be sufficient for us. If God calls us to repentance, faith and holiness, He will surely give us grace to do His will, for His commandments are not grievous, but possible and joyous.

There are some really making an honest effort to be religious who painfully feel the difficulties of the attempt, and who sometimes tremble with apprehension, lest they should make shipwreck of the faith, and come short of the heavenly rest. We would remark to these trembling ones that we are not to be discouraged, because we have "passions." They are a legitimate part of our nature, they have their uses, and, wisely gratified and governed, contribute to our usefulness and happiness. Lest such should grow weary and faint in their minds, let them call to mind the example of Elijah and all the saints, who, through great tribulation, washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Elijah's passions were like ours, and his circumstances seemingly far worse. The age was corrupt, public opinion against the pure and true religion. The king and court were idolators, Elijah hated, and his life sought by king and queen. Elijah was poor, straitened circumstances, and dependent on others for bread. He was sometimes disgusted and despairing, wished even to die. His faith was sorely tried. Commanded twice to show himself to Ahab at the risk of his life, commanded to take up his abode in a cave, a lonely and apparently useless position, and to depend on the ministry of wild ravens for his daily bread, commanded to go to a heathen village, and to abide with a poor widow, all these were sore trials, but in all God's grace was sufficient. Let us look at this history, bless God, take courage, and endure to the end.

"Unto Him."

The above is the caption of an interesting department in the Sunday Magazine, edited by Rev. Dr. Deems. It contains the record of all gifts and bequests to charitable and Christian objects the editor's diligence can collect. The column is sometimes well filled, and never an issue has come to hand without some honorable mention. Often we notice large estates, amounting to millions, are divided among missionary, Sunday-school, tract, church extension, and other religious organizations, besides large amounts given to endow educational and eleemosynary institutions. These records inspire hopefulness and strengthen faith. It assures us that the religion of Christ is commanding the wealth of the purse as well as the heart for its grand achievements. Men of large means are making grateful offerings to the Lord. They esteem it at once privilege and duty to thus acknowledge a merciful Providence, and contribute to the triumph of Christian truth. Colleges are being liberally endowed and new ones established. Charitable institutions, of multitudinous names and aims, are generously sustained. The mission cause is gradually gathering to its treasury the princely offerings of consecrated wealth.

But one fact is noticeable: These gifts and bequests are all from the Northern States, with scarcely an exception. What is the significance of this humiliating statement? Are we of the South less consecrated to God? Have we narrower conceptions of Christian obligation and enterprise? Are not the fountains of benevolence as pure and free in the Southern heart as the Northern? What possible explanation can be given of this well-known and anomalous fact? Two suggestions, by way of solution, may be offered:

1. The Financial Distress of the South.—We have not yet recovered from the devastations of war. Our once magnificent fortunes yet lay in ruins. A decade or two must pass before many broad acres, that once smiled with abundant harvests, will be redeemed from thorn and briar. Yet this will hardly solve the difficulty. We do not meet Christian pecuniary obligation according to the measure of ability. It is true we have no merchant princes or railroad kings among us to inaugurate grand enterprises, but then we have no absolute want and suffering. We have neither great wealth nor squalid poverty. Agricultural districts never produce tramps and paupers. If intelligent faith would direct our energies, many precious offerings "Unto Him" might be made, which would make the angels rejoice, and invigorate the church militant with new zeal and courage. If we cannot give thousands, we may offer hundreds; if we haven't pounds we can give pennies, which will be alike honoring to God and our faith.

2. A Lack of Christian Culture on this Subject.—Though the war has desolated our section, and impoverished our people, we once had large possessions, and rendered poor account to the Lord. Few colleges in the South ever had any respectable endowment. Now they are left prostrate almost beyond the power of resuscitation. When abundantly able, we gave little.

But we are not without hope. Here and there Christian hearts, in our Southern States, are dedicating their means to God and humanity. The Hon. Felix LeBauve, who died several months ago, in DeSoto county, Miss., bequeathed $10,000 to our State University at Oxford. Mr. James King, a Presbyterian layman, has lately willed $6 000 to the Southwestern Presbyterian University at Clarksville, Tenn. A devout Methodist in Kentucky has just sent a check for $6,000 to Dr. A. W. Wilson, Missionary Secretary, for the China Mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. A Georgia Methodist lady has also given $2 500 to build a church in Shanghai, China, for the use of Dr. Y. J. Allen. We take courage and pray that the number may yearly increase. These worthy examples should be emulated. We offer two reasons, one a warning, the other an encouragement:

1. The Settling of Large Property Upon Children Fosters Profligacy.—Give them education, good morals and fixed principles, and then let them win their way by personal effort. Spendthrifts and debauchees are the children of fortune.

2. Gifts to the Lord Perpetuate Name and Fame.—This, as a motive, has an element of selfishness, but not altogether unworthy. We shall be remembered by Christian deeds. Vanderbilt, with his millions, will be longest known, not as a successful financier, not as the father of a wealthy family, but as the founder of a noble university, whose beneficent work will continue to bless mankind after mansions, and railroads, and steamship lines will have passed into other and unknown hands. His name will be inscribed upon the cultured intellects of every class that shall go out from the University halls to win success in the wide, wide world. The name of Elihu Yale would have been lost to history but for his generous patronage of the great American college which has embalmed him in perpetual and grateful memory. John Harvard lives in the thought and affection of the world only as the founder of the oldest, and, to-day, most amply endowed institution of learning in the United States. Stephen Girard, the merchant prince and banker, would have passed into oblivion but for that magnificent institution in Philadelphia which bears his name, the main building of which is said to be the finest specimen of Grecian architecture in America, or in modern times. The college which he projected, and with whose name it was baptized, will ever keep fresh and fragrant the memory of Jean Frederic Oberlin. The good that men do lives after them. Benefactions to the cause of education and Christian propagandism are perpetual blessings. To live in history we must be eminent in good deeds. May our offerings "Unto Him" increase a thousand fold, until every college is amply endowed, and every mission-field is made to blossom as the rose.

Notes from Nashville.

I have just returned from the funeral of Mrs. Mary A. Young, the beloved wife of the Rev. R. A. Young, D. D. This excellent lady left our mortal shores yesterday morning, after a fortnight's sickness. Her obsequies were conducted by Drs. Kelley and Leftwich, and Bishop McTyeire. Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, a large assembly was in attendance, including the ministers in and near the city. Drs. Leftwich and Kelley delivered well-deserved eulogies on the deceased, and McKendree choir rendered the sentence: "I heard a voice," and the hymns: "Unveil thy bosom, faithful tomb," and "Lo, the prisoner is released," and a pensive dirge, in an impressive manner. Bishop McTyeire's prayer was in his usual appropriate and edifying manner. At the close of the solemn service, it was affecting to see the inmates of the Mission Home surround the coffin to look at the placid countenance of their late benefactress. Mrs. Young devoted much attention to these poor women, rescued from a life of shame. Her record is on high; her Christ like benevolence will cause her memory to be embalmed in many a grateful heart.

Our beloved brother, so sadly bereaved, has the tender sympathies of our entire community. He is left alone in the world. Oh, how he will feel his loneliness! How he will miss the kind attentions, the loving presence, and the judicious counsels of that noble wife!

When she died he said, pathetically: "I have lost the rudder of my life!" I need not say she departed in peace. Such a life as hers must be "crowned with a triumphant end." Let us not mourn for her—we mourn for ourselves—we, the survivors, die!

How long must we lingering here,
While saints around us take their flight?
Smiling, they quit this dusky sphere,
And mount the hills of heavenly light.

Sweet soul, we leave thee to thy rest,
Enjoy thy Jesus and thy God,
Till we from hands of clay released,
Spring out, and climb the shining road.

While the dear dust she leaves behind
Sleeps in thy bosom, sacred tomb,
Soft be her bed, her slumbers kind,
And all her dreams of joy to come!

I regret to say that Dr. Kelley's health is very feeble. He sent a request to me to take charge of his pulpit to-morrow, and went to Hurricane Springs, from which he hastened back to attend the funeral of Mrs. Young.

Dr. Wilson, secretary of our Board of Missions, returned from Kentucky to-day. I fear he has been laboring beyond his ability—he is far from well, and needs rest. He is deeply intent in the promotion of the missionary cause; and, indeed, it demands all his energies—but he must not kill himself.

Dr. and Mrs. Cunnyngham have both been sick at Abingdon; but it will not interfere with the due appearance of our Sunday-school periodicals. The issues for September are out, and they are capital.

Dr. Buchanan is making us a visit. He is removing his furniture, library, etc., to Emory and Henry College, of which he is to be president. Dr. J. W. Dodd, brother of our Hebrew professor, a genuine chip of the old block, the late "Mathematical Dodd," takes Prof. Buchanan's place as Professor of Latin in Vanderbilt University—an excellent choice.

Excavations are going on for the gymnasium, which will be both useful and ornamental. The plans are laid for the civil engineering buildings, to be furnished out of Mr. W. H. Vanderbilt's recent donation of $100,000. Wesley Hall, for our "theologues," will come out of that princely largess.

We are approaching another session (September 1). The opening sermon is to be preached on Sunday, August 31. A large number of students in all the departments is expected. The entire exemption of Nashville from yellow fever is a blessed thing for Vanderbilt. I never knew the city more healthful than now.

I was going to answer questions concerning the University asked by correspondents, but I refer them to the Register, a copy of which will be sent gratis to all applicants.

THOS. O. SUMMERS.

AUGUST 16, 1879.

Judging from what we see in their papers, there is some trouble in the camp of the Northern Presbyterians. Several years ago the Old and New School Presbyterians united, the former holding to a limited, and the latter to an unlimited atonement. This element of discord is coming to the surface. The Wooster Presbytery, Ohio, recently dropped Rev. Mr. Alcott from the roll because he preached an unlimited atonement. The Independent calls attention to another ground of disturbance:

The Presbyterian Board of Publication issues in the Westminster Teacher notes for Sunday-school use in the whole church. Our attention has been called by very loyal Presbyterians of a New School theology to its teachings on this subject of the extent of the atonement, and we confess ourselves surprised at their partisan character. The International Lesson for August 3 included Second Corinthians v. 14: "For the love of Christ constraineth us, because we thus judge that if one died for all then were all dead." The following is the comment:

"If One died for all—in the place of all. The idea of substitution is clearly conveyed. The 'for all' is necessarily limited by what the Scriptures teach of the design of His death. It is for all the subjects of redemption, for all that believe."

Here is the doctrine of a limited atonement, in all its baldness and repulsiveness, taught to the hundred thousand teachers and the six hundred thousand scholars in all the five thousand churches of a denomination in which ten years ago almost half belonged to a body which denounced the dogma as an insult to the honor and truthfulness of God, and who consented to merge their separate existence only on the condition that their theological rights should not be questioned.

Notice the definiteness of this teaching. It leaves no room for those who believe that Christ's death was sufficient for all men. It says: "The 'for all' is necessarily limited." "It is for all the subjects of redemption," for all that believe." Paul says: "One died for all." The official Presbyterian commentary says that He did not die for all, but that the word "all" must be "limited." It means only "the subjects of redemption"—those who will finally be redeemed, not those who will be lost. He died "for all that believe," not for those who will not believe. Now the New School Presbyterians held just the reverse of this. They believed that Christ died for all, that His redemption was quite sufficient for all, and that it is offered to all because He died for all. Barnes says, in his commentary on this very passage:

"The phrase 'for all' evidently means for all mankind, for every man. This is an exceedingly important expression in regard to the extent of the atonement. * * * It demonstrates that the atonement was general, and had, in itself considered, no limitation and no particular reference to any one class or condition of men, and no particular applicability to one class more than another."

And so he goes on at great length to show, "if Christ died only for a part," then God's offer of salvation "cannot be made with sincerity," and God is "tantalizing with offers of that which does not exist, and which he knows does not exist." This is Albert Barne's exposition, whose doctrine of unlimited atonement has equal rights with that of limited atonement in the reunited church. We are surprised that the Sunday-school children are officially taught that it is false.

Education.

BY REV. J. LEWIS, JR., D. D.

THIRD PAPER.

In our last number we endeavored to show that education by the church is more conducive to the spiritual welfare of a young man than education by the State. Facts confirm this view. The writer was once for five years connected as an instructor with a Methodist college. The average attendance was more than a hundred. During all that time he never heard an oath fall from the lips of a student. The number of conversions and reclamations was above three hundred. There was not one expulsion for disorderly conduct or for inattention to study in the whole time. During the three years following the writer lived at the seat of a State university. During that time the number of conversions among the students was less than thirty, and the profanity and dissipation were so great that the pastors in the city generally regarded it as a disadvantage to their charges that the university was located there. It was not the fault of the faculty, who were good men—some of them eminent for piety. It was the fault of the system.

The first example given is worthy of the serious consideration of parents and guardians. We know of nothing comparable to it except the record of Emanuel Von Fellenburg's school at Hofwyl, from which there were but two expulsions in fourteen years.

It has become fashionable of late years among a certain set to decry denominational schools and colleges as instrumentalities of undue sectarian influence. The imputation is not only false, but absurd. If the officers of such institutions had no higher motive, a regard for their own interest would deter them from such folly and wickedness.

In concluding upon this point we hazard nothing in the assertion that the standard of morals among the students and alumni of denominational schools and colleges is decidedly higher than among those of State colleges. And even if the latter were less expensive (which they are not, even when tuition is free) it is still much wiser to patronize the former. To save a little money to-day, at the expense of the morals of our children, is not only utterly unworthy of a Christian man, but will prove to be wretched financiering in the end. The wise man says: "There is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty."

Evidently there are important elections on hand this fall, and the Presidential election is near enough to stir the Northern Methodist editors. Dr. Fowler is not only open ing in full cry, but nearly the whole pack. Zion's Herald, Boston, has this excellent and inspiring paragraph:

"The Solid South" is a recent euphemism for the semi-restoration of the old slave regime. It is Ku Klux softened down without losing any of the venom of that terrible order. It means a master class against a servile one; the putting up of the few and putting down of the many; the crushing out of one-half the land the men who saved the union, and the installing in power, both State and national, of those who did their utmost to destroy it. The "Solid South" means might against right—means lawlessness, violence, blood; and finally, if other measures fail, new attempts at revolutions. The viper of State rights warmed in the national bosom may strike again at the vitals of the Republic. Will the American people allow party cords to draw them to the brink of destruction?

There can be no "Solid North." We are not a homogeneous people. Even during the war, the party that sympathized with Southern views preserved its organization, enjoyed the broadest liberty of action and speech, and voted constantly in opposition. Nothing will enlarge and unite what should rather be called the party of the nation at the North—the defenders of the government against an exaggerated view of the State rights—more effectually than a "Solid South," with its financial, social and political dogmas, and especially with its organized conspiracy against the rights of millions of the common citizens of the land.

HEALTH OF THE CITY.—Since the twenty-ninth of July there have been three cases of yellow fever in New Orleans, and no more. The Board of Health, the Sanitary Association, and all the practicing physicians, declare that there is not a case of yellow fever in the city at this time. It is not improbable that sporadic cases will occur during the next few weeks, but there is not the least likelihood of fever prevailing to any dangerous extent. We have done our best to find out the real condition, and we verily believe that there is no yellow fever here at this writing, August 26, 1879.

—Contrary to our hopes, and to the indications a week ago, the fever in Memphis has rather increased, both in the number of cases daily, and in the daily mortality. Sad as is the condition of poor stricken Memphis, it is a matter of devout thankfulness that the fever has not spread to any alarming extent elsewhere.

—On Friday, August 22, a tornado of narrow breadth swept over one side of the Seashore camp ground. Several buildings were blown down and others injured, many trees uprooted, the gentleman's bath-house swept away, and about one-fourth of the roof of the tabernacle carried off. Singularly enough, none of the occupied tents were injured. About two hundred people are sojourning on the camp ground this summer. Little Frank Foster, son of W. H. Foster, was severely, but, we believe, not dangerously injured. A colored lad was also badly hurt. These were all the casualties. No lives were lost, and we suppose the damage to property will not exceed $500.

—Rev. Benjamin Wayne, pastor of the Napoleon Avenue Presbyterian Church, of New Orleans, died at Mandeville, St. Tammany parish, La., on Thursday morning, August 21. Mr. Wayne, while bathing on Monday, received an injury from a hidden post, which resulted in peritonitis and death. He had been in the pastoral work in this city for many years, and was greatly esteemed by all denominations, and by the whole community. He was in the prime and maturity of his powers and usefulness, dying at the age of fifty-five. Our personal acquaintance with Bro. Wayne extends through many years. He was a true and good man, a faithful preacher of the gospel, and a zealous worker in the Master's vineyard. We sorrow over the loss of such men. To his bereaved church and to his sorrowing family we extend our sympathies.

—On last Saturday and Sunday—our quarterly meeting occasion—we were privileged to inspect and enjoy the improvements and repairs recently made in our Baton Rouge Church. It is now, outside and in, one of the handsomest church edifices in the State. The walls, steeple and spire have been washed and painted, and the interior has been very beautifully frescoed. The entire cost will be something over two thousand dollars. The pastor, Rev. J. T. Sawyer, has not only a fine church building, but he has a lively and working people. No more satisfactory love-feasts and class meetings are to be found anywhere. The closing of stores and liquor saloons in Baton Rouge has resulted in great good. They have now quiet Sabbaths, and peace reigns. A Sunday law, strictly enforced, would be of inestimable value to Louisiana.

—We meant to say that the Western Methodist is now published temporarily at Nashville. The types had it Wesleyan Methodist. Our enterprising cotemporary has suffered much from the epidemics in Memphis. We trust it will not be long before Bro. Johnson can return to his home, and that the Western may become more prosperous than ever.

Rev. Henry D. Moore, pastor of Franklin Street Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Mobile, Ala., writing to the Southern Christian Advocate about the Sea shore camp meeting says:

The camp meeting at Sea shore was closed on Tuesday of this week. This camp ground is located about halfway between Mobile and New Orleans, directly on the Gulf of Mexico. The stand—there called the "Tabernacle"—is about two hundred feet from the water's edge, on a plane elevated some twenty feet above the water or sea level. It is well built, and furnished with comfortable seats sufficient for the accommodation of two thousand persons. The tents or, as they may with more propriety be called, cottages, are arranged in rows on three sides of the square, in the center of which stands the "Tabernacle." These cottages are built to suit the tastes of those who build them, and some are very beautiful. All are so constructed as to reap the benefit of the pleasant and healthful sea breeze, which blows almost during every hour of the day at this delightful place. The spaces between the rows of cottages are known by such names as "Live Oak Avenue," and "Magnolia Avenue," and the like. These spaces, as also that between the tents and the "Tabernacle," are shaded with a variety of such forest trees as grow on this lovely coast—the live oak and the magnolia being among the most beautiful. The ground rises gently from the white, sandy beach to within a few feet of the "Tabernacle," and, covered with grass and trees, as it is, presents one of the most delightful scenes my eyes ever looked upon. But no words of description can give you, Mr. Editor, or your readers, any correct idea of this most lovely place. You must see for yourselves, and nothing will be more gratifying to your correspondent than to greet here, at the next camp meeting, many of his old South Carolina friends, preachers and people. If you come, your eyes will rest on a scene that, more than any other, will remind you of the heavenly land, as you have contemplated it in your dreams, or painted it in your imagination. I can never forget the emotions within me as I looked on this holy place one evening just as the sun was setting. I was standing on the wharf, which extends, perhaps, a hundred yards out into the water, and I felt a kind of heavenly raptures as I gazed on the scene before me. There was the Tabernacle, where just now I had joyfully listened to the songs of praise and the voice of prayer. There were quiet groups of grown people and children walking along the white beach, or reclining on the lovely carpet of grass. On the cottage verandahs some of the more thoughtful, if not the more devotional, were gathered, engaged in singing the songs of Zion, stanzas of which, in the lull of the sea breeze would reach me now and again. The words, "Jesus lover of my soul," or "Rock of ages, cleft for me," mingled with the cheerful voices along the shore, and the scene made me think of "the land beyond the river," and of the sweet fields beyond the swelling flood.

Dr. John F. Hurst, writing about the English pulpit, in the New York Christian Advocate, has this to say of Spurgeon:

Spurgeon remains, in a sense, prince of London preachers. I had heard him just twenty-two years ago, when he was more impetuous and nervous, and still on trial before the world. But he has long since fought his battle and fairly won. He had everything against him—the stress, popular prejudice, and suspicion, and all the closed places to popular favor. But he has gone on, and now he wields his power and wealth. He has Anglo Saxon grit and pluck, and you might as well tell the Monument to come to attempt to control Spurgeon. I expected to see him getting old, for it is work rather than years that breaks one down, and yet he bears his years remarkably well. He has given out energy enough for seventy, and yet he lacks considerably of fifty. His thick black hair has now some stealthy threads of gray; he wears a full beard, wad'd's just a little more than when he weighed less, and takes things much more quietly than in the storm and stress of younger days. His sermon was on the healing of the impotent man. His exposition was terse, spirited and altogether out of the exegetical ruts. He made the impotent man a simple-minded soul, who knew but little, and had just sense enough to trust. You can see a change in Spurgeon. He has not the incisive force of former years. He is as deep-sighted, has that same grand metallic ring of voice, and knows how to play on his audience with the old masterful skill, but lacks the cleaving and lifting power of the older days of adventure and initiative. He is far more proper than in former times. He seems to be more conscious of a critical atmosphere about him. I doubt if he could build up another Tabernacle. But then, he is not required to do such a thing a second time. He has done what God told him, and God does not generally tell men to do the same thing twice.

The Kavanaugh Camp Ground, near Louisville, Ky., is thus described by a correspondent of the Nashville Christian Advocate:

The buildings and grounds are this year much better adapted to camp meeting purposes than ever before. If I am not mistaken this is the fifth annual meeting. I attended the first in 1875. The grove was full of underbrush, and access to the grounds difficult. Bishop Kavanaugh dedicated the spot in a rough, temporary pulpit under a mammoth oak. So far as I know this pulpit, in 1875, was the only departure from a purely natural state on the territory of the association. When a great storm arose we rushed under some improvised tarpaulins, but many were drenched to the skin. To-day "old things are passed away, and all things are become new." Our good Bishop and his assisting friends did not despise the day of small things, and they are beginning to reap the reward of patient continuance in well-doing. There have been additional improvements every year. Seven acres of the large tract held by the association have been inclosed with a neat and durable picket-fence. Fifty cents is the small admission price paid at the gate, and this in lieu of all collections. No sort of public money appeal is permitted either on behalf of the association or of any interest visiting brethren may represent. In the midst of the inclosure is the great tabernacle accommodating 2,500 people, and every Sunday filled to its utmost capacity. While the Sunday concourses far exceed the week-day attendance, the number of permanent tenters is this year larger than ever before. Bishop Kavanaugh and three others have erected substantial two-story houses on their lots. Many other lots have been sold which will have houses upon them before the next annual meeting. A roomy hotel stands just within the entrance, where board can be had at reasonable figures. But the most important improvement made during the past year is the erection of McCoy's Chapel. There is a neat and commodious house, excellently adapted to its purposes. Its auditorium affords a most suitable place for prayer and praise meetings, the children's meetings and other social gatherings. Its large upper-room furnished is the preachers' sleeping apartment. Here the way-worn itinerants finding their way to this camp meeting receive comfortable quarters free of charge. This house has been erected by the liberality of Bro. T. J. McCoy, who has heartily co-operated with the Bishop in this enterprise from the beginning. There are now seven permanent buildings within the inclosure, and these are only the earnest of the work which the progressive trustees and lot-holders of the Kavanaugh Camp Meeting Association intend doing.

The Pacific Methodist of San Francisco, writing about the iniquity of politics in the pulpit, says:

That it prevails to an alarming extent in our vicinity we need not assert. The daily press reports of Sunday services are made lively by sharp political opinions from the pulpits of the city. Party catch words are thrown out to awaken the drowsy pews, and frequently the unguarded, unreasonable, unstudied assertions of the trustings are crammed upon people who come to hear the word of God.

We remember to have heard a preacher of holiness, whose peculiar methods aroused a little ridicule among bad boys, appeal from the pulpit to the city authorities for protection, on the ground, as he vociferated standing on tip toe, that his "church casts more votes than any church in the union!"

We heard a noted scientific magnificently expounding gospel truth as revealed by scientific investigation step aside from the beautiful and broad plane upon which the world could stand, and utter a nasty, narrow slander upon a political party not of his own way of thinking.

One of our popular preachers not long since deliberately denounced a political party in terms so stinging that one of his auditors called him a "liar" in the midst of the sermon.

Other preachers of whom we have heard take texts from Scripture, and then expound the Chinese question, the Silver Bill, the New Constitution, the Sand Lot, etc.

Rev. R. D. Norsworthy, writing from Madison station, Miss., August 18, says:

To-day we bury Rev. D. C. Langford's babe, Robert Hugh. After a long and painful illness the little one passed away last night at eight o'clock. Of little ones are gathering on the other shore. "It is well" with our little ones dead. We bow our heads and hearts, and say: "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." Bro. Langford's babe was sixteen months and a few days old.

Read the following testimonials from Sir. Alexander Kendall:

ST. LOUIS, March 7, 1879.

Messrs. J. & C. Maguire: We left St. Louis October 17, 187—, (about which time occurred the death of Lieut Hunter on Steamer A. M. Chambers,) on the arrival of the Steamer Mollie Moore, who lost several of her crew by yellow fever which was prevailing in that epidemic form throughout the entire South at that time. We went to Ouachita river, Louisiana; laid within one mile of Harrisonburg, (Hayes Landing) twenty-one days while the fever was raging fatally all around us. Used Maguire's Cumbrango freely and a two grain quinine pill three times a day. Kept the boat well disinfected, and am satisfied that this treatment prevented our being attacked by disease of any kind, and recommend the same, particularly the use of Maguire's Cumbrango as a specific against attacks of yellow fever, no matter how violently it may rage.

Taking the above statement for the benefit of the public, in which my entire crew fully concur with me.

FRED. S. LEE.

We call attention of our readers to the following note, of interest to many of our friends in the country:

ELIZABETH, N. J., July 1, 1879.

KEWANEE MANUFACTURING CO., 83 BROAD WAY, N. Y.—Gentlemen: Your twelve foot windmill, which received the first premium at our New Jersey State Agricultural Fair last fall, and which we subsequently purchased of you, has been in operation for the past six months on our Fair Grounds at Waverly. It has passed through all the severe gales of the last winter without damage, and continues to supply us all the water we require for watering the track of our race course for the weekly meetings of the Trotting Club, and other purposes of our grounds requiring large quantities of water. We find it just as effective and much more economical than the steam pump which we discarded for your windmill. So far, it has cost us nothing except its purchase money.

SAFETY, efficiency and reliability are the three cardinal virtues of a remedy, when in the hands of a physician or in those of the people at large. For the cure of all malarial or miasmatic diseases such as Chills and Fever, or Intermittent Fever, Dumb Chills and Chronic Enlargement of the Spleen, we have such a remedy in Dr. E. Wilson's Anti-Periodic or Fever and Ague Tonic, the composition of which has been published by its proprietors, Wheelock, Finley & Co., of New Orleans and is approved by the medical profession, and for sale by all druggists.

Pure Cod Liver Oil made from fresh selected livers on the seashore, by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York. It is absolutely pure and sweet. Patients who have once taken it, prefer it to all others. Physicians have declared it superior to any of the other oils in market.

QUESTIONS FOR THE PEOPLE.

Is your liver torpid? are your bowels costive? does your blood lack free circulation? is purification? are you suffering from any affection of the Bladder or Kidneys? is your stomach clogged? If so, use Maguire's Cubrango and reflect is sure to follow. Good health depends on this, for any derangement of these organs of the body tends to bring on disease.

BUTTER MAKING.

I found by repeated experiments that the temperature in the room used for butter making must be warm to favor the rising and maturing of the cream, from 60 to 65 degrees being about the requisite temperature to secure the desired results. In winter weather, where butter is the only product desired, the milk should be allowed to set seventy-two hours, where it is held at a low temperature by water, or until the cream is partly matured or has adhered in mass. If cans have formerly been cleansed with soap and water and scalded, the milk will be sweet. During hot weather, when the atmosphere is dry, the milk can be set from fifty to thirty-six hours, providing milk utensils have been most thoroughly cleansed.

With a warm, damp atmosphere, lowering barometer and frequent thunder storms, the acid state is hastened at a much earlier period. Watch your milk closely, and skim as soon as you perceive a change. If allowed to stand while undergoing this fast decomposing process, the whey separates in the least from the caseine and the cream is spoiled, the butter, when the butter. In winter I skim a pan at night and one in the morning, putting both skimmings into one can, and each matures for churning. Stir it every hour and bring it to the temperature of 60 degrees, securing a mild, pleasant acid condition before churning. The pellicle covering each butter globule is rendered equally fragile by this maturing process, and from each skimming, during the churning process, will break at the same time, thus securing from ten to fifty per cent. of butter that would otherwise be lost in the butter making.

I am indebted to the dairyman's friend, Dr. J. Tef., of Elgin president of the Illinois Dairymen's Association, for microscopic views of butter globules in milk. He has become proficient with his micro-scope, and will tell you the breed of the cow from the milk examined. The doctor suggests that the cream be brought to the temperature of 60 degrees, churn ten to fifteen minutes, then add warm water and raise the temperature to 62 degrees, thereby securing the breaking of the small globules simultaneously with the large ones.

SUMMER HANDLING OF CREAM.

Skim a pan in the morning and one at noon. Be careful that the temperature does not rise above 60 degrees. If you have a cold cellar, place it there; if necessary, set the cream can in a tub of water mingled with ice. Stir frequently to secure a uniformity, and churn when in the mild acid state.

CHURNING.

Churn moderately when commencing, after some minutes increase the motion. When the globules begin to break, and have the consistency of fine hull-of-rice, add a pail of cold water. This will give a firmer grain. Continue churning until the butter has ventured separated from the butter-milk. Draw off and put in a pail of water, revolving the churn some ten or twenty times, continuing this process until the water ceases to look like least milky. Be thorough in washing. If butter milk be allowed to remain, butter will soon become rancid. Don't work it too much or you will spoil the grain. Put now into a large stone jar, sift fine salt on it, in the strength to cover the mass. In two hours it will be in condition for second working. If too hard to work easy, when it has the chill of winter, remove to a warm room for several hours. This finishing touch requires tasting powers of discrimination, and which no fixed rule can be given to meet all conditions. Work sufficient to equally distribute the salt; to bring into a state of solidity and naturally sweating the whey, the less working possible. Grain to be broken if it will subject you to a loss of five to ten cents a pound.—Coleman's Rural World.

THINGS WORTH KNOWING.

1. That fish may be scaled much easier by dipping into boiling water about a minute.

2. That flour may as well be sealed, if desired, before packing down in salt; though, in that case, do not seal them.

3. Salt fish are quickest and best freshened by soaking in sour milk.

4. That milk which is turned or changed may be sweetened and restored fit for use again, by stirring in a little soda.

5. That salt will curdle new milk; hence, in preparing milk-porridge, gravies, etc., the salt should not be added until the milk is prepared.

6. That fresh meat, after beginning to sour, will sweeten if placed out doors in the cool over night.

7. That cloth boiling water will remove tea stains, and many fruit stains. Pour the water through the stain, and thus prevent its spreading over the fabric.

8. That ripe tomatoes will remove ink and other stains from white cloth; also, from the hands.

9. That a tea-spoonful of turpentine boiled with your white clothes will aid the whitening process.

10. That boiled starch is much improved by the addition of a little spermaceti, salt, or both, or a little gum arabic dissolved.

11. That beeswax and salt will make your flat-irons as clean and smooth as glass. Tie a lump of wax in a rag, and keep it for that purpose. When the irons are hot, rub them first on the wax rag, then scour with a paper on which salt is sprinkled.

12. That blue ointment and kerosene mixed in equal proportions and applied to bedsteads, is an infallible bed bug remedy, and that a coat of whitewash is unto for the walls of a hog house.

13. That kerosene will soften boots or shoes which have been hardened by water, and render them as pliable as new.

14. That kerosene will make the tin ware kettles as bright as new. Scour with a wooden rag, and immediately wash and wipe. Remove stains from the varnished furniture.

THE BEST VARIETIES OF WHEAT.—It is evident to every farmer, now acquainted by experience, that corn, with all cultivation, would be a very poor, uncertain crop, but as regards grain and fodder. Samples of this are sometimes seen where the lazy or shiftless farmer has permitted the cockle and nettles to go to rank growth with grass or weeds, the latter always predominating. If it be so with corn, why should it not be so with other grains. We know that cultivation blesses our garden more than good soil or early planting; then why not mellow up the wheat and oat fields with the hoe and the harrow? Enough might be beneficial as in the case of corn, tobacco or potatoes, but the great principle, the stirring of the soil, permitting free access of air and moisture to the tender rootlets of the plant is all the same.

In England the wheat is hoed in the early spring, whole bands of women and children being employed in that labor. If it be true that the largest crops of wheat are produced we believe. It is true that California and Australia have sometimes shown a larger local acreage, but we think English farmers have succeeded better than those I have mentioned. Taking all the years together, their averages are larger. An enterprising farmer in West Township, this county, Levi W. Groff, succeeded last year in raising 61 bushels of wheat per acre, by cultivation of the spaces of ground between the rows of wheat, and his promise of yield the present season is even greater. The seed sown being doubled by very many practical and experienced farmers, who have committees of various agricultural societies, granges and farmers' clubs, have this season paid visits to farm after farm, and extensively and carefully examined his growing and cultivated wheat. The writer of these lines was one of a committee that performed this service on the 31st of May last. They found one field out of three to be ahead, and to this committee we about average six jerusalem beggs. The wheat-stalks were not as stout as a beet at that time, and they would stretch something more by harvest time. The heads were four and four and a half inches long; and what was most observable and made it peculiar and different from a neighbor's field not put in in this way, there were few short heads or blanks.

MORE THAN TWO BALES TO THE ACRE.—Several times during the last four years we have taken occasion to call attention to the new process of cotton planting so successfully pursued by Mr. J. A. Crump, of this county. The result of this process was 1310 pounds of ginned cotton to the acre in 1877, 1,000 in 1878, and this season the prospects are good for the heaviest yield he has ever had. For the benefit of our readers and exchanges, we will again give Mr. Crump's formula. He prepares his land in December by digging holes three feet from each other, each eighteen inches square and eighteen inches deep; these holes he fills with manure to within four inches of the top, and the remainder of the way with the top soil. At the usual season he plants with a view to having three stalks to a hill, and dries the clay from the bottoms of the pits as deep over their tops as the supply will admit of, with a view to keeping down the grass, and then cultivates with hand and hoe, never allowing a plow to be used. The preparation is made in December in order to subdue the fiery qualities of the fertilizers and the holes when prepared will make at least three crops without changing their contents—the second crop generally being the best, and the first and third about the same. This plan has gotten beyond the sphere of experiment, and there is no longer necessity for a man to scrape over a dozen acres when he can obtain more cotton and better cotton by cultivating two or three by Mr. Crump's process.—Aberdeen Examiner.

NEATNESS OF HOMES.—One can almost detect a neat and tidy home in passing along. See the snow-white curtains peeping through the window, the door-step or porch as free from dirt and dust as broom and water can make it, a neat little yard around the house and not a particle of litter on it. How cozy and comfortable it looks; one is almost tempted to stop. How much we should appreciate a home like this, but some do not appear to realize what a pleasure there is in it. Almost every one can have such homes with a little judicious labor. How pleasant it is to sit down on an evening after the dull and irksome task of getting the sons and the busy jobs of the day are over, in a neat, tidy room. It is not always the largest house or the wealthiest that is the nearest and happiest. Poor people can live happily and cleanly if they have but one small room. God has provided us plentifully with pure sparkling water and we can all use it freely. Cleanliness next to godliness is what is a better which we should bear in mind.

"How pleasant 'tis to rest
Where cleanliness abides;
A cheerful heart and kind, sweet voice,
A blessed home of tidiness."

—Toledo Blade

WHERE FARMING PAYS.—It is now estimated that the wheat crop of Indiana for the year will be from forty to fifty million bushels, and will bring into the State and add to its invested wealth from thirty five to forty millions of dollars. No such sum has ever been added to the wealth of a State with as little risk or as great a profit upon the capital and labor invested. It is not an unusual or exceptional thing for the product to be equal to one-half the value of the soil that produced it. Thousands of acres of land in the State have, in two years, produced wheat equal in value to the land producing it. The product of corn has been very little behind that of wheat in point of profit. This, of course, is not a common or even an average result, taking one year with another. The last three have been favored years with the farmers, and the farmer who has not done well during that period may reasonably conclude that there is something wrong in his case demanding investigation.—Indianapolis Journal.

CURIOSITIES IN POMOLOGY.—Some years ago one of our citizens brought and set out some thirty young apple trees. On one of them he neglected to remove the wooden label which was attached to one of the limbs by a copper wire. Two years later he found that as the copper wire was entirely imbedded and out of sight in the bark of the tree, and that year the limb was so heavily loaded with apples that he was obliged to prop it up, while there was not a blossom or apple on any other limb. Last year one of our neighbors, whose young apple trees were in full blossom, carefully girdled some limbs on several trees, and the blossoms produced no fruit on the limbs thus treated, but this year those limbs have blossomed full and no blossoms on the limbs that bore last year. Pomologists may profit by further experiment in that direction.—Hartford Evening Post.

EGG PUDDING.—Half a cup of butter, one egg, beaten with the butter, one cup of molasses, one teaspoonful of saleratus, one cup of brown sugar, two-thirds of a cup of milk, one teaspoonful cinnamon, one nutmeg, half a teaspoonful of cloves, half a cup of currants, half a cup of raisins, well floured, one teaspoonful of cream-tartar, sifted in with two and a half cups of flour. Stir the flour in gradually, and beat all thoroughly together. Pour into a buttered tin pan. Set in a steamer and steam one hours. To be eaten with hard sauce; or any other kind most agreeable. Here-abouts the orange trees, the juice of the orange is often used in sauces, and to our taste is much to be preferred to lemon.

We prefer to have milk that is set in open pans cool, to skim in from twelve to thirty-six hours, the year round, and ripen ready to churn when the cream is removed, but not really sour, nor thick, like curdled milk. We prefer to have cream slightly acid when it goes into the churn, summer and winter, because it usually comes to butter more rapidly, while the quality is equally good as from perfect sweet cream. Milk that has become so sour as to curdle and remain in its single flakes, will be caught in the butter in the form of white specks. Sometimes this may happen in the best kept dairies. Sudden souring, in its early stages, is not injurious to cream for making good butter.—New England Farmer.

SIGNS.—English gardeners place hundreds of marked intervals straight down feet along the border of garden walks. The sign are attached to the bran, and in the morning each little heads found covered with them. The ground is then gone over again, this time the operator providing himself with a dust pan and small broom and an empty bucket, and it is an easy matter to sweep up the little heaps and empty them, dirt and all, into the bucket. In this way many hundreds have been taken up, a light walk and a little soil and water be placed on the bottom of the bucket. The edges coming in contact with it produce instantly destroyed.

CRAWFISH.—As soon as I discover pearl-ings, the leaves turning dark, I take a pencil and rub all the outer bark on all the limbs as high as I can well reach and three down the trunk. The first time I tried this remedy was ten years ago. Every limb recovered, and I have tried it as often as the limbs have been attacked. My trees are fine and healthy now. The theory is, poisoned sap escapes where the slit is made that the animal be made as soon as there is any appearance of blight.

MOLASSES CAKE (old-fashioned).—One cup of molasses, one teaspoonful of saleratus, dissolved in a cup of boiling water, one tablespoonful of ginger, one tablespoonful of butter or lard; stir this all together. Then pour in the cupful of boiling water, and stir in flour enough to make a thin batter. It is important that the water be boiling when poured on, and that the whole be beaten quickly and vigorously while adding the flour, taking care that no lumps are left in. Bake about an inch thick in a sheet.

EGGS are most healthful when eaten early in the day.

THIS GIN has been in use for the past six seasons, and several recent improvements have been added. It obviates all friction at the end of the cotton box, prevents the roll from breaking, and gives a larger yield of lint from the same amount of seed than any other gin in use. The Revolving Head lightens the draft and causes the gin to run by with less driving power, thus doing a great deal more work with the same time, while accomplishing steady or animal power, than any other Gin. The seed, being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, producing cotton on this account of a greater market value. This improved value given by length of staple, with extra production of lint, added to increased amount of work done more than covers the cost of the Gin in every 80 bales ginned. Testimonials kept by mail on application.

Feeders and Condensers with latest improvements, also made by the Daniel Pratt Gin Co. to work with these Gins. Send for descriptive circulars.

THE ANCIENT LAKE DWELLERS.—The Swiss explorations this year have furnished a large number of additional relics of the lake dwellers. The most important of these "finds" has been at Sceiery, in Canton Bertie, in a small lake and adjoining peat-bog. The bulk of these remains consisted of the usual flint and bone implements, articles in wood and pottery. The pottery is very primitive, made entirely by hand, and baked before an open fire. Nevertheless, some of the specimens possess a certain rude shapeliness, sufficient to show that the designers or makers of them were not altogether destitute of artistic instinct. The lake Dwellers were also basket makers, and not unskilled in carpentry, one of the "finds" being a pent basket-handle exactly like those in use now, and the ancient handles are exceedingly well made. One wooden instrument bears an almost startling likeness to the stock of a pistol, and might easily be converted into one; it probably served as the haft of a bone tool or weapon for boring or thrusting. Bone chisels were numerous, varying in size from one to ten centimetres long, and from one to two centimetres broad. Arrow heads of the same material were found, and the inverted bone of a stag, fashioned into a pair of forks, and evidently intended for use at table. This gives a higher antiquity to forks for eating than has ever before been ascribed to them, and shows that the elegancies of life were by no means unknown to the primitive inhabitants of the lake; and from the number of bone hairpins found amongst the flint tools and weapons of war, it is evident that they paid some attention to the adornment of their persons. The animal remains found on the turf moor are numerous. Among them are the bones of the dog, the badger, and the common otter. The latter were doubtless met with in the immediate neighborhood of the lake, but the presence of the bones of the wild ox and of the bear in force that the lake-dwellers were bold and successful hunters, as well as ingenious toolmakers. They were also keepers of cattle, for the most numerous animal remains brought to light were those of the common cow and the moor-cow. These exist in every stage of growth, showing that their owners had a taste for both veal and beef, while their fondness for venison is proved by the many bones of the stag and roe discovered by the explorers. Even now of a like character so certain they were hunters of the wild boar and caters of the common ox, and the existence of the beaver in Switzerland in prehistoric times is attested by the presence, among other bones, of several which comparative anatomists declare to have belonged to that rodent. One omission in the list is striking. No mention is made of the bones of horses having been found, from which it may be inferred with desirable certainty that the horse was either unknown to the ancient lake-dwellers, or that they had not succeeded in capturing and taming him.

COLORED GLASS PICTURES.—The ancients had almost similar method of fixing pictures with colored glass. It consisted in laying together slices of glass of various colors, so that each of them with the next one presented the aspect of a picture, the different colors of the glass being opposed to the parts of the object represented. In the spaces of the picture which were destroyed in order that it might be fastened together the painting was supplied by pieces of glass of appropriate colors, so that when formed in the manner of mosaic work, the pieces appeared to the eye united to each other by means of powerful magnifying glasses called the eyebrows to discover it. One plate described by Winkelman exhibits a duck of various colors, the outlines of which are well designed and sharply defined; and every part of such a picture must be held up to the light, the artist having employed in some parts an opaque, and in others a transparent glass. The picture appears to be continued throughout these gradations of the specimen, as the reverse corresponds in the minutest points to the face, so that were it possible to cut transversely, the same picture of the duck would be found exhibited on every section. It is conjectured this curious process was the first attempt of the ancients to preserve the colors by fusing them into the internal part of the glass, which was, however, but imperfectly done, as the colors have not been preserved from the action of the atmosphere.

H. S. Poole, of Nova Scotia, presented a paper upon the goldfields of that province before the Geological Society of London, last March, in which he claims the lead to be true veins, because 1. the planes of contact between the slate and quartz are irregular; 2. the strata on some foot walls is much crushed; 3. the mineral contents are irregularly disposed; 4. the coils terminate abruptly; 5. strings and offsets affect the quality of the veinstone; 6. it has well-defined mineral bodies. The opposing view is that the quartz and slates are interstratified beds. He also refers to the existence of gold in the carboniferous conglomerate.

THE BEST REMEDY

FOR

Diseases of the Throat and Lungs.

Diseases of the pulmonary organs are so prevalent and fatal, that a safe and reliable remedy for them is invaluable to every community. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL is such a remedy, and to other so eminently merits the confidence of the public. It is scientific combination of the medicinal principles and curative virtues of the finest drugs, chemically united. To insure the greatest possible efficiency and uniformity of results, which enables physicians as well as invalids to use it with confidence. It is the most reliable remedy for diseases of the throat and lungs that science has produced. It strikes at the foundation of all pulmonary diseases, allaying prompt and certain relief, and is adapted to patients of any age or either sex. Being very palatable, the youngest children take it without difficulty. In the treatment of ordinary Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Influenza, Clergyman's Sore Throat, Asthma, Croup, and Catarrh, the effects of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL are magical, and multitudes are annually preserved from serious illness by its timely and faithful use. It should be kept at hand in every household, for the protection it affords in sudden attacks. In Whooping-cough and Consumption there is no other remedy so efficacious, soothing, and helpful.

The marvellous cures which AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL has effected all over the world are a sufficient guaranty that it will continue to produce the best results. An impartial trial will convince the most sceptical of its wonderful curative powers, as well as of its superiority over all other preparations for pulmonary complaints.

Eminent physicians in all parts of the country, knowing its compositions, recommend AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL to invalids, and prescribe it in their practice. The test of half a century has proved its absolute certainty to cure all pulmonary complaints not already beyond the reach of human aid.

CAN'T PREACH GOOD.

No man can do a good job of work preach a good sermon, try a law suit well, doctor a patient or write a good article when he feels miserable and dull, with sluggish brain and unsteady nerves and nor should make the attempt in such case, as by a little Hop Bitters it can be so easily and cheaply removed by a little Hop Bitters. See "Truths" and "Proverbs," other column. Adv.

They have a curious way of deciding law suits in North Siam. Both parties are put under cold water, and the one staying the longest wins the suit. In this country both parties are thrust into hot water, and then kept there as long as possible.

White Wheat Bread.—Sift any one quart of flour with two teaspoonfuls Kellogg's Baking Powder and a little salt; make a soft dough with water or sweet milk, and bake right away.

PREVENT
YELLOW FEVER.

It has been well proved that prevention is better than cure. A certain, safe and effective preventative for Yellow Fever and other fevers has been found in BENSON'S CAPCINE PORO-PLASTERS. They were during the past season in New Orleans very successfully the means of a great deal of using them over the body, over the stomach, cash applied to every weak place. They are one OF THE MOST ACTIVE ANTISEPTICS and tonics to destroy the poison. One reason why they are to powerful is the fact that they actually increase the vitality, enable the system to overcome the influence of the malarial poison if they are a deep and effectual preventative, ask your druggist to speak about them. Be sure Capcine Plasters are a sure preventative and cure for chills and fever if worn as above. Price, 25 cents.

Ole Bull was once seeing the fights at Donnybrook Fair, when he was attracted by the sound of a very loud violin in a tent. He entered and said to the player: "My good friend, do you play by note?"

"The divil a note, sir."

"Do you play by ear, then?"

"Never an ear, yer honor."

"How do you play then?"

"Be main strength, be jabers."

DISCOVERY by which hair can be forced to grow on the smoothest heads. The papers all over the country contain notices of the remarkable virtues of Mrs. Hyatt's Hair Restorer, and there are scores of living witnesses in St. Louis who take pleasure in testifying to the efficiency of the Restorer. Mrs. Hyatt's principle is the most reasonable, because it is the process on the well-based supposition that the hair germ never dies while life exists in the person, and that it is only necessary to stimulate the germ to produce a natural hair growth. Three bottles for $5; $1 to accompany the order and balance to be paid when medicine is delivered.

EXTRACT FROM LETTER OF DR. WM. T. HOWARD,

Of Baltimore, Professor of Diseases of Women and Children in the University of Maryland, of August 1, 1879.

Dr. Howard compares these waters with those of the celebrated Greenbrier White Sulphur, West Virginia, and adds the following:

"Indeed, in a certain class of cases, it is much superior to the latter. For quite to the abiding debility attendant upon the early convalescence of grave acute diseases, and even in chronic cases of long standing, it is the best remedy I possess. And in the case of those peculiar affections of females, which are so frequently dependent upon MALARIOUS FEVERS IN ALL THEIR GRADES AND VARIETIES, to certain forms of which the female system is so liable, I have SAFE TONIC PECULIAR TO WOMEN that surpasses in efficacy all the mineral waters. In short, were I called upon to state from what mineral waters I have seen the greatest and most palpable amount of good accrue in the largest number of cases in a general way, I would at once say the Buffalo Springs, in Spicklesburg county, Virginia."

MALARIAL POISONS.

Extract from communication of Dr. John W. Wilkinson, of Jackson Town, on the Therapeutic Action of the Buffalo Lithia Waters, in Virginia Medical Monthly for February 1877.

"Their great value in MALARIAL DISEASES and SEQUELÆ has been proved abundantly and satisfactorily to myself, and I have no question that it would have been a valuable auxiliary in the treatment of the epidemic of yellow fever that so fearfully afflicted the Mississippi Valley during the past summer. I prescribed it in my own and gave prompt relief in a case of suppressed urine in a yellow fever, and it exhibited unmistakable evidence of arresting and dangerous symptoms. The patient recovered, but how far the water may have contributed to this result, having prescribed it in so few cases, of course cannot undertake to say. The fact is evident, however, above the fact that its administration was attended by the most beneficial results."

These springs are now open for visitors. The waters may be had at the Springs at $5 per case of six gallons. It may also be had of L. L. Lyons, No. 42 and 44 Camp street, New Orleans, at $6.50 per case. Spring's pamphlet sent on application.

TESTIMONIALS FROM WELL KNOWN PERSONS.

From Mrs. General Sherman.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 21 1870.

Messrs. Lynch & Gomien:

Gentlemen: I privately made choice of one of with the Piano you came to for me. It is really a beautiful instrument, and is to me a source of much pleasure. I find their tone clear and melodious, their action elastic, and the touch of every note perfect and is what, as a lady, I have sought and found it. For it is the home, the charm of which, and beauty of Polish. Many good musicians and distinguished persons have called since it has been in our parlor, and all pronounce it a fine instrument. We ourselves are much pleased with it. I shall most certainly recommend it to my friend who may wish to purchase.

I am, very truly and respectfully yours,
ELLEN B. E. SHERMAN,
2004 street.

St. James, December 27, 1875.

Messrs. Lynch & Gomien:

Gentlemen: I am very happy to be able to rank your Pianos as one of the very best I ever had and saw. I think the power and brilliancy of tone required to perform the great pieces of modern and classic masters are equal to any Piano made in this country. Hoping that your Pianos will withstand our climate as well as any other manufactured at the North, I shall with much pleasure recommend them wherever I have an opportunity. Very respectfully yours,

ANTONY WIMMER
Professor of Music, St. Mary, Jefferson College, St. James, La., (Convent, P. O.)

From St. Vincent's Asylum, Beverly, P. O., Hunterdon County, Pa.

Messrs. Lynch & Gomien:

Gentlemen: The two Pianos have safely arrived, and on the 25th day of being here have reached a position of honor much above that for which they were originally intended. For notwithstanding their limited warning dresses, they have been put into the Music Class Letters of rich rosewood, possessing fine and full tone, fine touch, tasteful of serving the ends at the practice they will be used on for years to come, which sums and meet many compliments.

From this it is evident that the instrument you sent me did not only meet, but far surpass my expectations. I find their tone clear and melodious, their action elastic, and the touch of every note perfect, and is what, as a lady, I have sought and found it. For it is the home, the charm of which, and beauty of Polish. Many good musicians and distinguished persons have called since it has been in our parlor, and all pronounce it a fine instrument. We ourselves are much pleased with it. I shall most certainly recommend it to my friend who may wish to purchase.

I am, very truly and respectfully yours,

THE INCARNATE.

BY H. F. LARRABEE.

The world has lingered, faltering God
From the beginning:
Its veiled shrines and Avatars,
Its sacred fires and Grand Llamas
Reproved all sinning.

At Ephumeus or Sybil's shrine
It tells its story,
Or sighs its deepest want and fear,
Or breathes Nirvanna in the air,
Or sages soary.

Bereft, estranged and all undone,
The soul far driven,
Forever in its nook above,
To find that God of boundless love,
From whom 'twas riven.

A woe is felt, as if the man
Had been divided;
His lighter part had fled away,
And left this self to spend its day,
A thing befriended.

It cries with blo, from age to age,
And wails forever
For Love to bring that higher coin,
Of breathe it down from the great whence,
The Eternal Giver.

But once, in time, the prayer was heard.
One rev'lation
Of God in love flowed down the steep,
The dismal, awful, human deep
Of Incarnation.

'Twas Very God that whispered down
The interspaces,
"I come, dear souls to heal thy grief,
And bring eternal, glad relief—
Divine embraces.

"The Uncreated Soul so loved"
The lost created,
That now in flesh It's nature high
Assumes the mode's, and grows for aye,
The Uncreated.

What wondrous light and life now streams
Through humanity,
From that bright robe where God meets man,
And draws him up the heavenly plan
Of endless glory.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 26.—Nine new cases five whites and four colored were reported to the Board of Health this morning, among the number R. M. Pound and Alex. Boyd.

Six deaths from fever have been reported since last night: Mrs. Minnie Wilkie, Jytle Stewart, Alex Boyd, Wm. Atwood, John Diersmann, James Hunt, colored. J. D. Stewart was a well known railroad teacher.

NEW YORK, Aug. 29.—Advices from Lima received here to-day, report that Capt. Reig and a small band of partisans has declared an armed convoy and captured a supply train, between Manzanilla and Bayamo, with thirty thousand dollars in gold coin, sixty thousand cartridges, and a large quantity of provisions, clothing and stores.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 30.—Middle quarantine lines New Orleans all night to 10 o'clock to-morrow night. This port remains perfectly free from fever.

NATCHEZ, Aug. 30.—Drs. Meng and Miller report the case of Major Hodge, of the United States survey party, as yellow fever. Hodge, it is said, will not live through the night. No other cases in Vicksburg. Natchez is perfectly healthy. The board of aldermen this evening adopted non intercourse with Vicksburg and all infected points. The torpedo system is in force. The country quarantine is strict.

DEADWOOD, Aug. 30.—Col. N. A. Miles arrived at Fort Keogh on Thursday with his command, consisting of seven companies of the 5th Infantry. He brought with him nearly one thousand half-breeds, who have been furnishing arms and ammunition to the Indians between Yellowstone and the boundary line.

He has cleared the country of all roving bands and driven Sitting Bull's followers across the American line, besides breaking up the illicit traffic in arms and ammunition between the half-breeds and hostile Indians. The campaign has been very successful considering the small loss to Col. Miles.

There was a terrific hail storm at Fort Keogh yesterday afternoon, which completely destroyed the quarters of Company H, 5th Infantry, and unroofed several other buildings.

MORGAN CITY, Sept. 1, Noon.—A hurricane is prevailing here. The barometer has fallen 4-10 since 10 A. M., and is now 28 70 and is still falling. The gale is steadily increasing. It is impossible to give a detailed account of the damage to property. The steamboats Sammie and Alber a were both sunk and a sawmill blown down across the bay at Berwick.

A portion of the iron shed of Morgan's wharf and a portion of the engine shed have been blown down, also Erman's ice house.

Some dwellings were blown down from their foundations. The damage to crops along Bayou Teche must be immense.

2 P. M.—The Presbyterian Church and the new school house were completely demolished. Barometer still falling. A terrific gale prevails. The streets of the city are flooded.

4 P. M.—Morgan's Teche Warehouse was blown down and the roof carried across Front street, injuring the stores of L. Loeb and A. Erman. The gale is terrible this evening.

MEMPHIS, Sept. 1.—Sixteen cases in all, 13 white and 3 colored, were reported to the Board of Health to-day. Four additional interments have been reported by the undertakers. Walter B. Lucas, William H. West, Mrs. W. G. Richardson and Daniel P. Homes. The city is being thoroughly disinfected under the auspices of the State Board of Health officials. Dr. John Gordon, the physician sent by the Howards to Julian Bedford at Bailey, Tenn., returned this afternoon and reports him down with a genuine case of yellow fever. W. H. Joyce, a bookkeeper at the Western Union Telegraph office, of this city, was stricken at noon. The Howards placed thirty additional nurses on duty to-day. The weather is cloudy. The thermometer has ranged between 78 and 84 degrees.

FOREIGN.

HONG KONG, Aug. 4.—The suit brought in the British Court at Shanghai by missionaries against the Chinese on account of alleged outrage by mob of the latter, has been decided against the missionaries.

RIO JANEIRO, Aug. 1.—A dispatch from Santiago, capital of Cuzl, dated July 31st, says: Serious riots occurred in that city in consequence of popular discontent of the war. The populace erected a barricade and shouted, "Death to the Labor Ministry." Two persons were killed in the conflict with the troops, and several wounded. Disorder prevailed and the Civilian President fled to a place called Sapho Bis Vina Del Mar.

YOKOHAMA, Aug. 13.—A movement is in progress for the organization of a new society, having in view the better protection of the Eastern nations against the perpetual aggression of European powers. Gen. Grant will sail for America by the next Inman steamer.

Cholera in Japan still continues virulent, but there are signs of abatement. There have this year been 15,000 cases and 12,000 deaths. The Government displays unflagging energy in confronting and checking the disease.

ODESSA, Aug. 26.—The remaining two of the five Nihilists found guilty by military tribunal, have been hanged at Odessa. These make twelve executions in Russia for political offenses within a year. Two more prisoners are under death sentence for participating in the plot to kill the Czar when he was at Nicolaieff.

LONDON, Aug. 27.—Sir Rowland Hill died this morning, aged 84 years.

LONDON, Aug. 27.—The Standard's Vienna correspondent telegraphs that Count Andrassy has announced that after his retirement from office he will lead an active parliamentary life.

HAVANA, Aug. 27.—Ninety-five deaths from yellow fever are reported for last week. A decrease of five from previous week.

LONDON, Aug. 28.—Lloyd's agent at Yokohama telegraphs, under date of August 25th, that the steamer Nordenskjold, supposed to be the attending of the Nordenskjold Arctic Expedition, has been totally lost. The crew were saved.

LONDON, Aug. 28.—Renewal of floods are reported from various parts of England and Wales. The reports of the harvest are daily more deplorable. At several places there has been nearly forty hours steady and continuous rain.

LONDON, Aug. 28.—The Manchester Guardian reports that the farmers who sailed from Liverpool yesterday in the steamer Helvetia, with the intention of settling in Texas, are from Northumberland and Durham. They are of various classes, ranging from small tenant farmers upward.

Several of them command capital of from five hundred to six hundred pounds, while others have entered into a partnership, one group having raised a capital of twelve hundred pounds.

LONDON, Aug. 29.—An extra edition of the Daily Telegraph contains the following dispatch from Plevna, dated August 27th: Sir Garnet Wolseley arrived at Ulundi August 26th. Here telegraphs from that point as follows:

"Colonel Clark's column joined me here on the 24th. The country is quiet. The enemy's army have dispersed to their homes. I am in communication with the principal chiefs, who say they will come to shut submit. King Cetewayo is fled very far off, and there is a prospect of an early and peaceable settlement. The health of all the troops is excellent."

LISBON, Aug. 29.—The Geneva correspondent of the Times telegraphs: The St. Gothard tunnel is rapidly approaching completion; five thousand men are now engaged upon it, and fresh hands are being taken on daily. Eleven hundred and thirty-five metres remain to be bored. The tunnel will probably be finished by the end of the year. The Mont Bonere branch will be commenced October 1, and its completion is expected to be simultaneous with that of the main line.

FIELD NOTES.

ALABAMA.

COLUMBIANA, ALA., Aug. 16.—For the encouragement of the church we hold a meeting at Wilsonville, lasting four days, which resulted in twelve accessions to the church. The following week, at Harpersville, was our quarterly meeting. Andrew West, D. E., our presiding elder, was on hand to preach. The meeting was protracted, resulting in great good; four accessions; more to join.

T. E. ROBERTS.

TUSKALOOSA, ALA., Aug. 17.—I am sorry to inform you that you will have to strike from your roll the name of Dr. Samuel Smith. For years he has been a subscriber for the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, and was devotedly attached to this paper. He loved the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He lived and died an acceptable member of Tuskaloosa station. He was an upright, honest old man, respected and loved by those who knew him. He was born in South Carolina, March 7, 1800, and died in peace at Talley's Springs, Ala., June 3, 1879.

FRANK BRANDON.

RUSSELLVILLE, ALA., Aug. 20.—Our meeting at New Hurgh began on the 10th instant and closed on the thirteenth. Results, thirteen accessions and thirty conversions. This was truly a joyous occasion, causing wanderers to return, wayfarers to reform. One barroom, and the only one in town, was caused to be closed by the wonder-working Holy Spirit. The proprietors thereof preferring to be "door-keepers in the house of the Lord rather than dwell in the tents of wickedness." Bro. Parker again gave us his services. Crops fine. Weather pleasant. Country's health good.

THOMAS F. DAVIS.

LEIGHTON, ALA., Aug. 21.—We are having a good meeting at Shady Grove Church; five conversions and five accessions to the church. Several penitents at the altar. One adult and three infants baptized. The congregation was large and serious. The meeting is progressing with interest. The spiritual and financial interests of the church much improved, and a good prospect of a neat house being built soon, which is much needed at Shady Grove.

EVAN NICHOLSON.

VILLULA, ALA., Aug. 22.—Our protracted meeting at Malone's chapel, four miles of Eutaula, began August 15, and up to yesterday, August 21, there had been several bright conversions and seventeen added to the church. Night before last and yesterday were days of power in the church. Many of the members received fuller and brighter communications of Divine love than ever before. The meeting still goes on, but I had to leave to attend the Quarterly Conference, to-morrow, at Oswichee.

ANGUS BOWLING.

OAKLAND, ALA., Aug. 22.—I have held four protracted meetings. The Lord was with us, graciously blessing the people, reviving the spiritually dead, making them to rejoice again in the salvation of God, convicting and converting the sinner. Had twenty-nine conversions and thirty accessions. Bros. T. F. Davis and Z. A. Parker assisted me at one place.

W. T. KEITH, P. C.

ALEXANDER CITY, ALA., Aug. 22.—At Pearson's chapel we had a good meeting. Five conversions and five accessions to the church. We were assisted by M. N. Morris, of Socapatoy circuit, and the local preachers of the neighborhood. I think the church is in a better condition than it has been for the last two years.

C. L. DOWNS.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., Aug. 22.—Have held protracted meetings at two appointments. The Lord was with us in convicting and converting power. Eight accessions, and the church greatly strengthened. Have spent several hundred dollars repairing and improving churches, and are forthrough yet. There is a prospect for the erection of a new schoolhouse in our village.

G. S. PERRY.

ABBAHOOCHEE CIRCUIT, ALA., August.—Our third quarterly meeting was held at Ragan's chapel, August 23. The presiding elder, Rev. John B. Stevenson, was at his best. The Lord was with us in revival power. Baptized twelve children and three adults. Six additions to the church and five conversions. The church is in a prosperous condition all over the work. Crops good.

J. E. W'CAIN, P. C.

GAYLESVILLE, ALA., Aug. 26.—Am now on the eastern part of the district. Some good revivals. Bro. Bell, on Gaylesville circuit, and Bro. Slaughter, on the Centre Hill circuit, have had some good meetings. Our district meeting was an occasion of more than ordinary interest. We are trying now to build a district parsonage with fair prospects of success. The weather is very cool, morning and evening. Crops much injured by drought.

W. L. CLAYTON.

NEWMAN, ALA., Aug. 26.—We had a good meeting at Belmont. Several conversions, and eight accessions to the church. I had to preach a week without any help. I commenced a week before my quarterly meeting, had Dr. Cox with me on Saturday and Sunday; then Brother came to my help on Monday. I have just closed a week's meeting at Brewersville, which resulted in some conversions, and eight accessions to the church.

J. W. MOORE.

DECATUR, ALA., Aug. 27.—We have had a delightful summer, cool breezes, good water, pleasing climate, and so far, good harvests. The outlook for this circuit full of joy and hope. Spiritually, we have nothing to complain of. The church is lively; have a new two story brick church on the way. The walls are up and finished. The wood work is progressing, and soon we hope to have it finished, when Methodism here will take a new hold upon life, and start anew for the attainment of her high and holy destiny. We now have nearly four hundred members.

A. S. ANDREWS.

PIKEVILLE, ALA., Aug. 28.—The Lord is pouring out His Spirit upon the people in this part. The Pikeville mission has been blessed with gracious revivals. We commenced a meeting last Sunday at a school-house in a neighborhood where there was no Methodist preaching. The meeting continued four days, resulting as follows: three bright conversions, many backsliders reclaimed, and the organization of a church with seventeen good members. The spiritual condition of the work is improving all over. Crops good, especially corn.

GEO. M. U'DENKIN.

VILLULA, ALA., Aug. 29.—Last night we closed a very interesting meeting at Oswichee Church, Villula circuit, of six days' continuance, beginning with the third Quarterly Conference, resulting in seven conversions, six accessions, two adults baptized, seven "little children," and also a whole church greatly refreshed and encouraged. The congregation increased in size from service to service. Ten or twelve heads of families promised to establish the family altar. Upon the whole, the meeting was a delightful success. That faithful man of God, Bro. J. N. Owens, was with us.

ANGUS BOWLING.

MISSISSIPPI.

BRANDON District, Mississippi Conference.—I am informed, by a note from Brandon, that they will not be able to hold a camp meeting there this year, but will have their tabernacle ready for dedication at the District Conference, and the meeting will be in the form of a basket meeting. I make this statement that brethren attending may not be disappointed. Can you not come to the District Conference? I have just returned from a camp meeting at Hunter's Spring, where about twenty-five professed conversion. The Lord is greatly blessing the church in our district.

WILL B. LEITH.

ICKA, MISS., Aug. 23.—Bro. Robertson, at this place, has had a delightful revival—some fifteen to twenty conversions, and about as many accessions. Another feature in the church is a female prayer meeting, which has been maintained for more than six years, and now more numerously attended than ever. Liquors of all kinds, and for all purposes, are absolutely contraband in Iuka. The result is a quiet, orderly people.

W. B. ARMSTRONG.

COLD WATER, MISS., Aug. 26.—We are just entering the third week of a most interesting meeting. A powerful work of grace is going on throughout the community. Twelve conversions and sixteen accessions to date. We are closely quarantined, and our presiding elder, Bro. Barton, is still cut off from his work.

T. V. RAMSEY, JR., P. C.

DEKALB, MISS., Aug. 28.—We have just closed the sixth protracted meeting on the circuit with blessed results. Revival in the church. Large number of conversions.

A. B. NICHOLSON.

LOUISIANA.

MONTGOMERY, LA., Aug. 11.—I preached a series of sermons at Atlanta, including the third Sabbath in July. Result of the meeting, fourteen added to the church, several baptized. Twenty-nine have been added to the church in that place this year. Large Sabbath school. Prayer meetings twice a week. Congregation on Sabbath large and attentive. Health good. Crops generally good in that vicinity.

C. E. GODFREY.

OAK RIDGE CIRCUIT, LA., Aug. 12.—This is a highly favored section, rich lands, fine crops, good seasons and generous people. We are glad to note some signs of religious improvement. 1. Preacher living in a comfortable parsonage, built this year, and paid for. 2. Eight persons added to the church in the regular services. 3. The result of a week's protracted effort at Good Hope was thirty-eight accessions, many clear, bright conversions, and members greatly revived. 4. Steps taking to build a church at Good Hope. 5. Congregations growing.

N. S. POUNELL, P. C.

EAST BATON ROUGE, LA., Aug. 13.—We have just closed a meeting of great interest at Deer Ford Church, which resulted in eleven additions to the church and ten professions. We now have a good organization, and look for a strong society to be built up there. Raining almost continuously for several days. Crops will be injured by it, no doubt.

GRIFFIN T. DAVIS.

HOMER, LA., Aug. 17.—I have just closed a very interesting meeting at White Hall, Haynesville circuit, assisted by Bros. Stone, Smith and Jordan, resulting in thirty-five conversions and thirty accessions to our church. It was a time of great power. I am still suffering with my throat. The doctors advise rest. I will have to try it.

JOHN A. MILLER.

WINNFIELD, LA., Aug. 18.—I opened a four days' meeting, three miles from this place, on the 15th of this month. Fourteen were added to the church, mostly heads of families. Membership very much revived and built up. Several baptized. Health of the people good. Corn crop about half. Cotton a little better.

C. R. GODFREY.

BELLEVUE, LA., Aug. 20.—I closed a few days ago a protracted meeting at Pleasant Valley Church. Quite a revival in the church; four accessions; and half a dozen or more conversions. Other meetings are to follow at different points. Weather very dry and cool. Health good. Crops in this parish the best are very spotted. The average though, I believe, will be better than any other parish in this section.

S. W. MEDLOCK.

LISBON PRIMITIVE, LA., Aug. 18.—Bro. John L. Williams, pastor. Still the good work goes on in power. Just closed, yesterday, a meeting at Providence, which resulted in the addition of eighteen members to the church and twenty-five conversions. Also at Harmony chapel. Results, nine members. Providence had been dropped from the work, and consequently many had grown cold; but now the church is a power in the hands of God.

W. T. ST. JOHN.

SPARTA, LA., Aug. 21.—Sparta circuit is greatly revived. We held a meeting at Mt. Lebanon, lasting eight days. Fifteen were added to the church. Had a four days' meeting at Sparta, resulting in twelve additions to our number. There the good work is going on generally. The Baptist church here is wonderfully revived. Judge D. F. Head, a licentiate in that church, has commenced preaching with wonderful success. We look forward for greater revivals still. Cotton crops promising. Corn out of one half. People very healthy here. Sparta camp meeting commences on Wednesday before the second Sunday in September.

R. M. CROWSON.

COVINGTON, LA., Aug. 28.—Rev. A. L. Peebles and myself have been holding protracted meetings at several points on the circuit. Services well attended, much interest manifested, and a few accessions. The principal crop here is timber. Just getting last year's logs off to market. The first high water in a year. Crops of corn partially destroyed by drought. Plenty of rain now. Many hopes for rice and potatoes. Cane is a failure. Health good. People cheerful and hopeful. Like the new Constitution, and are looking for better times.

GEO. T. VICKERS.

CADDO CIRCUIT, LA., Aug. 24.—This is my third year on this (Caddo) circuit, and truly we may say the Lord has been with us during the last quarter. Held three protracted meetings and one camp meeting. At Greenwood, two conversions and two additions. At Friendship, eleven additions, the church much strengthened, and all seem to be of one mind. At Bell Bower, thirteen additions, and backsliders reclaimed. Cypress Bayou camp meeting was a success. Truly, it was good to be there. Corn crops not half as good as last year. Cotton much injured. Health good.

J. M. JOHNSTON, P. C.

HOMER, LA., Aug. 25.—As one of my churches (Tulip) I have just closed a meeting, protracted seven days, resulting in five conversions and thirty accessions. During the third quarter I have baptized twenty-eight children and eighteen adults. Bros. Jordan and Joiner were ready and efficient helpers. Crops are light. Cotton prospects seriously blighted by rust. Finances are far behind, as usual. Health at present very good.

A. PARKER.

ARNEVILLE, LA., Aug. 25.—I have but few items of religious news that are encouraging. We have had several protracted meetings, but there were but few conversions, and not much visible good. There seems to be too little zeal and faith on the part of the majority of the members of the church, and some of the preachers receive so little encouragement that they appear to be disheartened, and even the most pious church members do not seem to be as people as they should. You may think this a dark picture of the work and surely it is dark enough, but it is true. We need a revival all over this land. Pray for the Baptism of the Holy Ghost. Pray for us and the perishing souls around us.

J. D. HARPER.

MISCELLANEOUS.

BEDIAS, GRIMES COUNTY, TEXAS, Aug. 17.—I came to Texas five years ago, and found Methodism very low at Bedias. Six years ago the church here numbered thirteen; today she numbers 110. Six years ago there was no Sabbath-school; to-day we have a good school. It numbers 100 scholars. We have a good singing choir. We have local option. Lately organized a temperance council, numbering about sixty members. Dry and hot. Crops short, especially corn. Health tolerably good.

J. W. JONES.

A Noble Spirit—R. W. Rayne.

MR. EDITOR: The city of New Orleans has of late lost one of its best citizens—Robert Walker Rayne—in his seventy-third year. He had been in business there for more than thirty years, active and enterprising from the first, and never more so than at the time of his death. The city is largely indebted to him for the now successful railway connection about being completed between Berwick Bay and Texas. It seemed as if the legislation of the State, and the united interests of commerce and trade, were not able to overcome the powerful monopolies which for years have defeated every attempt to connect New Orleans by rail with the growing empire of Texas. It is not going too far to say that years ago, he was the first to project such a road, and he never lost sight of it until at last his purpose was realized, and by his private personal influence and that was successfully turned that way. At the time of his death he was the president of the Vermillion and Orange link of this road. He had been ailing several years when the enterprise was undertaken. He did not live to see the road in running order, but long enough to know that it was graded, and the material bought and paid for necessary to its near completion.

This will give you a good blent of his character as a Methodist. His family and his wishes of faith, were as valuable to the church in New Orleans as his business qualities and success were to the city. And to begin at the last of his life, which, probably, is the natural order of biography, he enterprised and built for us one of our most substantial and beautiful churches. I am not sure but it is, for architectural propriety and effect, for spacious accommodation, and economy of cost, as well as for permanency and strength of material, a model among the churches of Methodism. Outside of himself, his business and personal friends, and his immediate family, there was not contributed to its building $1,000. The site is one of the best in the city, and the whole value of house and lot is $30,000. It is not often permitted to men to wield property enough to do so good a deed, and it is not often that men do such works of faith who have the means to do them. It had been twenty years since any house of worship of permanent value had been built in New Orleans by our denomination, when it pleased God to move his heart in this direction. Nearly forty years ago an individual, Judge Metichee, of Mississippi, had paid a very large proportion of the whole cost of the first brick Methodist Church in this city—"Poydras Street," now "Carondalet Street"—and this example may have had somewhat to do with this equally noble deed.

Bro. Rayne was born near Newcastle-on-Tyne, in Sunderland, England. He went to live with his uncle, Mr. Robert Walker, in London, when five years old. During his youth, at nine years of age, he was converted, and in his early manhood, he was accustomed to hear the Wesleyan preachers at City Road Chapel. It was during the ministry in London of Dr. Bunting, Robert Newton and other great spirits he became fully identified with the Wesleyans, and was licensed as a local preacher in that church. He married Miss Matilda Parker, of London; and, when twenty-four years old, he came out to Philadelphia, and subsequently moved to the West. There he united with the Methodist Protestant Church, and was appointed to Tanner's Creek circuit, and the year after to a church in Madison, Ind. Finding the support for his wife and children very inadequate, he moved to Cincinnati, and went into the shoe business. There he had the misfortune to lose his wife, and in the year after he was again married to Miss Mary Langdon, who survives him, as also one of the children by the first marriage, and five by the last. In 1845 he moved to New Orleans, where he had spent the several winters previous, and for years was in the wholesale shoe business, until the breaking out of the war. At the close of the war he may be said to have begun life again as a business man. Though over fifty years of age, his business strength was unabated, and the great success of his life was after this period. He worked up the Arrow cotton-tie path to its present wonderful value, and was never more active than at the time he died. He ceased at once to work and live.

During all this period he maintained an unblemished character as a man and as a Christian. He preached as a local preacher, and was a hearty and leading man in everything that advanced the cause of Christ. He had imbibed Wesleyan theology, and the Scriptures, and the hymns of Charles Wesley, until he had but to open his mouth, when verse after verse of God and accurate quotation, of rare exact and interesting expression, to all his thoughts, whether he preached or addressed his brethren in love feast, or poured out his soul in public prayer.

One of the charms of his life was his readiness to do good. He advanced the money required to publish the Sermons of Dr. Mansey, a while. He helped widows and poor people, and brethren in distress, without number; gave to colleges and churches, and, wherever he could, scattered seed that he might reap harvest hereafter. It was yet on the church of St. Charles Avenue was building, and only up to the window-sills, that he lost his right hand. He had minutely superintended all the drawings and plans before, and always afterwards to see the house in its unfinished details.

On the day before he died he was, to all appearance, quite well. He sat in the hall of his home by the sea-side, at this place; dined heartily, directed two important business letters, and as the shadows lengthened he rested, as was his evening custom; verses of Scripture, and sung hymns. The last words that his wife and daughter heard him utter were:

Father, I cheerfully hands to Thee,
No other help I know.

So he went to bed. It is supposed that, at early light the next morning his spirit passed away, leaving no trace of pain upon his face. He had died of apoplexy, died alone with his Lord.

He very much resembled, in size, countenance, shape of the head, and in person, Robert Newton, of England. As a husband, father, brother, citizen, Christian and minister, he nobly performed his parts in this life, and so passed from our sight, on to the rest at city, one of the nobles of Israel.

Yours truly, J. C. KEENER.

Pastoral Efficiency.

MR. EDITOR: In an experience of over a quarter of a century, as a pastor, I have found the want of means to supply myself with proper books and periodicals to supply the needy with religious papers, and to show practically, the greatest hindrances to efficiency in my work. A minister of the gospel in the pulpit and in the pastoral work, must be abreast with the best thought of the day or almost every subject or he cannot be successful in the highest acceptation of the term. Without books this is an impossibility. Without money he cannot have the books. Ignorance in the ministry is a curse, for which the laity are responsible.

Thousands of people would be induced to take our periodicals if they were put in possession of them for a time. By this means they would form a taste for such reading, being ignorant of the character of our papers and books, the masses are hard to persuade to buy them. Had the pastors money to place our papers in the hands of such, for a short time, many would continue them willingly. The pastor needs money, especially, to purchase "gift books" for the children. The pastor that is able to give good books to the children will win both children and parents. It is far better than for the Sunday school to give them. The pastor obtains by this means an influence for good that is very potent. Parsonages should be built and furnished, with a view to large hospitality. A small and poorly provided parsonage will often be the occasion of curtailing the efficiency of the preacher. The pastor that can say to all, come and enjoy my hospitality, has a magic wand of power for good.

With a pastor truly converted and called of God to preach, and not less than $101 per annum at his command for books, and at the least the same amount to use in purchasing gift books for the children, and introducing our literature among the people, and an amount for "table expenses" that will enable him to "use hospitality" largely, I would be safe in guaranteeing five hundred fold efficiency in the Master's work.

Look in it ye men of means! God holds you responsible for this part of His work.

If desire and pray and try to be efficient, but our success is made meager, indeed, for the want of money to meet the wants of the masses.

THE REPENTANT SINNER TO THE WORLD.

BY TRANSIENT.

O, thou world how deceitful how cruel thou art
Thou hast cheated my hopes, thou hast broken my heart.
From my trust and my love all forever depart!

All thy honors appear all thy gold is a bauble,
And none who thy grandest of gifts have enjoyed
But proclaim in there is nothing so meager and void.

All thy thrones are decay, all thy secrets are care,
Not a single one trapping of all thou dost wear,
But the rust, or the fret, or the canker is there.

And the pageants—I gaze and then ponder to know—
Are they real in their luster and painting aglow,
Or the hollow phantasm and the semblance of show.

All thy mansions are waste where the desolate bides,
Where the wraith of the dead and the treacherous glides,
And thy bowers are thorns where the cockatrice hides.

All thy tables are scant all thy festivals drear,
In their viands no strength, in their wordiness no cheer,
And the specter of want over hovereth near.

All thy visits are low, and attune them to wail,
And though fast to the dances the lovely may hail,
Yet as fast, aye! and faster, the traveler fail.

And thou may'st bedeem thee all splendid and great,
But I know that thy vices have poked thy fate,
And thy doom and thy ruin impatient await.

And so love ye erewhile, oh! how often to-day,
As the masks of thy beauty were falling away,
I beheld thee so worthless, I start in dismay.

And I know without sin may no farewell be said,
And no kiss to thy wreck ere we either be sped,
But alas! 'tis not thou but myself that I dread.

Obligations of Church Members.

MR. EDITOR: I noticed an article in the ADVOCATE of July 31 under the heading of "Obligations of Church Members." The subject is one worthy the attention of all true Methodists.

"The taking of such diversions as cannot be used in the name of the Lord Jesus" is to gratify or indulge in, permit and enjoy worldly amusements of any and every kind, agreeable to the evil desires of the heart, which means "dancing square and round, at balls and in private," and at base balls, or on Saturday nights, or at any other time, "amateur and professional horse racing and card playing," drinking of liquors of any kind, "except in case of necessity," and not as a beverage, and many other things of which many church members are guilty.

The above are all included and styled worldly amusements, and consequently should not and ought not to engage the attention of any who profess to be a disciple of Christ, and, I might say, none do except those who are following the "works of the flesh"—Gallatians v, 19 20 21 "Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these: Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like, of the which I tell you before, as I have also told you in time past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God."

When persons are received into our church, and they answer, as they must, in order to their reception, in the affirmative: "Will you be subject to the discipline of the church?" the obligation that they assume does include the "General Rules" found as section 2 of chapter 1 of our Discipline. And in our Discipline, section 5, chapter 6 page 154 where it says: "But in case of neglect of duties of any kind, imprudent conduct, indulging in sinful tempers or words, or disobedience to the order and discipline of the church," etc. And, again, in Bishop McTyeire's Manual of the Discipline section 5, chapter 4, page 111, will be found the decision of a presiding elder in the case of a local preacher complained of for having the art and science of modern dancing taught, that the case came under the rule of the Discipline forbidding "improper tempers, words or actions." This decision on appeal was sustained by the Bishops on the ground "that it is contrary to the spirit of the Discipline and of the New Testament to teach the art and science of modern dancing anywhere, or to practice promiscuous dancing anywhere," and "all the Bishops concurred," in 1858.

Every member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is bound to abide by the rules as understood by the highest authority in the church—by the General Conference, and as interpreted by the Bishops upon express order of the General Conference. The members have the right only to interpret or accept the rules as laid down in our Book of Discipline, which are equally binding both on the ministry and laity. And we put them selves in jeopardy by misconstruing the rules, which they need not do, and will not be apt to do, if they are willing to abide by law and equity, having "inward holiness and righteousness," letting conscience and a well informed judgment, with sound reasoning, have fair play. All based upon the truth of God's word.

The law of our church is sufficiently good, I think and not much complication about it. Easily understood by those who are desirous of doing so, but such as can't find the word dance in the Discipline, and therefore presumptuously say the Discipline does not prohibit it, are laboring under a mistake, and they have a very injurious effect upon the church.

"The singing those songs, or reading those books which do not lend to the knowledge or love of God, softness or needless self-indulgence." There is a great deal included in the above, and anything upon which we cannot ask the "blessings of God" should be let alone.

PINE GROVE, LA., AUG. 14, 1879.

A Good Steward.

MR EDITOR: You have already published an obituary of John W. Scott, who died last spring at his residence in Jefferson county, Miss., but I beg permission to pay a tribute to his memory in the columns of your paper. I wish to mention his merits as a steward.

Since 1870 I had been six years the pastor of the church of which this good man was a member, and I knew him perhaps better than did any other minister. During all these years Bro. Scott was a steward, and part of the time president of the board. I can safely say he was "a good steward," and many of your readers know how important a functionary a good steward is.

Bishop McTyeire says: "A careless or inefficient steward may, without positive opposition, starve out the ministry in the midst of plenty and a willing people; for no other member feels at liberty to act in his place without appointment. He stands between the pastor and his support, and by his non-action can contribute more to defeat than all the strategy of the enemy." Such a steward was not Bro. Scott. Again, the Bishop says: "On the contrary, where energetic and liberal stewards are employed, the church partakes of their spirit, the congregation devises liberal things, poverty vies with wealth, and comparatively small and feeble societies amply sustain the institutions of the church." Such a steward was this lamented brother. The church he served in this capacity was not wealthy, yet I do not remember that she ever fell far behind her assessment, while the rule was to pay every dollar assessed.

Bro. Scott was not quick to make promises which he as quickly forgot. You could always rely on what he said. He was not only liberal in paying, but successful in collecting quarterage; and he collected in such a manner as to cultivate the liberality of the people. He was a timid man, but when a duty presented itself to be performed he was bold in Christ in its performance. He did not wait for his pastor to come to him with his necessities, but he anticipated his wants, and made haste to supply them. He did not consider the support of the institutions of the church a burden, but a pleasant duty, a privilege, a means of grace; and he led his people to take the same view of it. The pastor always felt that, in every proper sense of the word, Bro. Scott was holding up his hands. But that strong tower is fallen.

At a District Conference I heard an intimation that the support of the ministry was getting to be burdensome. I asked in my heart: "Is the generation of such men as John W. Scott passing away?" Merciful God, forbid! This country, Mr. Editor, is in as great need of good stewards as it is of good preachers. May the Lord continue to provide the church with an ample supply of both!

W. B. LEWIS.

From the Work.

COLUMBIA, LOUISIANA.

MR. EDITOR: We have received, up to date, twenty-nine and baptized thirty. Several of these have given happy experiences, and by their daily walk testify that they love the Lord. Some have gone actively to work, praying in public, and, assuming such other duties as devolve upon the Christian. Among them are found the aged, and the young, and those of influence in the community. A few Sabbaths ago, before the church altar in Columbia, stood five applicants for church membership; among them an old gentleman, highly esteemed, and by his side his little granddaughter of seven summers.

We have several times in our pastoral visitations met and conversed with, by writing, a young lady deaf and dumb from infancy. Her apparent earnestness and sprightliness were very marked, and we soon found her deeply interested in the subject of religion. At our last visit we think she was converted, and the Sabbath succeeding she connected herself with the church, amid the rejoicings of her parents and the entire congregation.

Our prayer and class meetings are generally well attended on some parts of our work. We note many attending who have not been in the habit of doing so.

One of the most pleasant episodes in our ministerial life occurred here on Friday night, the sixth of June. It seems that for four or five days previously a plan had been maturing among our brethren and friends to give their pastor and his family a surprise on the night in question.

The plot thickened, and to the parsonage they came, fathers, mothers and children, each bearing a gift for the pastor, or some member of the family, until the entire population, excepting a few, who were not apprised of the fact, had assembled. It is proper to state that a part of the colored population brought presents. Our horse was not forgotten in the general surprise. He received as his portion three or four bushels of corn, a bridle and a whip, the last he has failed to this day to appreciate. The impression made on our minds by that huge pile of household necessaries will never be forgotten. The object of the meeting was explained in a clear, brief and appropriate manner by one of our gifted lawyers, a brother in the church, and responded to by the pastor, though almost too overcome through emotion for utterance.

Our camp meeting at Welcome Home will soon be on hand—September 24. Many improvements have been made on the camp ground for the comfort of all who may attend. A good fence encloses the entire grounds, and a well of good water, occupying a central position, has been sunk. This is a great improvement. Several new tents have been erected, and everything will be in readiness. We ask our brethren in the ministry, who expect to be present, to inform us as soon as practicable.

AUGUST 19, 1879.

MOUNT CARMEL CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: We anticipate building two new houses of worship on the circuit this fall, efforts already being made to build them in way of raising money and material.

There is a general revival of religion all over the circuit. We have had three protracted meetings of precious character, on account of the presence and glory of God's Spirit shed forth upon the church and people.

During the three meetings there were thirty-three accessions to the church. We closed one yesterday, resulting in eighteen accessions; thirteen the last service. We had an "old fashion Methodist meeting" yesterday, in which our Baptist brethren and sisters took a liberal share. Hallelujahs and glory to God were common place sounds, while one after another, old and young, came flocking to the church. Please pardon me for saying it was my birthday. Among the trophies for "the Cross" was my eldest son, eleven years of age (precious birthday present,) for which I thank God from my heart.

Besides the number of accessions to "our church," some have gone to the Baptist ranks as extra results of our meetings, the persons themselves being the authors of my statement, and I understand some will go from the meeting closed yesterday to join the Baptist Church next Sunday. One of the party told me she expected to do so, her husband being already a member of that church. Of course, Mr. Editor, that's all right, we Methodists being liberal and generous. While some sinners have been won over for the Baptists by us, some of the Baptist people and their children have come over to us.

We have been preaching nearly every day for the past three weeks, and for the last six days have had to preach twice a day, doing all the altar work alone, and feel very much worn."

G. W. BROWN, P. C.

AUGUST 22, 1879.

FAYETTE, MISSISSIPPI.

MR. EDITOR: We have just closed the third interesting meeting on this circuit, and I give you the result. Our first meeting was at Dennisville which was an evening appointment, with no church organization. But after spending four days we organized a church with eighteen members, eight of whom were accessions during the meeting. We also organized a Sunday school, with a goodly number of scholars.

Our meeting at Ebenezer began on the ninth instant, and closed on the fifteenth. I must say this was one of the best I ever attended. The congregations were large and attentive. The sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered on Tuesday to eighty communicants. There were thirteen accessions to the church, and about twenty-five conversions.

At this church we have some noble workmen. We also had very efficient services rendered by Bros J. W. McLaurin and A. B. Stewart. The local preachers were also there, and ready to do their whole duty. Bro. Stewart came with me to Fayette, where we commenced a meeting on the sixteenth, and closed today. We had preaching twice a day. Congregations in the day averaged about sixty, and at night about one hundred.

We received seven into the church. Backsliders were revived, and new life was infused into the church, and we expect to advance in our Master's work at this place. Spiritually, our entire circuit is improving.

D. P. BRADFORD.

AUGUST 23, 1879.

DAYTON, ALABAMA.

MR. EDITOR: We have rain, rain, rain, all over this cane-brake region in Alabama. The cotton crop is seriously damaged thereby. Not more than half a yield, if that, can now be counted on. The corn crop is fine. Health good. Church finances rather slim. I hear of revivals below me, on Rembert Hills circuit, Bro Simpson's work. With us the pulse of spiritual life is feeble.

This was formerly a rich country. The fine lands are still here, and the industrious elderly class of men are yet in hot pursuit of worldly wealth, often to the neglect of religion, while our young people of leisure are restlessly seeking worldly pleasures.

And so the church and religion have rather a hard time of it. But the Lord has a people here, many men and women, good and true, and we are trying to help them on their way to heaven. We also warn sinners, and, like Moses, invite them to come with us, and we will do them good, for the Lord has spoken good concerning Israel. Results of our labors scanty. It is very encouraging to see the fruits of our ministry. But our business is to sow the seed. God must make them fruitful. We sow in tears. We hope to reap ere long in joy.

G. HAWKINS.

AUGUST 23, 1879.

LITTLE RIVER, LOUISIANA.

MR. EDITOR: Good news from French Fork and Vidalia appointments. I commenced a meeting at French Fork on Saturday, the second of August, and continued until Wednesday noon. I received ten in the church by profession, and baptized seven children.

At the same time Bro. T Hough was holding a series of meetings at Vidalia. Four were added to the church. We now have a church organized at Vidalia numbering fifteen, with a bright prospect before us. The Sunday-school is doing well. We have on an average between thirty-five and forty, sometimes over fifty, children and adults. They take great interest in the Bible class. There we have Jews, and Catholics, and Protestants, all studying the Holy Scriptures together. Capt. Sawyer is the teacher, and no man is better qualified in the State. He can read the Bible in three or four different languages. We are going to build a church at Vidalia to cost $2,000. We have got $1,000 subscribed, and part of it in hand. We expect to have the building completed by next year, and then we shall invite the editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE to come and see us. Respectfully,

GEO. JACKSON.

AUGUST 13 1879.

BELDERT HILLS CIRCUIT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: We commenced a series of meetings at Sweet Water, on this circuit, the first Sunday in July, which lasted five days, and, as the result, there were about forty conversions and twenty seven accessions to the church, and when we came round to fill our next appointment eight more were added.

On the second Sunday in this month we began a meeting at Wesley Chapel, which lasted a week. About twenty conversions and eighteen accessions. We were assisted in these two meetings by Bros. Graham and Ellis.

On last Saturday and Sunday our third Quarterly Conference was held at Octagon, which was protracted. The meeting was protracted several days, and fourteen were added to the Methodist, and several to the Baptist Church, which makes sixty-seven who have joined the Methodist Church in this circuit in the last seven weeks.

The churches have been greatly revived, and a spirit of work pervades the entire circuit. Many who never attempted it before have now set up altars in their families, and the new members are going to work in good earnest for the Master.

J. D. SIMPSON, P. C.

DEKALB CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: We have held five protracted meetings on this circuit, and now engaged in the sixth one. Accessions to the church not very numerous. Our first work is within the church, as many of our members have never been converted. The highest number of conversions at any one meeting was twenty, accessions eighteen. Many of our old members now pray in public and in their families that never did before. Our meetings are followed with large prayer meetings in the churches every Sunday. My health has, however, given way, and I retire for the present from the work in the midst of glorious revivals. The presiding elder appointed a young man to help me—Joseph J. Nicholson. He will carry on the work; is now in a revival meeting five miles from DeKalb. He has great zeal and ability. This is a large, old and broken down circuit, with a large Methodist element in it of the best class of people.

A. B. NICHOLSON.

AUGUST 19, 1879.

MOUNT PLEASANT, MISSISSIPPI.

MR EDITOR: I have just closed at Mount Pleasant the first protracted meeting for Georgetown circuit. We had truly a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. There were thirteen conversions, and near the same number of accessions. Among these were several heads of families. It was very affecting to behold the father and mother, with four of their children, kneeling at the altar at the same time. They were all converted and joined the church. The power of God was present in such an overwhelming manner that some of the most hard-hearted were caused to weep, "though not to weeping given." Some of these were men of mature years and gray hairs. The church was greatly revived. Some of the young converts began immediately to pray in public, and will, no doubt, render valuable help in the weekly prayer meeting. The meeting closed with several penitents at the altar, of whom we hope to hear a good account soon.

A. M. HERRINGTON.

AUGUST 20, 1879.

OZARK, ALABAMA.

MR. EDITOR: We began our protracted meetings on the fifth Sunday in June, since which time, with the assistance of the local brethren on the work, we have held seven revival meetings. The churches have been revived, have had a number of conversions, and sixty two additions to the church. We have two other meetings to hold, together with our annual camp meeting at China Grove, which commences on Friday night before the first Sunday in October.

Finances on the work are encouraging, and our Board of Stewards confident of meeting all claims against the circuit. Crops under fine, gold Hen thrives excellent, and our people, for the most part, contented and happy. Our little town continues to improve, and, when we get our railroad, shall expect our Bishops and editors to pay us a visit, at least, at our district and camp meeting.

E. M. TURNER, P. C.

AUGUST 23, 1879.

A farmer who had recently listened to an exposition of the text from Isaiah, i, "The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib; but Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider," was giving food to his stock, when one of his oxen, evidently grateful for his care, fell to licking his bare arm. Instantly, with this simple incident, the Holy Spirit flashed conviction on the farmer's mind. He burst into tears, and exclaimed: "Yes, it is all true. How wonderful is God's Word! This poor dumb brute is really more grateful to me than I am to God, and yet I am in debt to him for everything. What a sinner I am!" The lesson had found its way to his heart, and would there effectually to lead him to Christ.

Obituaries.

JAMES PRATHER was born in the year 1816, in Green county, Tenn., joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1841; married Miss Lucinda M. Brodkill, Talladega county, Ala., 1845; and departed this life on the twenty-fourth day of March, A. D., 1879. He left his native State and friends and moved to Talladega county, Ala., where he was married as above stated. He soon after moved to Coosa county, Ala., near Fish pond camp ground, where he lived until the year 1858, when he moved to Winn parish, La., where he lived up to his death.

Bro. Prather was in every way a man of exalted integrity and truth, a good citizen and neighbor, a faithful and loving husband, a devoted and tender father. For more than forty years he was a devoted member of the church, and for a great number of years never failed to have his family devotions morning and night. He was the father of eight children, five sons and three daughters, two of his children (boys) died while small and his other three sons lived to be men grown, but all called their father home. His eldest, Johnathan, was killed at the battle of Franklin, Tenn., in the fall, and fought under the Confederate flag in the bloody battles of Virginia. In short a man in all things with reference to his God, he was a good soldier, also a faithful christian, never neglecting his duty to his country or to his God. Ambrose was also a soldier, and died at Alexandria, La. James Madison, youngest son, died at home the year 1877, all the others of the same church with their father. His three daughters still survive him. He was permitted to see his children all in the church. His father's house was truly a house of prayer. He bore his affliction with Christian fortitude. On the evening of his death he remarked: "I am almost ready and asked the writer of this, saying, 'How is my daughter?' He then turned on his right side and passed away to Jesus.

J. M. CAIN.

FRANCIS POWELL MARSH died at Claiborn, Ala. July 30, 1879. Bro. Marsh was born in Mobile, Ala., December 4, 1818, and married to Mary J. Quintero in the same city, January 20, 1850. During the same year he moved to Montgomery, where he remained but a short while, and from thence he removed to Claiborn, where he resided until his decease.

A short while after the birth of his first child he join d the Methodist Episcopal Church, although, it seems, he had had many serious impressions prior to that time. He now became a useful member of the church, endeavoring to perform all the duties required at his hands, but not satisfied in reference to his conversion.

At the camp ground near Claiborn in the fall of 1878, Bro. Marsh sought and obtained that peace which can only flow from a consciousness of sins pardoned and acceptance with God. His Christian experience ever afterwards was a serene and happy one, as all who knew him will testify.

For some time previous to his death he was in declining health, and seems to have been sensibly impressed with the fact, that the "hour of his departure was at hand." On several occasions he mentioned these premonitions to his wife and bosom friends.

Once, on his way to the Quarterly Conference, at Verbena only a few weeks before his end, he remarked to his wife, "Mary, I feel that I will not be with you much longer," and then affectionately advised her with reference to the welfare of their children.

During a protracted sickness of many days, although of a restless and impatient disposition, he bore excruciating pain with Christian fortitude. He had no fear of death. In reply to a question addressed to him by his wife, in reference to his future—his reply was: "No; I am ready to go," and again, "The grace of God has brought me safe thus far, and His grace will carry me safely through."

Bro. Marsh was a devoted husband, a kind father, a good citizen and an exemplary Christian. In his death the community and the Church have suffered an irreparable loss. OUR PASTOR.

SISTER SARAH A. MCMILLON, aged seventy-six years, departed this life near Thomasboro, Miss., on the twenty-seventh of June, 1879. She had been a member of the Methodist Church for the last thirty-five years, and had had a devotedly religious record to the day of death. The writer has known her for a number of years, and has always found her to be a devoted and unswerving Christian. Her devotion, zeal and faith appeared unwavering through her religious life; that glorious while still on life's tempestuous sea, she had to contend with adverse winds from very peculiar surroundings. Yet amid the many billows, that seemed to impede her voyage, this Bible was her chart, while faithful warnings to the people, delivered in the pulpit, were the bright polar star of love and hope, and amid all the discordant elements surrounding her, on rode the storm, at last, like the immortal martyr so, her zeal and devotion to her Lord and Master's cause, and the salvation of sinners were manifest in every walk of her religious life. With her the Bible was her price which she closely related took as the man of her counsel. Religion her theme by day, "and her song in the night." She loved the church, ministry, and the preached word, which to her was a feast to the soul. She died as she lived, resigned to God's will, realizing the truth, that to live is Christ, to die, is gain. Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, that they may rest from their labors."

MARTHA C. ADELLA GLENN, was born in Hancock county, Ala., January 2, 1861, and died near Cheneyville, Rapides parish, La., February 2, 1879.

She suffered much, but in the midst of her afflictions she was cheerful, patient, resigned, she had learned where to look for relief, and knew how to avail herself of that blessed privilege offered by her Heavenly Master to all His stricken ones. "Cast all your care on Him for He careth for you." Having been raised by pious parents her mind was early impressed with the importance of a change of heart, and in the rosy dawn of youth, ere thorny age she had become contaminated with the worldly vices, she gave herself to her Saviour, united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Epworth in Harrison county, Ala., and ever after lived a consistent Christian life and died in the hope of a joyous immortality. In life she won the respect and love of all by whom she was known, and in death has left the legacy of a pure and spotless character, and an example of Christian virtue, worthy of imitation.

A BROTHER.

MARY ANN CONERLY was born in the state of Alabama, July 10, 1830 and died at the residence of her son-in-law, in Sabine parish, La., June 15, 1879. She married T. B. Conerly in Alabama November 21, 1850. She joined the Methodist Church soon after her marriage, in which she lived a consistent, humble, devoted christian as a neighbor, and a mother in Israel. Her home was always regarded as a home for preachers. She was bereaved of her husband, and beloved brother, who died in the same faith about eight years ago, which bereavement she bore as a Christian like disposition. The writer visited her a short time before the death, and baptized two of her grandchildren. After the baptism she said she was ready to die any moment. On the morning of her death she told all present to come and bid her farewell, she then sank into the arms of sweet sleep.

THOMAS FRANKLIN, L. P.

JAMES P. NABORS son of John H. and Susan Nabors of De Soto parish, La., died July 25, 1879 aged seventeen years. He had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, from childhood, and an exemplary christian. He died at his father's house, where he was honored and beloved in life, and whose death caused a degree of sorrow which can hardly be expressed. At his request the whole family were baptized and attended his funeral. He died in peace.

JOHN FIRST

LILLY, daughter of William and S. E. Morris, was born February 5, 1870, and died August 9, 1879. Thus another of the lambs of the flock has been folded in the green pastures of the heavenly fold. Lilly was one of our Sunday School children, taking great delight in the exercises, and learning the lessons of God. A short time before she died she said she wished she could see that "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." May the memories that cluster about her home daughter, parents and friends never fade.

BRO. THOMAS C. ZYLKS was born near Charleston, S. C., in 1808, and, joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at the age of nineteen. He died in triumph, April 12, 1879, at his home near Andrew Chapel, in Ellis Wells circuit, of which he was a member, a consistent Christian, loving husband and father, and a true and faithful friend. About his last words were: "Amazing grace, how sweet the sound that saved a wretch like me."

R. S. COKER, P. C.

OLIE DARLING, ELINA NAOMI, was born in Wilcox county, Ala., April 10, 1870, and died August 26, 1879, near Loughridge, Miss., the granddaughter of John and Sarah Fortner. Little Elina only lived long enough to let the world find she might recognize her parents in a home above. The only comfort we have in this sad affliction is in the knowledge that she is gone to live with Jesus, and the angels, in a home above the skies.

JAMES W., son of James M. and Mary E. Cunningham, was born November 23, 1876, and died August 19, 1879. Little Jimmy, as he was familiarly called, was a bright little boy, and was a source of much comfort to his doting parents. But the Good Shepherd has taken the tender little lamb to the fold above. Father, mother, I pray you strive humbly commit them to God, and cling to Him.

A. M. HARRINGTON.

JOSEPHINE MATILDA, youngest daughter of J. R. and M. S. Pilkington, was born January 31, 1858, and died near Lafourche Chapel, Ala., July 1, 1879. She has gone to her Saviour to dwell forever. May God console the bereaved parents, and direct them in heaven at last, there to meet their loved one. A friend,

ANTE-MORTEM.

BY MARGARET J. PRESTON.

How much would I care for it, could I know
That when I am under the grass or snow,
The raveled garment of life's brief day,
Folded and quietly laid away;
The spirit let loose from mortal bars,
And somewhere away among the stars,
How much do you think it would matter, then,
What praise was lavished upon me, when,
Whatever might be its style or store,
In neither could help nor harm me more?

If, while I was toiling, they had but thought
To stretch a finger, I would have caught
Gladly such aid to buoy me through
Some bitter duty I had to do;
Though when it was done they said—may be,
To others—they never said to me—
The word of applause so craved, whose worth
Had been the supremest boon on earth
If granted me then: "We are proud to know
That one of ourselves has triumphed so."

What use for the rope, if it be not there
Till the swimmer's grasp to the rock has clung?
What helpful a comrade's bugle blast,
When the peril of Alpine heights is past?
What need that the spurring jeers roll
When the runner is safe beyond the goal?
What worth is eulogy's blandest breath,
When whispered in ears that are stushed in death?

No, no! If you have but a word of cheer,
Speak it while I am alive to hear!

Annual Address of the Book Agent.

To the Bishop and Members of the Conference of the M. E. Church, South:

REV. AND DEAR BRETHREN: One year has elapsed since you received the report and exhibit of the book agent and Book Committee. It has in many respects been a year of toil and much anxiety. Two questions engaged the minds of those interested:

First. Can the Publishing House be conducted so as to meet its expenses and make a profit? What can be done with the enormous debt? and how shall we answer the pressing demands of the creditor? With these questions staring us in the face, we went to work June 1, 1878. Our assets, though large, yielded but a small income; and yet to pay interest annually from $25,000 to $30,000 was a thing impossible. Besides, money was scarce, and early in the season much of the land was scourged by yellow fever. Despite of all this, we have had a prosperous year. I refer you to the report of the Book Committee and exhibit of the business manager. These contain encouraging statements.

Second. To find the debt and reduce the interest was the next thing to be considered. A plan of raising $300,000, by issuing four per cent. bonds, was suggested, and, after mature deliberation, was adopted. Dr. R. A. Young, giving half his time to the interest of the Publishing House, greatly assisted the agent, and our success has been beyond the expectation of many friends; and, with encouraging prospects before us, we expect soon to announce to the church that the whole sum has been raised. This plan, when completed, we believe will relieve the House, secure the new bondholders, and give permanency and unprecedented prosperity to the institution.

There has been no change in the status of our claim against the government for use of property and damages during the war. We have no agent at Washington City.

The Christian Advocate has a circulation of about twelve thousand. We are anxious to increase the list to thirty thousand. With this number we can make a profit sufficient to pay the interest of the whole debt, when reduced to $12,000. The editor gives great satisfaction.

Our Sunday-school literature is a success. The editor is an indefatigable worker, and his work is well received and highly appreciated.

Our book editor has brought up his department with his usual punctuality. Only a few new books have been published on our own account; a few, however, have been issued, and these have paid a profit.

Only three things are necessary to complete success:

1. Economical management.

2. Hearty co-operation on the part of the whole church.

3. Punctuality in the payment of bills.

Our terms are cash, or its equivalent, and to these we must hereafter more strictly adhere. Punctuality is the life of trade.

I close this brief address by saying to the Conference that a more intelligent, self-sacrificing committee I have never seen. They have devoted much valuable time to this great interest of the church, and without fee or reward—except the gratitude of the church and the testimony of good consciences—they have in the last twelve months accomplished a desirable work for the House.

Mr. L. D. Palmer, the business manager, gives much satisfaction.

J. B. McFERRIN, Book Agent.

SOUTHERN METHODIST PUBLISHING HOUSE,
Nashville, Tenn., Aug. 12, 1879.

REPORT OF THE BOOK COMMITTEE.

After a full year's test of the productive capacity of the Publishing House, and of its ability to pay its expenses with a margin for casualties which are unavoidable, we submit as the first item the business manager's exhibit of one year's operations, extending from June 1, 1878, to June 1, 1879.

To the Book Committee:

As stated in your published report last year, you adopted as your estimate of the assets of the Publishing House "the valuation of the Committee on Publishing Interests by the late General Conference, with a few modifications rendered necessary by a more careful investigation, and by slight changes from sales of merchandise before June 1, 1878." The assets then reported were as follows:

Merchandise on hand as above	$23,424 99
Cash	54 49
Bills receivable and accounts	59,438 77
Real estate	125,000 00
Stereotype plates and foundry	20,912 03
Wood cuts and electrotypes	2,304 70
Types and fixtures	5 697 04
Engine and presses and fixtures	22 880 63
Mailing and folding machines	715 00
Safe and office furniture	505 00
Copyrights	1 :57 00
Paper, sheet-stock, ink, glue, etc.	2,297 05
Two lots in Nashville	1,000 00
	$265,181 67

The settlement has been concluded with Dr. A. H. Redford (see separate statement,) by which the House received from him notes secured by mortgage, with interest from January 1, 1879, for $16 619 99, and returned to him a lot of unsalable books, of which he is author, and for which the House had paid him $3 - 074 10, and also turned over to him notes or acceptances for $5 361 05 which Dr Redford had paid out of Publishing House funds for William Cromey, who has been discharged in bankruptcy from legal liability.

The above amount reported last year	$265,181 67
Should be diminished by old books as stated	$3 074 10
And by notes, as stated	5,361 05 - 9 035 15
Leaving the assets actually turned over to us	$256 146 52

The condition of the realty has not materially changed. The repairs have been kept up, and all the wood work about the building exposed to the weather has had two good coats of paint, and the walnut work in front has been well oiled. One thousand dollars' worth of new type and electrotypes have been added during the year. Additions to the amount of $1,161 11 have been made to the stereotype plates.

The repairs on presses, engines and fixtures have been fully kept up, but no material additions have been made. A new mailing machine has been purchased in lieu of the old one worn out.

The safe and office fixtures are well worth the estimate put on them last year.

The copyrights have had several valuable additions, including those of our new and popular music book, "New Life," issued in three forms and the complete series of record books, all of which are popular and selling well.

The supply of types and fixtures is ample for the present demands of business in the line of printing our periodicals and book-work. Some additions would be useful in the department of job-work.

The stereotype foundry and the machines necessary for finishing plates are in good order, and will need no outlay except for metal consumed.

Nearly all the presses have been in use for twenty-five years, and, though our experienced and careful pressman turns out excellent work on them, they need to be thoroughly repaired. If this were done, they might be run twenty-five per cent. faster than at present, and at a great saving to the House. Improvements have been made in printing presses within the last few years, and, as soon as practicable, some of the old presses should be sold and their places supplied with one or two fast presses. The large and increasing circulation of our Sunday-school literature renders this important.

We greatly need a new folding and pasting machine for the Advocate, and a machine for binding our Sunday-school Magazines and Quarterlies and for pamphlet work generally. Aside from the unsatisfactory manner in which the work is now done, and the occasional delay in getting it out, the saving in actual cost would be at least fifty per cent. of the amount we are now paying for hand-stitching. The cost of the two machines would be about $2,500, and, with the present run of business, their cost would be saved in less than two years.

The binding is still done by contract with Mr. Locken, and has not been entirely satisfactory in the style and quality of the work; but arrangements are in progress by which we hope to introduce improvements in these particulars.

In addition to receipts from regular business the House has realized $600 from the rent of the binding-room, and $3 233 15 for rent of three stores for the year 1879, and has collected a net amount of $7,419 34 from accounts greased before June 1 1878.

It has paid all working expenses, material and merchandise bills, insurance and taxes due to the present time, and also $10,500 interest on the ten per cent building bonds of 1872, $819 over-due State and county tax for 1877, and $455 insurance, over-due June 1, 1878.

Not including amount realized from old accounts the House has made a profit of $19 471 31, consisting of additions to stock of merchandise, press-room material, new notes and accounts, and cash. Upon the basis of the reports of last year, as regards most of the assets, the following would be a correct schedule at present:

Assets, as above, actually turned over to us	$256,146 52
Additions in types and electrotypes	1,000 00
Additions in stereotype plates	1,161 11
Additions from operations of year ending June 1, 1879	19 471 31
Notes secured in settlement with A. H. Redford	16 619 99
Total amount of assets	$293,398 93

This valuation in the aggregate is very low, considering the original cost, or the amount which would be necessary to reproduce or purchase the same property. The binding is very much larger than is necessary for any present or prospective demand, and as such represents a large unavailable capital. Many of the stereotype plates are out of date, and yet the saving in the manufacture of salable books is much greater than the interest on the sum at which they are valued.

The estimate placed on copyrights refers only to amounts paid out for their use by the House. No valuation is placed on the copyrights of the large list of standard publications which belong to the church, and which constitute the basis of nearly all the profit arising from the manufacture of books.

The policy of the present administration is to pay cash for all expenses incurred. From the beginning of Dr. McFerrin's agency the employees have received their wages weekly. At first, acceptances were given on short time for material and merchandise the House was compelled to purchase; but for several months past we have paid all bills as soon as the goods ordered have been received.

The amount of business done during the year is as follows:

Merchandise sales	$56,375 01
Sunday-school orders filled	12,992 39
Advocate orders filled	21,100 74
Total transactions	$113,509 16

The basis of these transactions has been cash, or its equivalent, which is interpreted to mean, a positive promise made by a person whose credit has not been impaired to pay in a short time. Most of our customers have been prompt, and we have no doubt all intended to be. But, as is generally the case, when there is any departure from strictly cash transactions, some have been disappointed in their calculations, and, as a consequence, have disappointed us. General rules should govern in the management of a representative institution like the Publishing House, established for the benefit of the whole church. A policy which would grant indulgence to one, and deny it to another similarly related, would be deservedly unpopular. Aside from all risk in the collection of accounts, the House has insufficient means to accommodate its many customers. Three thousand preachers, with average accounts of $20 each, gives an aggregate of $60,000. In proportion to the number of accounts on our books, with several persons of exactly the same name in different States, there is greater liability to mistakes, which are always embarrassing in business.

Other considerations might be named as to why it is better for the purchasers, as well as the House, to pay cash. It will produce some temporary friction, and probably diminish the volume of business somewhat, but, after a year's experience and mature reflection, I recommend you to adopt a rule of absolute cash, except with commercial houses upon which drafts may be made, as the only safe and satisfactory basis of a business extending over twenty States, and almost entirely with strangers.

In this proposition there is an alternative of larger discounts to the preachers and wholesale merchants in the sale of books, and lower prices for Sunday-school periodicals, on the one hand, and, on the other, a House crippled in its credit and operations, and making continual appeals to the church for the want of the capital with which its friends have been accommodated.

Respectfully submitted.

L. D. PALMER, Business Manager.

It will thus be seen, from the experiment of one year's business, that the House can meet all its expenses and pay the interest at four per cent. on $300,000, and still have a fair sinking fund to retire its bonds.

AS TO THE SETTLEMENT WITH DR. A. H. REDFORD, FORMER BOOK AGENT.

In defining the powers of the Book Committee, the last General Conference (see Discipline, page 351) specifies the following:

"To settle with the present (A. H. Redford) and any future agent, upon the principles which govern the relations between principal and agent, embracing his individual transactions with himself as agent, and ascertain the state of the accounts between him and said House."

As stated in the report of last year, a basis of settlement was agreed upon between the committee and Dr. Redford. The whole matter was placed in the hands of a sub-committee, and L. D. Palmer, business manager, was appointed to make up a statement of Dr Redford's liability to the House on the basis agreed upon. Herewith find the results of the statement made out by Mr. Palmer, the correctness of which is attested by Dr. Redford's signature.

To the Book Committee of the M. E. Church, South, Nashville, Tenn.:

Herewith you will find a statement of account showing a balance due the Publishing House amounting to $16 711 14 on account of the manufacture and sale of books of which Dr. A. H. Redford is author, and which were published during his term of office as agent.

The account has been taken with the understanding that when this settlement is completed the stereotype plates of the books enumerated, and the following books on hand, become the property of Dr. Redford.

1,736 copies "Methodism in Kentucky," wholesale value	$2,151 04
91 copies "Methodism in Kentucky," gilt, wholesale value	163 80
30 copies "Methodism in Kentucky," Turkey morocco, wholesale value	72 00
741 copies "Western Cavaliers," wholesale value	889 20
393 copies "Russell Morton," wholesale value	176 85
151 copies "Preacher's Wife," wholesale value	105 60
117 copies "Fred. Brending," wholesale value	12 85
3,831 volumes	$3,674 10

And with the further understanding that Dr. Redford is released from liability on account of debts due the House arising from the sale of any of his books, except that he has agreed to take all books which may be returned to the House at the price at which they may be returned, and with the further understanding that an edition of one hundred copies of "Organization," etc., recently printed at the expense of the Publishing House, may be sold without liability to him.

I also submit the following statement of the amount due the House on account of indorsements made for Wm. Cromey, of Louisville, Ky., by Dr. A. H. Redford. The figures showing the amounts paid out by the House have been furnished me by Hugh Carroll, book-keeper.

Acceptances made December 5, 1876	$4,361 05
Interest to January, 1879	714 80
	$5,075 85
Add amount of balance on books	10,811 14
	$16,619 99

All of which is respectfully submitted.

L. D. PALMER.

I believe the above statement to be correct.

A. H. REDFORD.

That the above statement may be fully understood, it is proper to add the following explanations: The liability of Dr. Redford, on account of Wm. Cromey, arose from an indorsement of commercial paper as an act of friendship by Dr. Redford for the accommodation of Wm Cromey, of Louisville, Ky. Mr. Cromey failed in business, and Dr. Redford paid off the notes he had indorsed out of funds belonging to the Publishing House. This amount, principal and interest, to January 1, 1879, is $6 075 85, and does not include a balance of $1 672 33 due the Publishing House by Mr. Cromey for merchandise at the time of his failure, and still unpaid.

The remainder of the account, as shown in the statement, has reference to the manufacture and sale of several books of which Dr. Redford is author. The business books of the Publishing House show that only the net amount paid out by the House for the material actually consumed, and the labor directly employed in the manufacture of these books, had been charged to Dr. Redford, without the usual per cent. necessary to cover a proportionate part of the general expense of the House, such as agent's and book keeper's salary, insurance, taxes, wear and tear, interest, etc., and also without the usual profit to the manufacturer.

The committee decided that not less than twenty per cent., added to the amounts previously charged to Dr. Redford, would compensate the House for the proper proportion of this general expense, which ought to have been distributed on Dr. Redford's books as well as on other work done by the House.

After the books were manufactured, Dr. Redford, as agent of the House, bought them in entire editions at the wholesale price, paying himself a profit in cash of over one hundred and fifty per cent., without risk to himself, as will be seen by the following schedule:

Dr. R., agent, charged Dr. R., individual, for manufacturing "Methodism in Kentucky," exclusive of plates	$5,0 [illegible]
Dr. R., individual, charged Dr. R., agent, for same books	13,928
Clear profit to Dr. R., individual	17,9 [illegible]
Dr. R., Agent, charged Dr. R., individual, for manufacturing "Organization," etc., exclusive of plates	3,28 41
Dr. R., individual, sold same books to Dr. R., agent, for	6,755
Clear profit to Dr. R., individual	3,968 59
Dr. R., agent, charged Dr. R., individual, for manufacturing "Western Cavaliers," exclusive of plates	1,4 4
Dr. R., individual, sold same books to Dr. R., agent, for	5,0 4
Clear profit to Dr. R., individual	3,579.70
Dr. R., agent charged Dr. R., individual, for manufacturing "Russell Morton," exclusive of plates	1,0 [illegible]
Dr. R., individual, sold same books to Dr. R., agent, for	2,0 5 80
Clear profit to Dr. R., individual	1,3 6 45
Dr. R., agent, charged Dr. R., individual, for manufacturing "Preacher's Wife," exclusive of plates	1,460 75
Dr. R., individual, sold same books to Dr. R., agent, for	2,8 5 20
Clear profit to Dr. R., individual	1,048 45
Total profit in cash to Dr. R., individual	$17 8 3 20

In addition to this, he sold a considerable number of books to other parties, and has a lot of sheets not yet bound up. Leaving these out of the account, the above figures show an investment, or rather a charge, on the books to Dr. Redford of $11,422 - 35, and that he received for the same $29,245 65,—a profit of over one hundred and fifty per cent.*

After a full investigation and careful comparison of accounts by Dr. Redford and Mr. L. D. Palmer, in regard to the sale by the House of the books of which Dr. Redford is author, they agreed upon the following:

9,78 volumes "Methodism in Kentucky" sold for	$12,86 [illegible]
5,972 volumes "Organization" etc., sold for	8,038 25
3,495 volumes "Western Cavaliers" sold for	[illegible]4 01
4,711 volumes "Russell Morton" sold for	2,288 [illegible]
2,382 volumes "Preacher's Wife" sold for	2 3 0 [illegible]
5,125 volumes "Fred Brending" sold for	2,599 61
30,975 volumes. Total amount of sales	$42,8 [illegible] 56

According to the basis of settlement, Dr. Redford was to be credited for all money actually received by the House for the sale of his books, and to take the risk on all books upon which the House has not realized in money. Many of them had been sold on a credit, or sent out on sale. Over $4 000 of accounts, arising from these transactions, all remained unpaid. By the basis of settlement agreed on, Dr. Redford was to pay to the House the amount of these accounts, and hold them against the parties who had bought his books on a credit, or received them on sale. As hereafter stated, the Committee agreed, as a compromise, to receive these accounts from Dr. Redford as cash, and release him from liability for this amount.

Inasmuch as Dr. Redford was to receive the entire proceeds of sales, the sub committee thought it fair to charge him a reasonable per cent on the aggregate amount of sales, for the expense of receiving, storing, insuring, paying taxes, boxing and delivering the books, as well as for the interest on the money advanced to him for books, some of which have remained on hand since 1868. Dr. Redford disagreed to this, insisting that the twenty per cent. to be added to the prime cost of material and labor in manufacturing the books was as much as he should be required to pay.

There were two other items referred to the sub-committee yet to be considered. One referred to the profits claimed to have been made by Dr. Redford in the sale to the Publishing House of $57 000 worth of books and merchandise from and through his personal bookstore, conducted in Louisville, Ky., while he was on salary as agent. The other referred to profits made by him on books taken by himself at the lowest wholesale price, and sold at Conferences in his own interest, the House paying his travelling expenses and the cost of transportation on the books (as shown by the books of the House.)

The disagreement aforesaid threatened to delay, or defeat, a settlement. In their great anxiety to have the matter closed, in a spirit of compromise, and under a pledge from Dr. Redford to settle the account at once with secured notes, the sub committee assented to a proposition, made by Dr. Redford, to charge him $951 - 54 for all expenses in storing, insuring, handling and selling $32 181 56 worth of books; and they also agreed to take of him accounts uncollected, made in the sale of these books, of more than $1 000 and give him credit for the same—which sum, if not deducted, would increase the balance due from him to more than $20 000.

The whole Committee, in annual session, in May, agreed to this, and, through a competent committee, have received from Dr Redford three notes, dated May 9 1879, payable in one, two and three years, with interest from January, 1879, secured by mortgage on property in Edgefield, Tenn., and Louisville, Ky. The rate of interest at which the calculations were made was agreed to by Dr. Redford, according to the interest laws of the State of Tennessee.

By this settlement the entire stock of books of which Dr. Redford is author, and all copyrights and stereotype plates belonging thereto, become the property of Dr. Redford, but do not in any manner reduce his liability for the above amount.

It is due to the public, and Mr. L. D. Palmer, to state the reason why the account he was directed to take, in regard to the sale of books and merchandise by and through Dr. Redford's Louisville bookstore, was not completed. Dr. Redford, as agent, did not preserve the invoices of the books he bought from his Louisville house, and only entered, as is customary, the aggregate amounts of various bills in the business books of the Publishing House. The only basis for making up the statement was two old day-books of the Louisville house, which Dr. Redford believed to have been lost or stolen, but which were accidentally found, with a lot of other old books, in the Publishing House after Dr. McFerrin's agency began. These books embraced only a part of the transaction intended to be investigated, and had to be supplemented by oral evidence to be taken at distant points, which we had no compulsory means of obtaining. In view of these facts and Dr. Redford's promise to settle his indebtedness with notes and mortgage, all claim on this and other items was waived.

The settlement, as detailed, was made up from the books of the Publishing House, and may be summed up as follows:

Cash notes, with interest from January, 1879, secured by mortgage	$10,619 99
Unpaid accounts for Dr. R.'s books, received as cash, which he resigns in favor of the Publishing House (see p. 12)	1 [illegible]
Making a total of	$5,619 99

All of which was agreed to by Dr. Redford. In addition, he agrees to take back all the books of which he is author, which may be returned by parties to whom they were sold on a credit during his term as agent.

The subscription to the Christian Advocate has steadily increased and the circulation now is more than 12,000. The official organ of the church, numbering nearly 800 000 members, ought to have at least 50,000 subscribers. With such a list, the House could soon be relieved of all its embarrassments, to say nothing of the greater blessing of such a connectional bond and wholesome Christian literature in the families of our church.

Our Sunday-school periodicals are constantly growing in public favor in matter, taste, convenience and price, they compare favorably with the best publications of their class. Let all our Sunday schools be liberally supplied with our literature, and a double blessing is secured to the church.

THE FOUR PER CENT. BONDS.

The Committee have sought to secure the conversion of the entire debt of the House into four per cent. bonds, on the condition that the subscription shall reach $300,000. To this work the agent has mainly devoted himself during the year, and we take pleasure in bearing witness to his earnest and successful labors. The valuable services of Dr. R. A. Young were secured to assist in this work, to which he has applied himself with his usual fidelity and skill. As a result of their efforts, we are enabled to report that the subscriptions have reached the sum of $273,430.

As to the New Orleans Depository, we have not been able to state the exact condition of that Depository, but can state that, before this Committee was appointed, all the property belonging thereto had been seized under execution, and was shortly thereafter sold, yielding some $8 000, and leaving an alleged balance of indebtedness of more than $30,000.

In conclusion, we can but express the hope that the church at large will rally to the support of the Publishing House, which is our strong connectional bond, and the only source of supply for our standard and Sunday-school literature. The experience of the year demonstrates the fact that nothing is needed for success but business conducted on business principles. With cordial support in the circulation of our literature, and the sale of our books, the House will survive and prosper, and prove even a greater blessing than it has been in the past.

The magnitude and importance of our Sunday-school work alone is a sufficient appeal to every member of our church to talk, and work, and pray for our success. The future interests of our beloved church will soon fall into the hands of the Sunday-school children of to-day. How are they to be prepared to meet the responsibilities which will soon rest upon them? As Methodists, and as Christians, the responsibility now rests on us to provide for their religious instruction. If we would maintain the purity and integrity of our church, we should cherish and support the Publishing House as the only instrumentality through which their wants can be met.

Who can tell the good which may result to the church and the world from such a contribution to religious literature?

Besides the above of our own manufacture, we have circulated many thousand Bibles and Testaments, Commentaries, Bible Dictionaries, Concordances and standard works in religious literature published by other houses.

Can the church afford to discontinue or discourage an institution which is doing so much for its own members and for the moral transformation of the world? Heavy co-operation insures success.

The preachers have an especial interest in our work. But every member of the church should lend a helping hand in the great work of distributing the literature our presses have the capacity to turn out.

Let this be done, and the people will be made wiser and better, and the Publishing House will be sustained. Send in your orders.

—Not far from the Ameer's palace in Cabul there is, and long has been, an American Church in which Christian worship has been permitted undisturbed through the many civil changes and disturbances that have taken place in that city. The number of the Christians was formerly considerable, but at present there are not more than twelve.

—Basle, in Switzerland, one of the headquarters of orthodox Calvinism, has been greatly disturbed by a grave theological scandal. Herr Boehringer, the ablest of St. Peter's, has been preaching sermons containing such ultra-free thinking that the orthodox clergy, who some time since refused to fraternize with him, have now formally excommunicated him and four others of like views.

—AFRICA.—Two colored students of Mr. Spurgeon's Pastor's College, Revs. Richardson and Johnson, with their wives, have left England as missionaries to Central Africa. They were all freed slaves from this country. Mr. Spurgeon presided at the farewell meeting in the Metropolitan Tabernacle.

—A crowded meeting of Roman Catholics was held in Paris last month (the Duke de Rochefoucald presiding) to protest against the substitution of lay for ecclesiastical teachers in the municipal elementary schools of Paris. The municipality of Paris, strange to say, contains only two or three per cent. of Roman Catholics.

—The popularity of Rev. Dr. Talmage in London is remarkable. In one week he is said to have lectured and preached to from seventy thousand to eighty thousand people, addressing on an average some eight thousand people at each gathering.

Uprooting Error.

The preaching of a positive gospel is by far the most effectious means of overcoming sin. It is also mighty in rooting out the plants of error. The Bible, without note or comment, is the sword of the Spirit wherever it goes. It started the great evangelical movement in the sixteenth century, it began the work in Mexico, now so remarkable in its progress. The work of the Bible-readers and of the Bible-women in China, India and other countries is well known. There is power in the truth itself, because it addresses the conscience and meets the wants of the human soul. Under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, and His convicting power the truth declared simply and directly will make its way to the heart. It is a seed that germinates in the heart, and becomes a great tree. It is a leaven that gradually assimilates the whole nature, and by its own force expels everything contrary to it. The truth of God is, to a certain extent, self-evidencing. It carries in itself the seal of its divine origin and authority.

The main thing is to arrest the attention, and to get its declarations before the conscience. Those who are most successful in winning souls are not the most learned, nor the most profound reasoners. The man who sets himself to refute the scientists, or by force of argument to overturn heresy, will gather small fruit in the way of conversions. Denouncing special sins and corruptions of doctrine is useful for warning and instruction, but the apologetic strain of teaching often awakens more doubts and difficulties than it relieves. The word of God strikes at the roots of all sin and of all error. Let it be preached in its simple directness of appeal to man as an accountable being. Human misery and death are real enough. Sin, as a blight upon the earth, needs no proof. Salvation is set forth, the remedy for the world's misery is proclaimed, life eternal is revealed. The word itself "is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword." Fairly delivered, it will cleave its way so as to divide the soul and spirit. It is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. Paganism falls before the gospel, not so much from direct attacks made upon its systems of belief and worship as by the inevitable spiritual power of the truth. Our missionaries preach the word—the gospel—and it is the power of God unto salvation.

The best way to get rid of weeds is to occupy the soil. Plant the gospel in the heart, and it will overshadow and kill the noxious growth of sin. Faith in Christ will drive out all other grounds of pardon. The birth of the Spirit will cut up by the roots the notion that rites sanctify or regenerate. Once converted and filled with the love of Christ, church members will give little trouble by dancing, and by indulgence in things pernicious and sinful. To berate worldly people about theaters, gambling, horse-racing and Sabbath breaking, may do some good, but the only cure is a change of heart. The conviction of sin which leads to their awakening and conversion may not consciously be upon any of these points, and yet repentance and conversion will sweep them all away, and the love of Christ will expel them utterly.

These outposts of sin and error must not be overlooked, but they are only the outposts. The real citadel is in the heart—the carnal mind that is enmity against God. Even if we can persuade a man of error, or of the wrong of some special indulgence—of dancing, for example—we have accomplished little until he is deeply convicted of the deep-seated wickedness and corruption of his heart. If we would save a drunkard we should spend but little time to prove the sinfulness of the habit. We would rather go to the fountain of all vice—the unregenerate heart—and insist that this must be changed. He is not likely to be reformed until convinced of sin in its very center, in the core of his being, and until, under such conviction, he comes to Christ for deliverance.

That this positive method of uprooting error and sin is the most formidable of all is shown by the fear and hatred of the Bible on the part of the Romanists. It is a dangerous book, disintegrating and revolutionary, in a system of corruption. It opens the blind eyes, and frees from the slavery of a prelatical tyranny. It antagonizes the abominations of the confessional, the absurdities of Mariolatry and of baptismal regeneration. The free use of the Bible by the people endangers the system, and hence it is prohibited. A wicked man on his dying bed is reported to have said of the Bible: "The only objection to that book is a bad life." The light that has come into the world exposes sin. The gospel speaks for itself to the conscience. Keep this light steadily shining, and it will do the work of conviction and of reformation.

We sometimes grow impatient, and wonder if there is not some better way. We put on our polemical armor, cram ourselves with science, and determine to slaughter all opposers. But our headway is slow. The gospel in itself is the most aggressive of all things. The Master did not strive nor cry. The forces of the truth and of the Spirit were relied upon to operate steadily and quietly until judgment should be sent forth unto victory. Let us leaven the world with a positive gospel, and error will be uprooted. Preached in its spirituality and simplicity, it will overthrow paganism, the corruptions that have crept into Christianity, and the vices and crimes of the world.

Some men may be called to write apologies for the Bible, to meet scientific atheism and infidelity upon their own ground, and to expend their time and strength in direct attack upon certain aspects of error, but for the rank and file of Christian preachers and workers there is a more excellent way. Preach the word, proclaim the doctrines of salvation, rely upon the Holy Spirit, and let the Bible take care of itself. The great need in our conflict with error and vice is not intellectual strength nor learning, but spiritual force. Fully endued with power from on high, God's servants will be mighty in the Scriptures, and thoroughly furnished unto every good work.

What That Little Book Did.

The reading of some books tends to evil, and only evil, while the reading of others tends only to good; and such are our denominational books, especially those on doctrinal, experimental and practical Christianity. Our preachers cannot avail themselves of a more effective auxiliary in diffusing a knowledge of salvation than the circulation of a sound religious literature. A knowledge of this fact has made it the duty of every pastor in our church "to see that all the people within the bounds of his charge be duly supplied with our books and periodicals;" and, I believe, every preacher who neglects this duty greatly curtails his usefulness as a minister of Christ. For their encouragement in this good work I will state a fact that occurred in the early days of my ministry. When I was appointed to Ouachita circuit, in December, 1825, I was a timid youth, and went to that far-off field with fear and trembling. I had heard so much about the irreligion of Monroe, and the fact that no one had ever joined the church in that town, that it was a heavy trial for me to introduce myself and go to work among them as a Methodist preacher. I, however, consulted nothing but duty, and soon made the acquaintance of every leading citizen in the place, and was very cordially received and hospitably entertained among them. With other places, I met a welcome at Gen. McFarland's. He had lately come from Cincinnati, where he had buried a good Methodist wife, to mend his fortune in a new country. His family consisted of himself, a daughter and son, neither of whom were religious, but moral, and disposed to patronize the public worship of God. Miss Eliza McFarland was finely educated and polished, and was a most lovely young lady; but her educational advantages were so superior to mine that I was foolishly afraid to approach her on the subject of her personal salvation, though I felt a great desire to see her a Christian. I determined to avail myself of the next most plausible plan, which was to put in her hands a book that might be the means of her awakening. I selected a little pulpit-bound book, worth, perhaps, twenty cents, and called in our catalogue, "The Life and Death of Two Young Ladies Contrasted," and, with a silent prayer that it might be made a blessing, presented it to her. She received it apparently with pleasure, and promised to read it. It proved the means of her thorough awakening. She loaned it to her near neighbor, Mrs. Trent—the wife of the gentleman who gave name to the town of Trenton—and it awakened her. It was then put in the hands of Mrs. Allen, the wife of one of the principal merchants, who read it with a like effect. The three ladies met and covenanted to unite in seeking salvation from sin, lest they should die the hopeless death of the gay young lady mentioned in the book. They agreed to ask me the next time I came to open the door publicly and let them join the church, that their position might be properly defined. The request was made, and the congregation saw what had never been seen in Monroe before, three lovely ladies pledge all their after-life to the service of God. Several others were added afterward. Mrs. Trent and Mrs. Allen were faithful unto death. Gen. McFarland removed to San Augustine, Texas, and Rev. H. S. Thrall tells us, in his History of Methodism in Texas, that Miss Eliza McFarland, in 1834, was the first person to offer herself to commence the organization of a church in that county. She afterward married Dr. Lawhon, a local preacher. All this from putting a twenty-cent book in the right place! Try it, brother, and it will add stars to your crown of rejoicing.

Education.

BY REV. J. LEWIS, JR., D. D.

FOURTH PAPER.

We have endeavored to show that the spiritual interests of a young man will be safer at a school or college under the management of the church than at one under the management of the State. It is not pretended that all the students of our church schools become Christians. This, unfortunately, is not the case. Still the strong influence exerted for their conversion does in most cases preserve them from those vices to which youth is most liable. The large majority of them do become virtuous, useful, honorable citizens. At the best we cannot but feel that, so far as they are concerned, we have failed as to the highest end of education. But what must be the difference between two systems, the one of which proudly points to such men as its trophies, and the other sadly acknowledges them as its defects!

But we maintain that education by the church is more successful than education by the State, in the development, discipline and culture of the minds of its pupils. This is demonstrable. First, because the Christian religion renders its subject more faithful in the discharge of every personal and relative duty. The gospel law is: "Whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as unto the Lord, and not as unto men." A Christian ruler, a Christian mechanic, a Christian student, will do his work better than if he were not a Christian. He has higher motives for fidelity. His work is now part of his religion. We have known young men of great genius and of strong ambition fail at college, but we have never known a pious student who did not maintain a respectable position in his classes. Again, Christianity enlarges the minds of its subjects. The mind which is exercised upon great themes will outgrow the mind which is engaged with smaller themes. And it cannot be questioned that the subjects which Christianity presses upon the attention of its disciples are the sublimest that can engage our thoughts. Nay, more, Christianity gives new life to the mind. To every true convert the saving grace of Jesus Christ brings genuine inspiration. We might prove this by innumerable illustrations. A few must suffice. John Bunyan was, before conversion, "the profanest of all tinkers." Religion transformed him into the greatest allegorist that ever lived. Lord Macaulay says: "During the latter half of the seventeenth century there were (in England) only two great creative minds. One of these minds produced the Paradise Lost, the other the Pilgrim's Progress." John Wesley was an Oxford pedant, and George Whitefield a dishonest tavern-waiter. But after their conversion they became the apostles of the new era, under whose life-giving ministry the dry bones of the British valley arose and stood up "an exceeding great army." We might multiply examples by the thousand, but we forbear. If our readers will compare those nations which have embraced Christianity with those which have not, they can easily test for themselves the soundness of our position.

—The annual address of the Book Agent, and report of the Book Committee, will be found in full on our third page. The whole church is deeply interested in the Publishing House, and we therefore displace other matter in order that we may place this document in the hands of our readers. It will be seen that of the $300,000 of four per cent. bonds $273,130 have been subscribed for. In order to secure these subscriptions, and to make up the amount, $26,561 remain to be sold. We suppose bonds to cover this amount will be sold shortly. The original agreement with the creditors limited the time to the first of July, of this year, but we suppose the time has been extended. But ten lines in the report are devoted to the New Orleans Depository, as follows:

As to the New Orleans Depository, we have not been able to state the exact condition of that Depository, but can state that, before this Committee was appointed, all the property belonging thereto had been seized under execution, and was shortly thereafter sold, yielding some $8,000, and leaving an alleged balance of indebtedness of more than $30,000.

The Depository has been sold out and closed for more than a year. Its affairs have been in the hands of the present Agent and Book Committee since the first of June, 1878, or shortly thereafter. It would seem that the exact condition ought to have been ascertained by this time. Whether this alleged balance of indebtedness of $30,000 is embraced in the general estimate of the indebtedness of the Publishing House is not stated.

—There has been no small stir lately in the parish of West Baton Rouge, La., among the Roman Catholics of that section. A young priest by the name of Vaudray withdrew from the priesthood some time ago, and subsequently married. In attempting to lecture in the neighborhood on the subject of the confessional, he was interrupted by a crowd of men, and he was compelled to suspend his lecture. These disturbers were subsequently arrested, brought before the United States Marshal, and bound over to appear before the United States Court in November. We accidentally met Mr. Vaudray a few days ago on a steamboat, and were informed by him that his life had been threatened in case he persisted in his attacks upon the Roman Church and priesthood. He appeared to us to be a gentleman of refinement and intelligence, and very sincere and firm in his renunciation of Roman Catholicism. He informed us that he had published a challenge to any priest in the diocese to meet him in debate on the subject of the confessional, but that it had not been accepted. Free speech and religious liberty are greatly in the way of papal errors and corruptions, but they will be insisted on and preserved by the American people. A thorough airing of the confessional would doubtless lead to revelations that would open the eyes of many Catholics, as well as Protestants, to the many evil tendencies of that institution. It is a thing not desired by the body of the Catholic priesthood, and we have no idea that Mr. Vaudray's proposition for a public discussion will be accepted. The question most vital, however, is: Has a man a right to lecture on subjects distasteful to Roman Catholics, and to discuss religious questions? We know how the hierarchy would meet this question if they had the power. How will it be met by public opinion and the courts?

—The recent San Francisco sensation seems to be dying out. Rev. Isaac S. Kalloch, a Baptist preacher, was shot by Mr. D. Young, editor of the San Francisco Chronicle. Kalloch, a most pronounced political preacher, and the Kearney candidate for Mayor of San Francisco, had been denounced, and his early scandalous record shown up by the Chronicle. Kalloch rejoined by branding the DeYoung's, editors of the Chronicle, as disreputable in birth, family and character. The cowardly attempt to assassinate Kalloch was an act that all fair-minded people will condemn. Beyond this, there is not much to be said. Neither Kalloch nor DeYoung are entitled to the respect of decent men.

—A storm of considerable violence swept over New Orleans on Monday, September 1. Trees were uprooted, fences prostrated, and a few buildings unroofed. Not much serious damage, however, was done here. The storm center seemed to be about Morgan City, La., where, as will be seen in our news column, much injury was done. The Gulf coast east of us suffered but little. It is apprehended that the sugar cane in southern Louisiana has been seriously injured. If there were any fever germs in these parts it is thought that this cyclone, moving at the rate of forty miles an hour, has probably cleared them out. It may prove to have been a merciful and most beneficent blow.

—It seems from a statement recently made by Mr. Clement L. Walker that the estate which Mrs. Dorsey willed to Jefferson Davis has been generally overvalued. From Mr. Walker's article, addressed to the New York Sun, we quote as follows:

The deceased having no children nor parent, had no forced heir, and none of her collateral kindred should presume to pick upon himself as having any right whatever, unless the state were interested or implicated; and had she not made this disposition of it, she would have bequeathed it elsewhere than to her nearest of kin.

The deceased had her own reasons, and to those who are informed and disinterested, those reasons are simply sufficient for acknowledging no obligation on her part to them.

The estate had been a large one, but like all other property of its character in this section, had greatly diminished, until there was left a mere remnant of a once valuable property. From a recent investigation made by myself, I can state that its value will not reach thirty thousand dollars; indeed, it is assessed for less, and encumbered by claims and miscellaneous matters of indebtedness to such an extent that it would require the overdue for two years to clear it.

The will was made a long while, a year and a half, previous to her death, and is in contestible absolutely—entirely perfect as a legal document; and as to her capacity at the date of its making, before and since, there has never been any question. Her intelligence and abilities, which she maintained up to the last hour of her life, were such as to bring around her in close association a large circle of friends, comprising the most accomplished of her sex and many eminent litterateurs, and the ablest and most prominent of men in political and social life in this section.

In order to injure Mr. Davis, the legacy, unjust and horribly malicious and infamous influences have been created and published to the country, based upon the statements of disappointed and angry relatives.

These stories are based on two assertions; the one in regard to the value of the property, stating it to be a quarter of a million dollars; and the other alleging Mr. Davis to have been a pensionary of Mrs. Dorsey during her lifetime.

Both of these statements I know to be lies absolutely. I so state from my own knowledge. The infernal accusations and conclusions of some papers, casting discredit upon the deceased lady and Mr. Davis, are equally false.

Mrs. Davis would not and did not live at Beauvoir, accepting a home gratuitously, but contributed of the products of the grounds and lived at her own expense, paying rent; and most of the time at which friends, who have resided there, state, belong before Mrs. Dorsey's removal to New Orleans.

He had purchased a place before Mrs. Dorsey's removal; part of the proceeds of that sale I know to have been used and expended by her.

The friendship existing between Mrs. Dorsey and the family of Mr. Davis, and her affection for the younger children, were sufficient to prompt the conduct, which would not have existed except for those who were in any of the associations besides this. Were these facts that Mr. Davis was over seventy years of age, and is the representative of a cause for which only a few years ago he led the best people of this country had given the best of their lives, all, many their lives and fortunes, all, many their lives and fortunes, and that Mrs. Davis had devoted a part of the wreck of his means to that cause; and that at one time she had even sold, or pawned, the jewelry of position, pretty nearly, to supply the deficiency of the accumulation of money and debarred herself from the purchase of any article for wear one, if for use at his age, was admitted.

Our Schools.

As the time of the opening of the fall terms is near at hand, we call attention to the institutions whose cards are found in our advertising columns.

—Southern University, Greensboro, Ala., opens on the first Wednesday in October. Rev. J. Lewis, Jr., D. D., president. It is the property and under the control of the Alabama Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Dr. Lewis has large experience as an educator. He will be assisted by able professors. Location is healthful; expense moderate; social and religious influences good.

—Centenary College, Jackson, La., Rev. C. G. Andrews, D. D., president, opens on the first Monday in October. This institution is under the joint control of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences. Knowing the members of the faculty well, we can commend them most heartily. Dr. Andrews is too well known throughout Mississippi and Louisiana to need any endorsement from us. The location is healthy; the teaching thorough; the deportment has been exceptionally good. Cost at the very minimum.

—Alabama Female College, Tuskegee, Ala., Rev. John Massey, LL. D., president, opens September 22. This school belongs to the Alabama Conference, and is in the front rank of female colleges. It has an able and enterprising president, and a full and capable corps of teachers. It is a good and safe school for young ladies, and is entitled to the support and patronage of our people.

—East Mississippi Female College, Meridian, Miss., under the auspices and patronage of the Mississippi Conference, Rev. J. W. Arkinson, president, opens September 8. This institution, though comparatively young, is among the foremost. It is well and wisely administered; the location is salubrious and accessible.

—Collegiate Institute, Baton Rouge, La., Prof. W. H. N. Magruder, principal, opens September 24. This is a family boarding school for boys. Instruction is thorough in all that is necessary to prepare the student for any grade in college, or for any pursuit in life. Prof. Magruder is the Nestor of our Southern educators, and parents who place their sons in his charge need feel no anxiety about them. Their health, morals and mental culture will be most wisely and carefully looked after.

—Whitworth Female College, Brookhaven, Miss., Harvey E. Johnson, D. D., president, opens October 1. This flourishing school is a monument to the capacity and enterprise of President Johnson. In all its appointments it is complete. Its halls are always full, and Whitworth deserves the high appreciation and liberal patronage which it receives. It is the property of the Mississippi Conference. The location is one of the healthiest in the South, and one of the most accessible.

—Centenary Female College, of Alabama Conference, Summerfield, Ala., opens its fortieth session October 1. This old institution, for the ninth year, is under the presidency of Rev. A. D. McVoy, an accomplished educator and divine. The college has large, imposing buildings and extensive grounds, and is beautiful for situation. Summerfield is noted for its refined society, and for its general healthfulness. President McVoy will be assisted by a full faculty of experienced teachers.

—Mansfield Female College, Mansfield, La., Rev. Thomas Armstrong, president, opens September 24. This college belongs to the Louisiana Conference, and offers all desirable advantages for the education of young ladies. It has excellent accommodations, a good faculty, healthy location, and is in the midst of an intelligent Christian community.

—Woodville Female Seminary, Woodville, Miss., A. J. Wright, principal. Judge Edward McGehee is president of the Board of Trustees, and the seminary is under the supervision of the Mississippi Conference. Prof. Wright is a born teacher, and, we believe, he is assisted by his accomplished wife. We are not advised of the time of the opening.

Of the schools outside of our patronizing Conference, we call attention to the following:

—Martha Washington Female College, Abingdon, Va., an old and deservedly popular institution, Rev. E. E. Hoss, M. A., president. Located in one of the finest sections of Virginia.

—Wesleyan Female College, Macon, Ga., Rev. W. C. Bass, D. D., president, opens September 17. This institution belongs to the Georgia Conferences, and is among the best.

—Wesleyan Female Institute, Staunton, Va., opens September 18, Rev. W. A. Harris, D. D., president. The location is famous for its bracing air and unrivaled salubrity. It is a flourishing school, a large faculty, and highly endorsed.

—Augusta Female College, Staunton, Va., Miss Mary J. Baldwin, principal, opens September 3.

—Millersburg Female College, Millersburg, Ky., George T. Gould, D. D., president. Well located, and very complete in its faculty and accommodations.

—Hiwassee College, East Tennessee, Rev. J. H. Brunner, D. D., president. The male department is located seven miles from Sweet Water, East Tennessee; the female department is located in Sweet Water. A delightful country, low charges, and excellent school.

—Andrew Female College, Cuthbert, Ga., Rev. A. L. Hamilton, D. D., president, opens September 18. An old and well known institution. Its standing is deservedly high, and the location is easily accessible by rail.

—Vanderbilt University opened September 1 with the following departments: Literary and Scientific, with eleven professors; Biblical, with four professors; Medical, with twelve professors and six instructors; Law, with three professors; Pharmacy, with four professors; Dentistry, with eight professors.

—The Medical Department of the University of Louisiana, New Orleans, opens in November. T. G. Richardson, M. D., dean. The Academical Department, Prof. Jesse, dean, will open, we believe, in October.

—Soule's Commercial and Literary College, New Orleans, is open the year round.

—The Loquet-LeRoy Institute, 280 Camp street, New Orleans, has reopened. C. W. Moise, principal.

The above comprise, we believe, all the schools advertising in the ADVOCATE. It is time that parents were preparing to send their children to some good institution. There are doubtless other good schools in the South, but we have no information concerning them. Other things being at all equal, we should give preference to our own schools, and to those under the auspices of the church.

The following from the Western Methodist, August 23, brings the unwelcome tidings that Dr. Wilson is still in poor health. We second the exhortation to be prompt in collecting and remitting missionary money. The Western says:

The Rev. A. W. Wilson, D. D., our Missionary Secretary, we regret to say, continues in feeble health. After a short stay in this city last week, he left for Abingdon, Va., where his family are sojourning. We hope the Doctor's health will be greatly improved by his visit to Abingdon, and that he will be able to do much and good work—as he did last year—during the sessions of the Annual Conferences. We are requested to impress upon the preachers, and upon all our readers, the importance of liberal and prompt action in behalf of Foreign Missions. The treasury is now in sore need of funds—let remittances be made without delay to the Treasurer of the Board, J. W. Munier, Nashville, Tenn.

HEALTH OF THE CITY.—During the week ending Sunday, August 31, there were three deaths from yellow fever in New Orleans. The first case reported this year was July 22. Since that date to the present, Tuesday, September 2, there have been altogether twenty cases and seven deaths. At this time, so far as we can learn, there are only two cases in the city. The Sanitarians and the Board of Health are diligent in searching out and reporting every case, and their statements may be relied upon. Dr. Bemiss, member of the National Board of Health, is also here, giving personal attention to the matter, and certifies to the correctness of the statements. We can assure our readers that there is no concealment, by our health authorities, of the real condition. The few cases that have appeared extend through a period of six weeks. During this time there have been intervals of more than a week in which there was no yellow fever here. All the cases have been in one locality, in the Fourth District, and two miles from the business center—Canal street. Within the past few weeks every house in the city has been inspected and disinfected by the Sanitary Association, and they are now going over the ground again. The infected locality is also being subjected to a most thorough and expensive process of disinfection. Our city was never so clean as at present, the general health never better. The last week's mortality will compare favorably with any large city in the United States. This is the present state of affairs. It is not unlikely that other cases of yellow fever will occur during the next few weeks, but we do not think the disease will become general. We can, however, only conjecture as to the future. There is certainly nothing alarming in the situation at present.

Send in the Subscriptions.

The quarantines this year do not interfere with the mails. The way is clear for remittances to the ADVOCATE, and for the new subscribers. It is always a time of straitness about this season with the business department. Every dollar now counts for its full value. Our "Field Notes" bring tidings of an extraordinary number of conversions every week. Are the new members introduced to the ADVOCATE, and urged to furnish themselves with a church paper? Are the revived and reclaimed church members supplied with the ADVOCATE? Family prayer, class meeting, and a weekly religious paper, are the three principle things needed to keep them revived, and to make them stable, growing and intelligent Christians. Judging from the number of conversions reported, we ought to be receiving a hundred new subscribers a day. But this sign does not follow to this extent. The day of a man's conversion or reception into the church should be also signalized as the day in which he becomes a subscriber to the ADVOCATE. Where this is the case there will be increased hope of his holding out and becoming a useful member. Our revivals and camp meetings ought to be more fruitful in new subscribers. Will our brethren in the ministry make a note of this, and see what they can do? Our only desire is that the ADVOCATE may do all the good that is possible. This is the only reason we urge its support, and ask for it a wider circulation.

Dr. Thomas B. Sargent.

The Baltimore Episcopal Methodist says:

In the roll of clerical members of the Baltimore Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, his name stands at the head, and his ministry antedates all the rest. Several years ago he was placed on the retired list, and though since then his health has been feeble, and has confined him for the most part to the house; yet occasionally it would so far improve as to admit of his exercising himself in public and making distant excursions to visit his friends or attend some church gatherings. It was during one of these intervals of improvement he visited Canada, and represented our body as Fraternal Messenger at the General Conference of the Canadian Methodist Church. But a few Sabbaths ago he preached at Trinity Church in this city, and the day before his death rode out to Druid Hill Park. On Wednesday night, the thirteenth instant, he retired in cheerful spirits and his usual health. About two o'clock Thursday morning a sudden and heavy fall was heard in his room, and some members of the family repairing to it found him lying prostrate and insensible upon the floor. He had been stricken with apoplexy, from which he died the evening of the same day. The funeral services were held at Trinity Church on Saturday afternoon, at five o'clock. A large concourse was in attendance, including a number of ministers of different denominations. Among the honorary pall-bearers on the occasion, besides Revs. S. Kepler, J. E. Armstrong, P. H. Wilsner, W. H. D. Harper and S. K. Cox, of our own church, were Revs. L. F. Morgan and W. B. Edwards, of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. Dr. Poisal, the life long friend and co-laborer of Dr. Sargent, assisted by Rev. Dr. Plummer, of the Presbyterian Church; Rev. L. F. Morgan, D. D., of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Rev. J. E. Armstrong and Rev. S. K. Cox of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The memorial address by Dr. Poisal was of a most appropriate and impressive character, reviewing the life and ministry of our departed brother, and recalling many interesting reminiscences connected with his history.

Dr. Sargent was the contemporary of Summerfield, and entered the ministry under his auspices. In many respects he resembled that eminent and eloquent preacher. He was characterized by the same captivating sweetness of expression, and gentleness of manner. His preaching while thoroughly evangelical and practical, was not unaccompanied with the graces of oratory. In his earlier ministry crowds thronged to hear him, and he was recognized on both sides of the Atlantic as a man of eminent pulpit ability. He was a preacher of the strictly Wesleyan type—adhering with the utmost exactitude to the Arminian system of theology as interpreted by Wesley and Watson. No man among us was better acquainted with the history and hymnology of Methodism. His memory was stored with those sacred and metrical compositions that did much to give to Methodism its primitive power, singing the gospel into many hearts that the voice of the living preacher did not reach. The hymns of Charles Wesley were his special favorites. These were always at his command, and he quoted them at times with great appositeness and effect. Another one of the fathers of the church has passed away! Another link is broken that connects us with the historic past! May the mantels of these ascending Elijahs fall upon those who shall take their places in the Church of God, and the fragrant memory of their devoted lives prove an inspiration to like fidelity and zeal in those that come after them.

Rev. J. D. Stewart a local Methodist preacher, writing to the Western Methodist from Memphis, August 15, says:

The patient resignation with which the poorer classes meet their fate is truly sublime. Unable to leave the city, they remain quietly at home and calmly watch the approach of the destroyer. When he enters a family and takes a member, there is nothing in words, looks, or movements of those about the house that betrays unnecessary alarm or anxiety. They meet death with the utmost composure. Often in these families is to be seen the triumph of the highest Christian faith. The deaths among the poorer classes are, as a rule, calm, awakening the tenderest sympathies in those who are utter strangers. A Mrs. Graham died of black vomit on Jackson street, Fort Pickering, on Wednesday morning. Just before her death she asked the nurse to sing one song for her. She gave out the lines Lef self, beginning,

That awful day will surely come,
The appointed hour makes no delay.

A little later she said: "I must go tell my children to be good, and do the best they can." She leaves six children, the youngest two years old. Her husband is in St. Louis, where he has been for some time. She died without seeing her husband, children or any well known face. It is distressing in the highest degree to witness such scenes, but there is a wonderful strength in them for the Christian who looks on, and sees the work of the destroyer and the calm faith of the victim.

Bro. Stewart, since writing the letter of which the above is an extract, died of the yellow fever. We believe he was the only representative of the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Memphis, during the present epidemic.

Gen. John B. Hood, one of the most distinguished of the Confederate generals, died at his residence in this city August 30. Since the war he has been engaged in business in New Orleans. The following outline of his life we quote from the New Orleans Times:

John B. Hood was born in Bath county, Ky., in 1831, entered the Military Academy at West Point, graduating in 1853 and for the six years following did regular service in Texas. In July, 1857 he was severely wounded in an engagement with the Comanches and Lipans. At the breaking out of the late civil war Gen. Hood was on leave of absence. He resigned his commission April 16, 1861, and at once entered the Confederate army, where he soon rose to the rank of Major General. His career from this time forth was most stirring and dramatic. He took part in the Chickahominy campaign, the second Manassas, Antietam and Fredericksburg. Subsequently, at Gettysburg, he was terribly wounded, and later at Chickamauga, had his leg shattered so as to necessitate amputation. Gen. Hood succeeded Joe. Johnston in command of the Tennessee army, operating against Sherman, commanded and led the three bloody assaults on Sherman before Atlanta, then marched northward and fought the terrible battle at Franklin, Tenn., closing the campaign with the memorable engagement with Gen. Thomas near Nashville. In all this succession of great and sanguinary battles Gen. Hood figured as a fighter par excellence.

General Hood was an exemplary member of the Protestant Episcopal Church. He died the death of the righteous and his end was peace.
